I had my first OB appointment today. Sitting in the waiting room I saw couples. Husbands or boyfriends with their partners sharing in the experience of life. I sat by myself in a corner of the waiting room trying to forget the reaction I received when I told my partner. When I told him, the only two things that came from his mouth were, "How do you know it's mine," and "Are you going to have an abortion." My mom summed it up when she called him an asshole. I don't want to be alone, I guess I am scared to be alone. Where is that fairytale ending where I am swept off my feet, I settle down with my handsome partner and then we have children and live happily ever after?

ENTRY

I talked to the father again. I asked him for medical information and it was never returned to me. I called him up again and he was pretty nice. I felt really good after talking to him and I even thought there might be a chance for us. I guess right now I am easily taken in. Well, I guess my child will have no father. That is so sad. What do you tell a child when he asks about his father? "Oh, I'm sorry dear, you don't have a father that recognizes you as a human being. You're nothing to him."

ENTRY

It's weird sometimes because when I sit in my classes hearing the words float around, not really listening, I feel like I am the only one hurting in the world. It keeps me going knowing that there are millions of people with much worse problems who make it.

ENTRY

I hate being alone.

ENTRY

I heard it, I actually heard the hearbeat of the life inside of me. Talk about putting everything into perspective. Never in my life has anything depended on me so completely. My child's whole existence depends on my existence. When I heard that hearbeat; so strong, so fast, I just cried. Everything seems so real. I definitely didn't plan this but I'm already in love with my child. This might turn out to be the best mistake that has ever happened to me. It all is such a mystery I never thought about before. People have babies all the time but when I start to think how little control I have over the changes, it makes it more of a mystery.

ENTRY

The father is really surprising me. He's agreed to help, but I'll have to see how far his words travel. He told me if I ever needed to talk, to call him. Well, I did one night because I was feeling very depressed. He said he'd be right over. He came but looked at his watch every couple minutes and then proceeded to tell me that he was supposed to go out and he hoped, "You appreciate me taking time to sit with you." Screw him, who is he to say his time is more precious than mine.

ENTRY

I try to make him understand what I'm feeling. I think he is torn. He wants to feel good about the situation but just can't. I told him the first time he held his son or daughter he would understand everything. He would see how I made the only decision I could live with. He would look at our child and everything would be put into perspective. I just want him to love our child and I want our child to have a strong association with him. There probably is no hope for us. Things are too backwards. Children come after the white wedding and honeymoon and two cars to him. In his own way, he is a very wonderful person.

ENTRY

I think my sister will be in the delivery room with me. My mom said that if she would be there I probably would just scream louder. Everytime I hurt I have a tendency to overexaggerate my pain if mom is around. Things are finally looking up. I have accepted the situation. My salvation has been my family. The last people I thought would help me are the only ones who are. I love them so much. My mom and dad are going through so much and part of their very protected private life will soon become public. I wish I could find a way not to hurt them. But people will talk. And the ones who choose to gossip are the ones who have just as many skeletons in their closet but they were neatly covered up.

ENTRY

Pregnancy doesn't only affect the woman. Everyone feels the pain of an unwanted pregnancy. My pregnancy will always be thought of as an unwanted one — but a human being can never be unwanted. Now that the reality has set in, I want this pregnancy to work. Just because it wasn't planned doesn't mean it's not wanted now.

ENTRY

I can't talk. I can hardly write. I just felt my baby move. There are no words. I wish I could capture this moment because I will never forget it. I can't even finish this entry, I've just been swept off my feet...

Marketing team prepares for national contest

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

The K-State National Agri-Marketing Association team will be traveling to Reno, Nev., Friday to "Stamp Out Gambling" as part of the NAMA's national convention held April 18-20.

The conference's theme reflects its goal of providing information and ideas on reducing risks in marketing and, as a result, "gambling" in market strategies.

The conference is a competition among student chapters in a marketing presentation of an ag-related product. Each team must present a marketing plan of a product of their choice.

K-State will present a marketing plan for a hypothetical soybean herbicide that controls the sickel-pod, a weed predominantly found in the southeast United States. The product, currently in the development stage, is a combination of traditional herbicides. It came to the club's attention through a contact with industry personnel researching a fungus that can be used to control this weed.

The club must develop a marketing plan for the product, including development of market objectives and strategies, communication objectives and strategies, financial evaluation and total plan evaluation.

The presentation is a verbal description with slides and testimonials from producers in the market area. It will be given to three judges who represent the media, marketing and public relations fields.

K-State's team will use eight speakers, more than any other team in the competition. John Riley, team adviser and assistant director of agriculture resident instruction, noted this will be difficult for the team in that all transitions between speakers must be smooth and not distract the judges nor detract from the presentation. He added most teams only use three to five speakers.

The team consists of 10 members, eight speakers and two audio/visual aid operators. Team speaker members are: Patrick Muir and Wally Brockhoff, seniors in agriculture economics; Mike Huerter, junior in agriculture economics; Marshall Bird and Scott Benfer, sophomores in agriculture economics; Anne Krauss, sophomore in agriculture education; Shannan Seely, freshman in animal sciences and industry and Lori Mikesell, freshman in agriculture journalism. Team members responsible for visual aids are Michelle Benoit, senior in agriculture economics and Mike Kadel, senior in bakery science and management.

According to Muir, the hardest part of constructing the plan was to find a new enough product.

"We need a product that has stiff enough competition to justify an unique marketing plan," Muir said. The team considered various alternatives, such as catfish farming and swine feed, before deciding on soybean herbicide.

"We spent a month narrowing down the possibilities," Riley said.

The construction of the plan began in December with product selection and preparations. Practices were held twice weekly since December and daily for the last two weeks.

According to Riley, K-State is traditionally considered to be one of the top teams. K-State won the competition in 1983 and finished second in 1986. He said this year's team's strong point is the thoroughness of its plan. He added if the team wins its heat, they have a good chance at winning the competition. Competition is divided into heats consisting of five to six teams. The winner will present a plan to all conference participants.

Riley said competition between teams is tense. "We have as good a chance as anyone. If we can make finals, we have a good chance of winning it all," he said.

The conference also includes national meetings and a career exhibition fair of agriculture businesses. Riley said the conference is a good opportunity to students to combine product research and communication skills.

Approximately 1,400 NAMA members are expected to participate, nearly 200 of which will be students representing 27 student chapters from across the country.

One half of the team's trip is being funded by the team members themselves. The other half of expenses is covered by the K-State NAMA chapter, the Kansas City, Mo., professional NAMA chapter and the Ag Competition Fund.

Hospital to renovate
Memorial to update facilities

By Patrice Macan
Collegian Reporter

Memorial Hospital of Manhattan is scheduled to begin a construction project to update the facility and expand its services, said the hospital's chief executive officer.

Everything in the hospital will either be "new, remodeled or renovated" after the construction, said E. Michael Nunamaker.

The construction will begin in June and should be completed in the summer of 1990 at an estimated cost of $2.8 to $3 million, he said.

The three main areas to be changed are surgery, the intensive care unit and emergency, he said.

Because of the advancements in laser surgery, more space and updated equipment is necessary to keep up with the latest developments in technology, Nunamaker said.

After the construction is finished, there will be four surgical rooms, three of which will be the standard size of 484 square feet. The fourth room will be 576 square feet to allow the hospital to be prepared for future changes in technology and equipment.

The intensive care unit will be highly modified with more equipment to handle the increase in the aging population, and the emergency room will be completely rebuilt to be more efficient, Nunamaker said.

The hospital has three options of payment for the construction. It may use bond money, use its capital replacement fund — money the hospital has saved for capital improvements, or the hospital may launch a fund drive, he said.

Cost of construction will not exceed $3 million, Nunamaker said.

The cost would not exceed that amount "because if we do then we will have to ... start drastically increasing charges," he added.

The construction will be in phases so that when one area is completed then work on another area will begin.

One of the concerns the administrators of the hospital have is how the noise, dirt and dust of construction will effect the patients.

Senate to hear allocation appeals

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate's tentative allocations for Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights have been appealed and will be debated in Senate tonight.

Bernie Giefer, graduate school senator, submitted the appeal.

"Groups with a philosophical or ideological purpose shouldn't be funded by the state," Giefer said. "The problem is not that they are political, it's that they espouse a particular ideology."

Giefer said of the 60 students with whom he spoke, none supported funding the groups and five were unsure.

Debbie Paap, group coordinator of K-State's Amnesty International chapter, said the assumption that Amnesty International is a political group is a misconception.

"Amnesty International is internationally known as an apolitical, impartial organization that works for human rights," Paap said.

Amnesty International supercedes government or religion to promote civil rights, especially the freedom of speech, Paap said.

"There has also been a question of why K-State should fund the groups," Paap said. "The main reason is that there has been an increase in the interest on campus."

Regents receive tour of facilities

By The Collegian Staff

In a presentation to members of the Kansas Board of Regents and their spouses, K-State President Jon Wefald described some of the most outstanding aspects of the University.

His speech focused on the "quality of students" and included facts about the number of Rhodes, Truman and Fulbright scholars. Wefald also drew attention to a study reported in Changing Times magazine which rated K-State as one of eight public universities in the nation that offers a better-than-average education at a less-than-average price.

A tour of Durland Hall's Center of Excellence focused on a demonstration in the automated machines lab of automated assembly line equipment.

The objective of the lab is to find ways to produce products faster, cheaper and more efficiently, said Bradley Kramer, associate professor of industrial engineering.

The "overall dream" is to conduct research in the lab, apply the knowledge to existing problems, find solutions and improve manufacturing, he said.

At Ackert Hall, Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology, said the division is involved in research ranging from the grass growing on the Konza Praire to planning a space station with NASA.

Also in the division is the Center for Basic Cancer Research, where there are more than 80 faculty members involved in the study of how cancer cells grow and spread.

It is important that people in research get good training because they are the "legacy of the future," he said.

Johnson said that one in four Americans will contract some form of cancer and research is vital to "extend the quality and the quantity of life."

by increasing full-time undergraduate tuition to $578 for residents and $1,977 for non-residents in fall 1989. The regents have already decided to raise resident tuition to $550 and non-resident tuition to $1,765 for the fall 1988 semester. Current full-time resident tuition is $535.

Graduate tuition may be raised to $728 for residents and to $2,127 for non-residents beginning with fall 1989.

PREGNANCY: FINDING SUPPORT

Lafemme Clinic offers testing, services for students in need

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

It is one test most students hope to flunk.

At the LaFemme Clinic in Lafene Student Health Center, women are able to take tests to determine if they are pregnant. During January, 41 women had pregnancy tests at the clinic. From July to January, 214 had tests.

The number of students tested for pregnancy during July 1986 to June 1987 was 356. During the previous year, 382 females were tested.

Cathie Barry, LaFemme supervisor, stressed that the privacy of the individuals who take the tests is respected.

"We don't directly ask if they're married or not," she said. "We believe this is personal and private, and we try hard not to invade their privacy."

Barry said she believes most students will come to LaFemme for pregnancy tests instead of seeing local physicians. However, some students might go to other agencies or use home pregnancy tests.

The student does not have to make any explanation to the staff when she requests a pregnancy test, Barry said. The student must come in person to get the results of the test, and results come back in one or two days.

More requests for pregnancy tests are received after a semester break such as Christmas, she said.

Women stop using their birth control for many reasons. Sometimes students do not take their contraceptives home because they don't feel comfortable about it, or their prescription for birth control pills has lapsed, Barry said.

If the pregnancy test is positive, LaFemme gives the student a packet of information and makes referrals.

"We do like the individual to share with us what (her) plan will be simply because we can refer (her) to the right agencies," Barry said.

The students must make their choice on their own, she said.

If the student chooses to have the baby, the packet of information includes a list of local obstetricians, agencies that provide services, adoption agencies, and information on self-care during pregnancy. The staff also recommends a visit to the Lafene dietitian and a moderate exercise program.

If a student chooses to have an abortion, the center provides a packet of information that lists agencies which the Lafene staff has visited and approved, and information about self-care following the procedure.

Students must make contact with other agencies on their own, Barry said.

"If a student is having an emotional or difficult time making a decision, or difficulty after a decision, we'd refer (her) to our mental health department or to the Counseling Center," she said.

LaFemme makes sure an organization is non-judgmental before referring a student to it, Barry said.

"If there's some question as to what the young lady's preference would be, to keep the baby or have an abortion, we are careful to refer her," she said.

"She needs some time to think about the decision, and we refer her to a professional counselor so she can make a decision on her own," Barry said.

Sometimes the students come to LaFemme late in their pregnancy, which limits their options, she said.

Barry said she thinks most students will get help from a friend or family rather than going to an agency.

LaFemme also collects information on community resources for students.

Barry said she believes there needs to be more resources for the young woman who chooses to remain pregnant.

"The situation is unique for each individual and some may not have support systems available if she chooses to keep the baby," she said. "I don't like (to see students) in the situation where they can't keep the baby because of financial reasons."

The health center also provides information on services at the Riley County Health Department.

The maternal and infant program pays for visits to a physician during pregnancy. This service is provided for women with low incomes, and income levels are based on family size.

Many students use these programs because they do have low incomes, said Betty Frank, a registered nurse at the health department.

About 50 women use the program in a year; however, she said, funds for this year are running low.

Organizations provide support for individuals making choices

Pregnancy.

In certain situations, it can be a blessing.

But when it occurs out of wedlock, it may be just the opposite.

While many argue about the proper method of preventing problem, for those who are already pregnant, talk of prevention is too late.

"When they first find out, they're in a panic situation. They should sit back and evaluate the situation for the best alternative in the long run, not for what will ease the crisis of the moment," said Laura Owens, director of Birthright of Manhattan.

"(At Birthright) we are not trying to push (the mother) into a particular decision, but will help her explore the options open to her," Owens said.

The options available include abortion, adoption or retention of the child in question.

"A woman doesn't really choose abortion — she resorts to it. Girls usually have an abortion as the last resort," said Bernadette Sanders, regional consultant for Birthright of Kansas.

Birthright serves as a support center, which means it provides information and emotional support. It also provides free, confidential pregnancy testing. Although it does not force a specific decision on a woman, it does encourage her to have the baby.

"Given an alternative, many girls will opt against abortion," Sanders said.

"They know where to go to get an abortion. There are advertisements everywhere. But they often question, 'Where am I going to find an agency that will help me through my pregnancy?'" Sanders said.

One of the criticisms of abortion advertising is that it is the only medical service which is specifically and regularly advertised.

Facilities like specialty clinics and doctors' offices that offer abortions say they are justified in advertising their services.

"When they first find out, they're in a panic situation. They should sit back and evaluate the situation for the best alternative in the long run, not for what will ease the crisis of the moment."

—Laura Owens, Birthright of Manhattan

"I don't know of any operation that just advertises for abortion services. (Those services) are just usually mentioned for a second, and then we go on to other things," said a clinic manager of Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City.

"We offer family planning, male-patient services, and referral to adoption agencies and other counseling — lots of services besides abortion," she said.

"We are really advertising those services."

For those who choose to carry the baby to full term, there are several options that will help pay the expenses.

"Kansas allows a girl to get a medical card, and with that card the state takes care of pre-natal care, labor and delivery," Sanders said. "Oklahoma requires her to have the baby before any money is given."

Adoption is another option.

"Just about all agencies will pay. The Kansas Children Service League is the only one I know of that doesn't pay (for all of the costs involved,)" Owens said.

Sometimes couples who want children but who have been unable to adopt will place ads in student newspapers or write letters to support centers. The couples explain that they will pay all of the costs if the mother will let them adopt the baby after delivery.

"It is very common," Sanders said. "I get letters from couples wanting me to put them in contact with one of our girls, which I cannot and would not do.

"I think it borders on being black market. But someone could make a lot of money if they were to do it."

The Midwest seems to be the most popular part of the country for these couples to search. The couples say they think the people here are more wholesome, and would rather have a child from that background, said Linda Mae Schmidt, accountant and clerk in the Student Publications Inc. office, who takes classified ads for the Collegian.

"It is getting to the point where you want to get pregnant," Sanders said.

Wildcat first baseman David Chadd connects with the ball while taking batting practice Tuesday at Frank Myers Field. Chadd, a senior from Wichita, has become K-State's power hitter with a .412 average and leads the team with 56 hits and 13 doubles.

First baseman coming on strong for 'Cats

Fall absence benefits Chadd

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

At the beginning of the spring baseball season, many people wondered who would fill the gap as a power hitter for K-State. First baseman David Chadd has provided an answer.

The senior from Wichita boasts the Cats' leading batting average, hitting .412. He also leads the team in runs scored with 41, hits with 56 and doubles with 13.

Additionally, Chadd has swatted nine home runs, which puts him fifth on the all-time K-State single-season home run list behind teammate Jim Donohue.

"I feel pretty comfortable with my hitting right now," Chadd said. "That's the strong point in my game and I take pride in batting. It's kind of a one-on-one competition against you and the pitcher."

Last fall, Chadd left the team for personal reasons after playing only a few games. The decision to return to K-State, Chadd said, has been worthwhile.

"I started out here in the fall and played in a couple of games, then I went home to get married," Chadd said. "I was set on being s family man and I wasn't going to come back and play. Coach (Mike) Clark and Coach (Jeff) Stewart more or less convinced me (to come back), and my family wanted me to come back and finish my senior year of ball. I did and I'm grateful now because I think I would have missed out on a lot if I would've stayed home.

"When I decided to come back I just wanted to have a solid season and help the team any way I could. I felt a little pressure on myself because Coach Clark and Coach Stewart went out of their way to help me come back, and with the year I had last year, I wanted to try to live up to that," he said.

The pressure of having to keep pace with the team and at home has been eased by the supportiveness of his wife.

"My wife is pretty understanding about me playing baseball and wanting to reach some of my goals I set a long time ago. She still lives in Wichita and has a great job so that allows me to come back and play," Chadd said. "It's working out great."

After leaving the team, Chadd had been getting back in to the swing of things by switching between first base and designated hitter with junior Mike Rosenboom.

"I split time with Mike Rosenboom and (playing first base) is the weakness to my game," Chadd said. "I really need to work hard to be a complete player."

As one of the many "team" players for the 'Cats, Chadd looks to help out the team any way he can. One of those ways includes being a leader.

"I'm kind of a silent leader, a quiet leader," Chadd said. "I don't do as much talking, or preaching, and just go out on the field and show them what I can do. I like to lead by example and show some of the underclassmen what they can expect as far as hitting and fielding is in the Big Eight (Conference).

"I don't care too much for the individual goals, I just try to go out and do the best I can, as far as helping the team, and if the team is doing good than I'm happy."

Chadd is not just channeling his efforts toward helping the Wildcats to a strong finish in the Big Eight. He is also shooting for a chance to play in the major leagues.

"Like with anyone who has playing baseball as long as I have, you hope for the draft. If not the draft, to sign with somebody (as a free agent) and go on to play a little pro baseball," Chadd said. "That's something I've always wanted to do. With me being a senior, it's now or never."

Mossman hopes to sign four players or fewer

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Wednesday, the first day that high school and junior college basketball players could sign national letters of intent with an university, was a day that the K-State women's basketball coach, Matilda Mossman, spent in her office anxiously awaiting to hear unofficially if several athletes she has recruited signed letters to play at K-State next fall.

With nobody graduating this year, Mossman has five scholarships to offer, but plans on signing only four players or less. Mossman said with only one player, Stacey Boyle, graduating next year, she wants to save a scholarship and have two for next year.

"We want the best athletes we can get (whether they be junior college transfers or high school graduates)," Mossman said. "We're hoping to sign a point guard and build additional depth inside in the center and power forward positions. We are also wanting to add more quickness and speed."

K-State went into the 1987-88 season with a young squad consisting of four freshmen, one junior college transfer and six sophomores.

Going into the Big Eight Conference season, K-State had a 7-5 record and had lost four games by a combined total of 10 points. One of the season's highlights was a 73-61 victory over previously nationally-ranked Louisiana State on Dec. 30 in Ahearn Field House.

The Lady Cats went into the first round of the Big Eight Conference Tournament with only eight players. K-State lost for the first time in the opening round to Nebraska, 71-51.

The Lady Cats ended their 1987-88 campaign with an 8-20 record and a 1-13 record in Big Eight play.

Under current NCAA guidelines, a coach is not allowed to comment on possible recruits until the university has received the signed letter of intent from the player.

Some players believed to be recruited by Mossman and her staff are Arneetrice Cobb, a 5-foot-9 junior, guard-forward from Cowley County Junior College; and Leah Honeycutt, a 5-foot-9 forward from Parkway West High School in Chesterfield, Mo.

It is also believed that the Lady Cats are attempting to sign Shelia Cherry, a 6-foot forward-center from Cloud County Community College; and Mary Jo Miller, a high school player from Marshall, Minn.

Bill to pay players vetoed by governor

By The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Gov. Kay Orr vetoed Wednesday a measure which would have allowed University of Nebraska-Lincoln football players to be paid stipends.

The governor returned the bill without her signature to the Clerk of the Legislature. In an accompanying letter, she said she objected to LB1226 because "an expression to the National Collegiate Athletic Association through the enactment of a statute is inappropriate."

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Ernie Chambers of Omaha, would have provided payment of stipends to UNL football players upon the adoption by four Big Eight states of laws treating their football players as employees.

The bill was passed last Friday, the last day of the 1988 legislative session, on a 26-23 vote. It came on a vote to reconsider after falling one vote short the day before.

In past years, lawmakers rejected Chambers' idea, arguing that paying players would leave the players ineligible and the program disqualified under NCAA rules.

By stepping on previously protected NCAA turf, Chambers said he hoped to pressure the NCAA into "liberalizing its rules." The bill, he stressed, was not meant to cause the university or its football program a problem.

In her veto message, Orr said, "Now that the Legislature has registered its strong concern over the plight of student athletes and the inflexibility and complexity of the NCAA regulations, it is important that the university express itself cleary on this issue.

"The Board of Regents is the appropriate forum for dealing with the NCAA. Therefore, I strongly urge the Regents to address this issue and communicate their position to that body," she wrote.

Track meet today

From Wire Reports

Some of the state's best junior college talent will be in Manhattan today for the Ward Haylett Junior College Invitational.

The meet will be held at the R.V. Christian Track. Track events will start at 8:30 a.m., with the 5,000-meter run and the trials for the dash events to follow. Finals will start at 11:45 a.m. The field events will start at 9 a.m. with the javelin and long jump followed by the triple jump.

As usual, some potential NCAA Divison I talent will be featured at the meet. Last year, competitors established nine meet records. The athletes also combined for 34 national qualifying marks.

Four of those marks were established by Marti Cieper, now a member of the K-State track and field squad. Last year while competing for Johnson County Community College, she won the long jump, high jump, javelin and placed second in the triple jump to earn female MVP honors.

"There is some good competition at this meet," K-State coach John Capriotti said.

Don't panic — even though no one signed

Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

It would make good sense that K-State's finish in the final eight of the NCAA basketball tournament and construction of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum should have a positive impact on recruiting.

And with plenty of holes to fill for next season, Coach Lon Kruger and his staff are banking that both will. K-State loses a huge chunk of its scoring and rebounding with seniors Mitch Richmond, William Scott, Charles Bledsoe and Ron Meyer all gone. Finding replacements for those four obviously won't be easy.

K-State didn't sign anybody Wednesday, the first day of the period which lasts until May 15 when high school recruits can sign national letters of intent. But Kruger, with a later-than-usual start due to the NCAA tournament, didn't expect to, so Wildcat fans shouldn't panic.

If a month from now K-State hasn't signed anyone, then panic may be in order. But for now, hold on. As long as the 'Cats are able to land three players from among those they are actively recruiting, another trip to the NCAA tournament next year is a good possibility.

Most of the Wildcat prospects are from the junior-college ranks, a recruiting tactic that provides immediate, but short-term, help to a program. Granted, it's ideal to get a solid player out of high school. But a program can win big with juco-transfers.

Just look at Oklahoma and K-State, which finished one-two in the Big Eight, starting three juco players apiece and bringing more off the bench.

The one guaranteed assured starting spot for next year belongs to point guard Steve Henson. If Henson can bring his scoring average up to double-figures, it will be a great help. Center-forward Fred McCoy also returns. McCoy started a number of games near midseason, but his play was erratic at times. If McCoy, who has a fine shooting touch, can play under control, he'll start for sure and could average at least 15 points per game.

After Henson and McCoy, the question marks begin to arise. Mark Dobbins has improved markedly and was a quality reserve last year. As a starter, Dobbins' scoring would have to take a big jump. The capabilities of guard Buster Glover and forward Carlos Diggins are relatively unknown. But with Glover playing behind Scott and Diggins behind Richmond, that's understandable. Both Glover and Diggins scored in double figues in junior college and have the potential to do so for the 'Cats.

Forward Lance Simmons proved his value as a starter a year ago, but will have to prove himself all over again after missing last season with a knee injury. Simmons, who was redshirted this season, has two years of eligibility left.

Indeed, K-State does have a solid group returning. Plus, 6-foot-6 Reggie Britt from Coffeyville Community College and 6-foot-6 Jeff

KU, OU get only Big 8 signees

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas coach Larry Brown was elated Wednesday after the national champion Jayhawks signed Freeman West, a junior college player, on the first day of the spring signing period.

Elsewhere in the Big Eight, Oklahoma signed two high school stars. No other Big Eight schools reported signing players Wednesday. The spring signing period runs through May 15.

West, a 6-foot-5 forward from Paris Junior College in Texas, will be a versatile addition to the Jayhawks, Brown said.

"He's a great athlete and a phenomenal kid," Brown said. "He gives us flexibility because he can handle the ball, shoot from the outside and defend."

Brown said uncertainty about whether he would return to Kansas or coach at UCLA had "got in the way" of recruiting efforts. He announced last week that he would coach the Jayhawks next year.

"It's going to be all right," Brown said. "I think we're going to have a great year."

Last season, West averaged 19.1 points, 7.4 rebounds and three assists, hitting 55 percent of his field goal attempts. He had been wooed by K-State, Baylor and Texas Tech.

Brown said he snared the Indiana native because, "I didn't want to play against him."

West is a graduate of Washington High School in East Chicago, Ind.

Oklahoma signed Terry Evans, a guard from Millwood High School in Oklahoma City, and forward Bryan Sallier of Port Arthur, Texas.

The 6-foot Evans averaged 16 points per game in leading the Falcons to a 28-1 record and the Class 3A state championship. By attending Oklahoma, he follows in the footsteps of his father, Eddie Evans, who was a two-time All-Big Eight player for the Sooners.

The 6-foot-8 Sallier played at Lincoln High, where he averaged 19 points, 15 rebounds and five blocks as a senior when his team, 29-4, won state title. He was named the Class 4A player of the year by the Texas Association of Basketball Coaches.

Attack causes tighter security in Panama

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — U.S. Marines tightened security at a sprawling military fuel depot on Wednesday after claiming they had repelled 40 to 50 intruders in a two-hour firefight the night before.

It was the second time in two days that U.S. military officials had reported an intrusion at the depot, and Wednesday's report seemed sure to worsen already bitter relations between the United States and the government controlled by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

Panamanian officials scoffed at the latest account, suggesting it was the product of fear and imagination on the part of inexperienced, edgy American troops.

"That is their version and nothing more," said Martin Alberto Paz, a spokesman for the Panamanian Defense Forces, the 15,000-man military and police unit that is the source of Noriega's power.

"It seems they are trying to create confusion," Paz added.

Col. Ron Sconyers, spokesman for the U.S. Southern Command, said there were no apparent injuries in the latest incident at the underground petroleum storage facility at Howard Air Force Base.

Sconyers said he could neither confirm nor deny that the intruders were Panamanian military personnel, but said all were "reported wearing dark uniforms."

Noriega is under federal indictment in the United States on drug trafficking charges. For months, he has successfully resisted efforts by the internal opposition and Washington to oust him.

U.S. officials said the clash took place at the Arraijan Tank Farm, an 800-acre reserve near Panama City where a Marine sentry was shot to death Monday night while investigating what was described as a break-in by six to eight camouflaged intruders. He was apparently shot accidentally by another Marine, U.S. officials said.

Sconyers said the latest incident involved about 100 Marines. It began, he said, when a 12-man Marine patrol "reported receiving fire" at about 7:35 p.m. Tuesday (8:35 p.m. EDT) "from a location where they had observed an estimated 40 to 50 unauthorized personnel."

"The Marines returned the fire. Sporadic firing continued for about two hours," Sconyers said.

He said the patrol called in reinforcements, who exchanged small arms fire with the intruders, fired three "high explosive mortar rounds" at their positions and illuminated the area with flares. Helicopters with searchlights were dispatched.

Despite the intensity of the battle, Marines who swept the area after daylight found no evidence of injuries and no equipment the intruders may have left behind, Sconyers said.

with that definition of a water treatment plant. Frost suggested the legislative history of the plant be studied to "clear up any ambiguity."

In the late 1960s, a consultant hired by the city developed both a land use and a zoning ordinance plan, he said, adding that the land use plan specifically referred to further expansion of the water treatment plant into Goodnow Park.

Evidence was shown by the board that the treatment plant was constructed after the plans were adopted by the city.

The question of ambiguity arises because the treatment plant is not clearly defined throughout the entire land use plan. But Frost believes that at the time the "people felt the term was broad enough to include (it in) what they were doing."

The appeals board had mixed reactions to the debate as, was evident by the 3-2 ruling.

Board member Dianne Urban moved in favor of the appeal on the grounds that water treatment plants are not pumping stations and thus exempt from conditional use.

Other board members had different interpretations of the plan.

"The fact that construction of the water treatment plant began after the land use plan was adopted shows clear intention of the city," said Gene Ernst.

The city must observe a 30-day grace period in which the residents can appeal the decision to a district judge, and Frost said it was his belief that the city had no intent of doing anything before that time.

The fight is not over for the residents who live near the park. A neighborhood meeting was planned to determine their next move.

"The reason we are fighting is because the area is zoned residential," Oppert said. "The zoning laws can no longer protect us — they could put a water treatment plant up anywhere. If we wanted to construct something in our neighborhood we would have to follow the zoning regulations — and that's all we were asking (the board) to do."

Malham of Broken Arrow (Okla.) signed in November. Still, a big-impact recruit or two could put the 'Cats in contention for the Big Eight title. A double-figure scorer and an inside force would be perfect. That's where the jucos come in.

The biggest potential prize appears to be Independence Community College standout Chris Morris, who averaged 24 points per game last year. Former Coach Jack Hartman signed Morris out of high school three years ago, but Morris' academic difficulties led him to Independence.

Hutchinson Community College's 6-foot-8 forward Maurice Brittain (12 points and eight rebounds per game) would be a good catch, but is reportedly favoring Kentucky at this point.

6-foot-1 guard LaKeith Humphrey played point guard last year at Barton County Community College, but averaged 16.6 points per game while shooting 43 percent from the three-point range. Humphrey could either start or possibly back up both Henson and Glover. Another junior college possibility is 6-foot-5 forward Billy Ray Smith of Midland, Texas.

K-State's main high school prospects are 6-foot-3 guard Sean Tunstall and 6-foot-7 forward Malcolm Nash of Missouri state champion Vashon High School of St. Louis, and 6-foot-4 Tod Bernard of Haven. Tunstall and Nash both are being recruited heavily and are considering the University of Kansas as well. Bernard is Kansas' top high school player.

Kansas Board of Regents members Norm Brandeberry and Don Slawson talk as they tour the inside of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

Regents consider tuition increase

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

A first reading for tuition and fee increases for 1989 and a comprehensive method of assessing undergraduate education were considered by the Kansas Board of Regents during its meeting here Thursday.

The board heard the first reading of the proposed tuition and fee increases, which will be voted on at its May meeting.

Among the recommendations were proposals to raise full-time undergraduate tuition to $578 for residents and $1,977 for non-residents in fall 1989.

The proposals call for graduate tuition to be raised to $728 for residents and to $2,127 for non-residents beginning with fall 1989.

The regents have already decided to raise undergraduate resident tuition to $550 and non-resident tuition to $1,765 for the fall 1988 semester. Graduate tuition during that same semester is scheduled to be increased to $670 for residents and $1,885 for non-residents.

Currently, the undergraduate resident tuition is $535.

Also during the meeting, the board approved K-State's request to borrow $450,000 from invested state funds to improve the parking lot at the football stadium and Bramlage Coliseum.

Among the improvements are an asphalt driveway to the coliseum, parking lot lighting and general gravel resurfacing.

The money will be paid back to the state through parking fee revenues over a four-year period.

In other action, the board approved K-State's request to scale down four programs in the College of Human Ecology and approved all requests for faculty tenure and promotion from the regents schools.

The Council of Presidents, one of the advisory committees to the board, recommended that the board change the name of K-State's Department of Journalism and Mass Communications to the School of Journalism and Mass Communications. This is the last step before the proposal goes to the board for consideration.

Also during the meeting, regents members heard that the goal of the education assessment plan is to allow for greater coordination between the institutions and better accountability of money for the Kansas Legislature.

"If we have to go to the Legislature without this being done, we're in trouble when we request the second year of the Margin (of Excellence)," said Regent Norman Brandeberry.

"We need to be able to identify what happens to the average student in simple terms. So if my neighbor asks me what we are doing with all his tax money, I can point to this," said Regent Richard Reinhardt.

"I just want the board to be aware of the budgetary constraints (these evaluations will put) on the universities," said President Warren Armstrong of The Wichita State University.

In order to publicly show the board's unanimous support of assessment, Brandeberry, who presided during that part of the meeting, had each member voice support for the proposal.

Accounting department becomes first in state to receive accreditation

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

K-State's Department of Accounting received word Monday that its undergraduate and Master of Accountancy programs have been accredited.

With the designation, the department becomes the only accounting program in Kansas and one of only about 40 schools nationally to receive accreditation.

Maurice Stark, head of the Department of Accounting, looks at the accreditation in two ways.

"If we look at it professionally our interests are the interests of the profession. We are trying to improve the quality of accountants in public practice and also in private practice, so we are concerned about improving the quality of education, which is what accreditation is all about," Stark said.

"While we are proud to be the first in the state from one standpoint, we would like to see the others become accredited too," he said.

The main reason for separate accreditation is to identify high-quality programs. Much concern has been expressed in the accounting profession during the past decade over professionalism and standards, and accountants have been criticized for not living up to their responsibilities to the public, he said.

There have been three major attempts to overcome this criticism. One is to upgrade the quality of accounting programs, and accreditation will only help this, Stark said.

The other two — identifying accounting programs as separate schools similiar to medical and law schools, and requiring 150 hours of collegiate education or a master's degree to be able to take the certified public accountant examination — would also reduce criticism, he said.

Four states — Hawaii, Utah, Tennessee and Florida — already require 150 hours of collegiate education to take the CPA exam.

Eugene Laughlin, professor of accounting, said accreditation will have a two-fold effect.

"The most immediate effects are that it gives us a competitive edge in recruiting and retaining faculty," Laughlin said.

"There is a shortage of accounting faculty and it's difficult to get new members for the faculty. Being accredited sets us apart from other organizations that are not accredited," he said.

In addition to recruiting and retaining faculty, accreditation will also help the accounting department continue to recruit and maintain outstanding students, he said.

"We already attract an outstanding group and I think this will enable us to continue with attracting the superior students to our program," Laughlin said.

Postal concerns an important part of filing taxes

From Staff and Wire Reports

While hurrying to get in your tax returns before the deadline today, remember that stamps now cost 25 cents.

"If you don't have the correct postage, (the return) will be sent back to you and it will be late (getting to the IRS)," said Marvin Roth, postmaster of the Manhattan post office.

"It would be safer to put an extra stamp on the return just to be sure."

Correct postage stamps can be bought in the post office lobby. The cost of mailing an item is 25 cents for the first ounce and 20 cents for the next ounce.

For those people in Manhattan wishing to file on time, the post office will maintain its usual hours. However, Roth said the office will stay open "as long as we have customers."

Roth said he expects the office will handle several thousand more pieces of mail, most of them tax returns this week. Next week the mail load should return to normal.

There will be a person outside the post office who will collect returns from people as they drive up, he said. However, after 10 p.m. and before midnight, any one wishing to mail their returns must place them either in the collection box outside or in a collection slot inside the office.

Although today is the deadline for filing 1987 federal tax returns, the confusion about the new tax law may cause many people to put off the inevitable for another four months.

Just filling out a one-page Form 4868 will give you a reprieve until Aug. 15 — but you must estimate what you owe, if anything, and enclose a check with Form 4868. But at least you won't be rushed into making a mistake.

Local consultants soothe taxpayers' anxieties

By The Collegian Staff

Last-minute taxpayers are rushing to their local income tax representatives today in the hope of filing their returns before tonight's midnight deadline.

H. L. Gillispie, owner of the Manhattan H&R Block office, said Thursday that although his office is very busy, it is typical for tax preparation services across the country to experience a last-minute rush this time of year.

"The trouble is, by April 15, if you have a problem like an error on your W-2, it is too late to get that changed. If it is earlier in the season, we can tell people and they can get problems taken care of," Gillispie said.

Ray Looper, tax consultant for H&R Block, said many of the people coming in have had problems with their taxes all spring, but have waited until this week to correct them. Looper was one of more than 20 temporary employess hired by H&R Block to handle the deadline rush.

Gillispie said he has received about 300 returns this week, and expects another 25 to 30 customers today.

Most of the problems that arise come from the same problems, he said, and now with the recent changes in tax laws, it is worse.

"The new (tax) rules are difficult even for our tax preparers to understand, let alone the common taxpayer," Gillispie said.

Journalism group names K-State as headquarters

By The Collegian Staff

Following a nationwide search, the Journalism Education Association has selected K-State for its new national headquarters and has named Dave Adams, director of Student Publications Inc., its executive secretary.

Kenson Siver, president of JEA, said moving the headquarters from Blue Springs, Mo., to a university setting has been the goal of the organization for a long time.

JEA is a national organization of journalism teachers and advisers working to provide support in developing performance-based teaching methods. Other goals for JEA include establishing a certification program for journalism teachers and increasing its scholarship fund available to students.

One advantage of a university location is that it will allow interaction of the organization with a functioning journalism department, Siver said.

"We are very pleased to come to K-State. We are looking forward to a positive experience and are already impressed with the facilities within the University itself," Siver said.

"Dave Adams was absolutely the most outstanding person for the job. We were very impressed with his credentials and enthusiasm," he added.

"The program will be housed as a part of journalism and mass communications here initially at K-State for a three-year period. We will be handling all of its national mailings, its magazine, budgeting and membership drives," Adams said.

Explosion damages U.S. ship

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An underwater explosion tore open the hull of an American guided-missile frigate in the central Persian Gulf and injured 10 crewmen Thursday. Pentagon sources said it appeared the warship hit a mine.

The injured sailors — six with slight burns, one with second-degree burns, one with a hernia and two with back injuries — were evacuated from the USS Samuel B. Roberts, the Defense Department said.

The Roberts then began steaming slowly under its own power toward port in Bahrain.

The sailor with the second-degree burns was flown to Bahrain, the Pentagon said late Thursday. The other nine were transferred to the USS San Jose, a combat-stores ship operating in the central gulf.

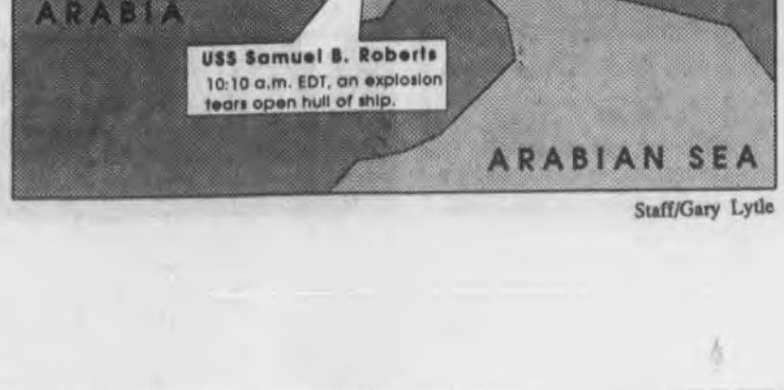
Defense sources said the crew of the Roberts had spotted "some mine-like objects" in the water immediately before the 10:10 a.m. EDT explosion. The Pentagon declined official comment on the report.

The sources, who insisted on anonymity, said the frigate was "making only about two knots" on its own power Thursday afternoon and would probably be taken under tow by the cruiser Wainwright.

The Roberts and Wainwright are two of 14 Navy ships assigned to the Persian Gulf force to provide protection to commercial ships flying the American flag. The San Jose was in the area only because it was on a resupply mission.

The Reagan administration increased the U.S. force in the region last summer in response to a request from Kuwait, whose oil tankers come under attack in the course of the Iran-Iraq war.

Dan Howard, the Defense Department's chief spokesman, said the Roberts had been in no danger of sinking, and that the crew had managed to staunch flooding in the engine compartments on its own.



Howard refused to attribute the explosion to a mine, saying it was premature to form a judgment.

However, other Pentagon officials were less reticent. "The assumption is definitely that it was a mine," said one source.

According to Howard, the explosion occurred well to the south of the spot near the Iranian-controlled Farsi Island where a reflagged Kuwaiti tanker, the Bridgeton, hit a mine during the first of the Navy's convoy operation last July.

Howard said there had been no recent reports by mine sweepers in the area that mines had been sighted.

The last mine to be discovered in the gulf's waters was located on April 9 near Farsi, the Pentagon said. To date, 44 underwater mines have been destroyed by U.S. forces in the gulf.

Soviets to leave Afghanistan

Formal pledge sets departure for May 15

By The Associated Press

GENEVA — The Soviet Union signed a formal pledge Thursday to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan starting May 15, but there was no indication from guerrillas that the Red Army will be allowed to leave peacefully after eight years of war.

Moslem insurgent leaders, who were not invited to the negotiations, said they would present their reaction Saturday at a rally in Pakistan.

The U.S.-supported guerrillas, who claim to control virtually all the country except the cities, are expected to repeat their vow to continue fighting until the last Soviet soldier has left Afghan soil.

The United States, the Soviet Union, Afghanistan and neighboring Pakistan, signed the accord Thursday in an austere, 10-minute ceremony. It stipulates that the withdrawal begin May 15.

Afterward, Pakistan, which represented the guerrillas at the negotiations, predicted the civil war will go on because there is no provision for an interim government, and said it would continue denying recognition to the Communist regime in Kabul.

Provisions of the agreement require the two countries to stop interfering in one another's affairs. The insurgents, who have been fighting since a Communist coup in April 1978, are based in camps and cities on Pakistan's side of the border.

Ambassador Sirius Nasseri of Iran, which borders Afghanistan on the west, said the agreement provides a face-saving way for the Soviets to leave but "we do not yet have a solution for Afghanistan."

About 3.5 million Afghan refugees live in Pakistan and another 1.5 million in Iran, together representing about one-third of Afghanistan's population. Those in Iran are not covered by the agreement's provisions on return of refugees.

The pact was worked out in indirect talks between Pakistan and Afghanistan that began in 1982 and were mediated by the United Nations. Soviet soldiers entered Afghanistan in December 1979 and an estimated 115,000 are there helping fight the insurgents.

Those signing the document were Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze of the Soviet Union, Afghan Foreign Minister Abdul Wakil and Pakistan's acting foreign minister, Zain Noorani.

Shevardnadze told reporters the accord "totally blocked" the "entire range" of interference in Afghan affairs.

He stressed that it does not cover continued U.S. and Soviet military aid to the warring factions, however, and said continued U.S. assistance to the insurgents would "complicate" the situation.

President Reagan said Wednesday the pact does not prevent the United States from aiding the guerrillas "as long as they need it and as long as the Soviet Union continues to supply the Afghan forces in their puppet government."

Naples club scene of car bomb blast; 1 U.S. sailor dead

By The Associated Press

NAPLES, Italy — A car bomb blew up in front of a club for U.S. military personnel in Naples, killing five people and wounding at least 17, Italian officials said. A U.S. sailor was among the dead, the Pentagon said.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the blast that happened shortly after 8 p.m. (2 p.m. EDT) at the USO club.

Italian media quoted officials as saying five people died in the blast. A U.S. Consulate official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he had been told five people were killed.

A Pentagon spokesman in Washington, Lt. Col. Jim Jannette, said one U.S. sailor had been killed and four sailors were wounded.

One of the bodies at the entrance to the club was draped in a U.S. flag, witnesses said.

One of those hurt, a 27-year-old Italian woman, was reported in grave condition.

Italian media said the bomb exploded during a reception at the club for the commander of the USS Paul, a torpedo boat destroyer docked in Naples. The consulate official said he could not confirm this.

Jannette said the USS Paul and USS Capodanno were in the Naples port at the time of the blast. The Capodanno has its home port in Newport, R.I., and the Paul is from Mayport, Fla.

Investigators said Thursday's blast destroyed the inside of the club and wrecked other cars on the street. The bomb apparently was hidden in a Fiat 127 auto that was ripped apart by the explosion.

Passers-by screamed and ran when the explosion occurred outside the club, which is in one of Naples' busiest areas. The building is located just off Piazza Municipio, about 200 yards from the Naples waterfront.

Italian media noted the blast occurred almost exactly two years after U.S. warplanes attacked Tripoli and Benghazi.

Talks continue; 1 hostage freed

By The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — Shiite Moslem hijackers freed another hostage from a Kuwaiti jumbo jet Thursday after resuming talks with Algerian mediators on ending the 10-day-old crisis.

A man dressed in a white robe descended from the Kuwait Airways Boeing 747 at 9:45 p.m. (5:45 EDT), got into a car and was driven across the tarmac to the VIP lounge at Houari Boumedienne Airport.

Algerian officials said the released hostage was a Kuwaiti in his early 50s named Djuma Abdelhak Chatti. He was greeted by Kuwaiti officials and hustled inside the building.

Negotiations had been suspended earlier in the day because of a lack of progress, the official Algerian news agency said. But early Thursday evening an Algerian official boarded the plane for 20 minutes.

Kuwait has refused the hijackers' demand to free 17 convicted pro-Iranian terrorists. The gunmen seized the plane April 5 on a Bangkok-Kuwait flight and are holding at least 30 hostages.

The plane was moved early Thursday to the end of the runway so another jet could land. It was later returned to its original position about 400 yards from the terminal.

A doctor was allowed aboard to examine the hostages. He said they didn't appear to have been harmed physically.

In Washington, lawmakers urged Secretary of State George P. Shultz to intervene because of reports that one of the hijackers might be responsible for kidnapping American journalist Terry Anderson in Lebanon.

Kuwait's independent al-Qabas newspaper reported Wednesday that the alleged kidnapper, Imad Mughniyeh, was believed to have boarded the plane when it landed in Mashhad, Iran.

Mughniyeh has been identified as one of the security chiefs in Beirut for Hezbollah, or Party of God, which is believed to be the umbrella organization for pro-Iranian groups holding foreign hostages in Lebanon.

From Mashhad, the plane flew to Larnaca, Cyprus, where PLO officials negotiated with the hijackers. The gunmen have killed two passengers and freed 70. Among the remaining hostages are three members of Kuwait's royal family.

The great contribution of Marx's economic materialism, which is one of the most interesting currents in the philosophy of history, consists in its having asserted the ultimate consequences of that rationalization of the historical mysteries and traditions which, in historical science, dates from the age of enlightenment. The Marxist interpretation of history is the only one that logically, consistently and uncompromisingly analyzes and discredits historical mysteries and traditions. The impugnment of the mystery of the 'historical' in the sphere of religion, initiated at the Reformation, became more general in the age of enlightenment and reached its full development as a fundamental principle of historical science in the nineteenth century. But it had only gone half way. Most of the ideological currents of historical science failed to complete the task of discrediting the historical. Some shreds of it still remained. Only economic materialism, because it questioned all tradition and all the sacred associations of history, pursued this task to the very end and accomplished an act of rebellion against the 'historical'. As interpreted by economic materialism the historical process appears devoid of soul. Everything is stripped of soul, of inner and mysterious life. The impugnment of the divine mysteries elicits the process of materialistic economic production as the only reality of the historical process and the economic forms that are born of the former as the only ontological, primal and real ones. Everything else appears to be secondary, contingent and superficial. Religion, spirituality, culture, art, human life itself, all are presented as the merest accidents of matter in movement and devoid of substantial reality.

Thus is accomplished the final process of the de-animation of history and the annihilation of its inner mysteries. This is effected through the exposure of the chief mystery, its reduction by historical materialism to terms of production and the development of mankind's productive forces. Thus culminates the critical work of destruction which had its origin in the age of enlightenment, but which repudiated the idea of 'enlightenment' itself. Marx's economic materialism dethrones the idea of 'enlightenment' for it an original type of evolutionism. It also demonstrates that the latest developments of 'enlightenment' do not lead anywhere, least of all to a solution of the mystery of the inner destiny of peoples, of their spiritual life, or of mankind as a whole. Instead, therefore, of considering these problems, economic materialism denies them as illusory and as the product purely of given economic conditions. But economic materialism reveals a fundamental contradiction which it is unable to resolve because it cannot rise superior to it. And this contradiction is patent to any one who is prepared to submit the materialist doctrine to a trial in the court of philosophy.

For if economic materialism really contends that the human consciousness is no more than an adjunct of man's economic activities, then how are we to explain the origin of the intellect manifested by the prophets or economic materialism themselves, of that manifested by Marx and Engels, which towers above the mere passive reflection of economic relations? When founding his doctrine, Marx claimed to possess that type of reason which transcends the purely passive reflex of economic activities. But if the ideological structure of economic materialism represents no more than the figment of given productive relations, of those, let us say, which came into being in the nineteenth century as a result of the struggle of the proletariat against the bourgeoisie, then it is incomprehensible how the prophets of this doctrine can claim to possess a greater measure of truth than all those others whose systems are qualified as a self-delusion born of the very figment. In that case their doctrine is but another illusion generated by the same economic reality.

Thus Marxism has worked out the pretensions and presumptions of 'enlighted reason' to its ultimate conclusion. It believes itself to be the possessor of that enlightened and illuminating reason which transcends the universal and historical destiny of mankind, as well as its entire spiritual life and all the human ideologies; and it claims to expose their delusions and illusions, which in reality are, like itself, no more than a reflex of the economic process. By its claim to be the unique 'light-bearing' consciousness—one that is no mere ideology, but the unique and ultimate revelation of the mystery of the historical process—Marxism represents a striving to unite the pretensions of enlightened reason with claims comparable with those of ancient Israel.

In fact, what it does succeed in revealing is not so much the mnystery of the historical process as its external manifestations, the terrifying void of the historical destiny of mankind, the distressing abyss of human history and the nonexistence of the human spirit in all its manifestations, religion, philosophy, invention, science and art. This repudiation of the spirit constitutes the strength and originality of Marxism. I believe the negative contribution of such a system to be very great. Firstly, it helps to destroy all the half-digested and semi-ideological currents which had formed themselves in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Secondly, it poses the dilemma either of adapting oneself to this mystery of non-existence and of plunging into its abyss, or of communing once again with the imponderable mystery of the inner destiny, of the inner traditions and mysteries; a communion that has suffered and overcome the ordeal of a triple iconoclasm, destructive, critical and negative.

Students discuss tuition, library with regents

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

It happened for the first time Thursday.

K-State student government leaders met with all of the members of the Kansas Board of Regents to discuss student concerns over tuition increases, Farrell Library and educational assessment.

The 20-minute informal session took place during a scheduled break in the regents' monthly business meeting which was held on the K-State campus. It is the first time that the entire board has ever met with a group of students from one university.

In what he termed as the "best cooperation" he has seen during his three year involvement with student government, K-State Student Body President Troy Lubbers, junior in marketing, praised the regents for allowing the students to share their concerns, ideas and goals for K-State.

The discussion began when Lubbers expressed a concern that the increasing tuition rate would price certain categories of students out of the opportunity to attend a regents university.

Regent Richard Dodderidge responded that the regents committed themselves to funding part of the Margin of Excellence with money from tuition and fees.

Explaining that the Kansas Legislature requires the regents to provide part of their operating budget by using student fees, Regent Norman Brandeberry said, "We have a legislative mandate to stay within the 25 percent range."

The Legislature requires tuition and fees make up 25 percent of the funding for regents schools. The other 75 percent comes from state general funds.

"I have a suspicion that our fees are a little low," said Regent Donald Slawson, board chairman. "We liked it and got used to it, but then our costs increase.

"We don't want to price anyone out," he said.

Slawson said he would like to see schools paying 30 percent of their funding through student tuition and fees.

The discussion then moved to the condition of Farrell Library.

"The student body is getting ready to shift gears and make (the improvement of Farrell) a priority," said Student Senate Chairman Doug Folk, senior in mechanical engineering.

"Because of the low number of volumes, we haven't been able to gain accreditation as a research library," Folk said.

"The State of Kansas has the No. 1 library in the Big Eight and the No. 8 library in the Big Eight," Brandeberry said. "We are 450,000 volumes behind number seven (Oklahoma State)."

"I never thought I'd be happy to move from No. 8 to No. 7, but in this case I would," he said.

Slawson pointed out to the students that, except for the University of Kansas, the lack of funds for libraries is a common problem .

"K-State is not the only school in the regents' system suffering from a lack of funds for their library," Slawson said. An area to explore for help is endowments, and private donations.

"We are going to have to realize that relying on state funds just isn't going to cut it," he said.

Greg Weisenborn, senior in electrical engineering, responded that most people "would rather see a coliseum or a building named after them" than give money to an already named library.

Senate approves funding for Amnesty International

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate voted Thursday night to uphold the tentative allocation for Amnesty International after Bernie Giefer, graduate senator, appealed the allocation.

"They (Amnesty International) are apolitial," he said, "but their main purpose is to espouse a philosophy. The government is never to impose its (opinion) on the people."

"Have you considered how this affects groups in the future? Are you willing to give funds only to the groups you approve?" he asked.

Justin Sanders, graduate school senator, said, "If we shouldn't fund groups involved in politics, we've already messed up. Is ASK (Associated Students of Kansas) a political organization? BSU (Black Student Union) could have a speaker on affirmative action; AARTS (Association of Adults Returning to School) could have a speaker on social security; SADD (Students Against Drunk Driving) could have a speaker on drinking laws — are these political issues?"

Mark Burns, finance committee chairman, stressed the educational value of Amnesty International. "Students in Amnesty write letters and learn about that country's (where the prisoner is held) government, culture and customs."

"We can shut ourselves off here at Manhattan, Kansas ... or we can get out and see what's going on around us — what the real world is like," he said.

Senate also debated the value of Amnesty International to K-State students.

"They're sending money to people overseas that they've already helped," said Chris Kern, architecture and design senator. "They could be using that money here."

Donna Schenck-Hamlin, sophomore in computer science, said Amnesty International provides a channel of communication for international students at K-State.

"There have been several cases where foreign students reported problems that their family or friends had, and K-State's Amnesty chapter forwarded the reports to other chapters," she said.

The roll call vote was 37 in favor of funding and 10 against, with three abstentions.

Striving for excellence

Groups give students great experiences

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

In a nation where presidents are famous not for impressive achievements of historical significance but for ludicrously inane remarks and erroneous assumptions, does it not seem fit that such ignorance should be echoed at the university level? Case in point: the objections expressed by student senator Bernie Giefer concerning Student Senate's funding of Amnesty International and Coalition for Human Rights.

Giefer's remarks reflect the ignorance shared by many students as well as some members of Senate. By categorizing an organization such as Amnesty International as a political group, Giefer not only confirms his ignorance, but openly displays it to students campus wide.

Amnesty International is not a political entity, but a worldwide organization of concerned individuals who act on the conviction that governments must not deny their citizens basic human rights. Amnesty International does not defend solely "political dissidents," but primarily individuals imprisoned for their beliefs, ethnic origin, language, religion or the color of their skin. Amnesty works for prompt and fair trials for people unjustly imprisoned and is against torture and executions in all instances.

Does letter-writing to a foreign government to ask for the release of an imprisoned child constitute political activity? Or what of letters to foreign governments asking that a person not be tortured or executed? Amnesty does not care what the individual may have been imprisoned for — with the exception that the group protects nobody who has ever advocated the use of violence — and its aims are not political, but humanitarian in nature.

But what is political activity? Giefer seems to assume that merely because an organization may petition a government, it is conducting political activity, and should thus be denied funding by Senate. But what of the Associated Students of Kansas, a group that lobbies the Kansas Legislature for such things as selective admissions and the Margin of Excellence plan? ASK has been tentatively allocated $20,599.90 for fiscal year 1988-89, as opposed to the $529.31 both Amnesty and Coalition combined would supposedly receive.

One justification for supporting ASK funding is that the group acts on behalf of the students of Kansas, and consequently K-State students. But lobbying the Legislature hardly falls short of political activity. If Giefer remained true to his line of logic, he would doubtless be ranting about ASK as well.

And what of the argument that Amnesty and Coalition do not provide tangible services to the student body?

Coalition for Human Rights is primarily devoted to informing students on the nature and scope of human rights violations throughout the world. In the past, the group has provided speakers and shown movies on campus, open to students and faculty. Last year, when I heard a speaker brought in by Coalition, I could have sworn that both myself as well as the 150 or 200 students who crowded the room were being provided with a very tangible service.

And what of Amnesty International? A group that can claim to have approximately 200 names on its mailing list — at least half of whom are students — is certainly providing some service to the student community. And what of the fact that Amnesty's core group is made up almost exclusively of students, with only a few active faculty participants? Every time a student receives an Amnesty newsletter, attends a meeting or has the chance to become informed about human rights violations through tables or posters at the Union, I believe the student body is receiving very "tangible" services indeed.

The notion that both groups do not provide services to all students and thus do not deserve funding is lame. Few, if any, groups supported by Senate have the participation or active support of all K-State students, or even a majority of them. The important thing is that anyone who so desires has the opportunity to become involved with any or all of these groups.

The decision, then, to fund or not to fund Amnesty and Coalition should be made in light of the importance of the issues they make available to K-State students. Are human rights violations lacking in importance or urgency. Or better yet, should Senate restrict the opportunity for students to become involved in such issues?

Amnesty International is an independent organization, subscribing to no governments, political factions, ideologies, economic interests or religious creeds. Amnesty does not accept contributions from any government and operates solely on the generosity of its members and supporters. Coalition for Human Rights likewise adopts no political ideologies and has as its main goal to promote awareness of human rights-related issues on campus.

The money Amnesty is asking for is to be used for mailing expenses as well as to purchase materials to make posters or run ads in the Collegian. Coalition's funding would be spent bringing speakers and showing informational movies to any interested students.

Would it be in the best interest of Senate to reject both requests for funding and basically ignore a problem which affects countless individuals worldwide, denying students the opportunity of becoming involved in something greater than this University?

Controversial parking solutions need scrutiny

The parking situation on campus is admittedly unpleasant.

But how about some figures to show how bad it really is?

There are 5,187 parking spaces on campus — 2,593 spaces in residence hall lots in addition to 545 student spaces, and 2,049 faculty/staff and student spaces on campus.

Now for the clincher — 9,520 student parking permits were sold in fiscal year 1987. Figure that 2,593 of those permits can only be used in residence hall lots, and that's 6,927 permits for the 2,594 spaces that are available to students on campus.

Depressing, right? It's no wonder that students are forced to circle the parking lots looking for a space as a piranha would a minnow. Why? Because for every student permit sold, there is only 0.37 of a parking space on campus.

A change is definitely needed. But in order to raise the revenue that is needed to create and pave new parking lots, some changes must be made. A public forum at 3 p.m. today in the Union's Big Eight Room will address the Department of Public Safety's proposed changes.

Of the 10 proposed changes, three will have the largest impact. The changes include an increase in the cost of parking permits, the creation of a fee for campus visitors who attend seminars and park on campus, thereby lowering the number of students eligible for on-campus parking permits.

The cost of a faculty/staff permit would increase by 13.6 percent from $44 to $50, and student permits by 36 percent from $22 to $30. That's quite an increase.

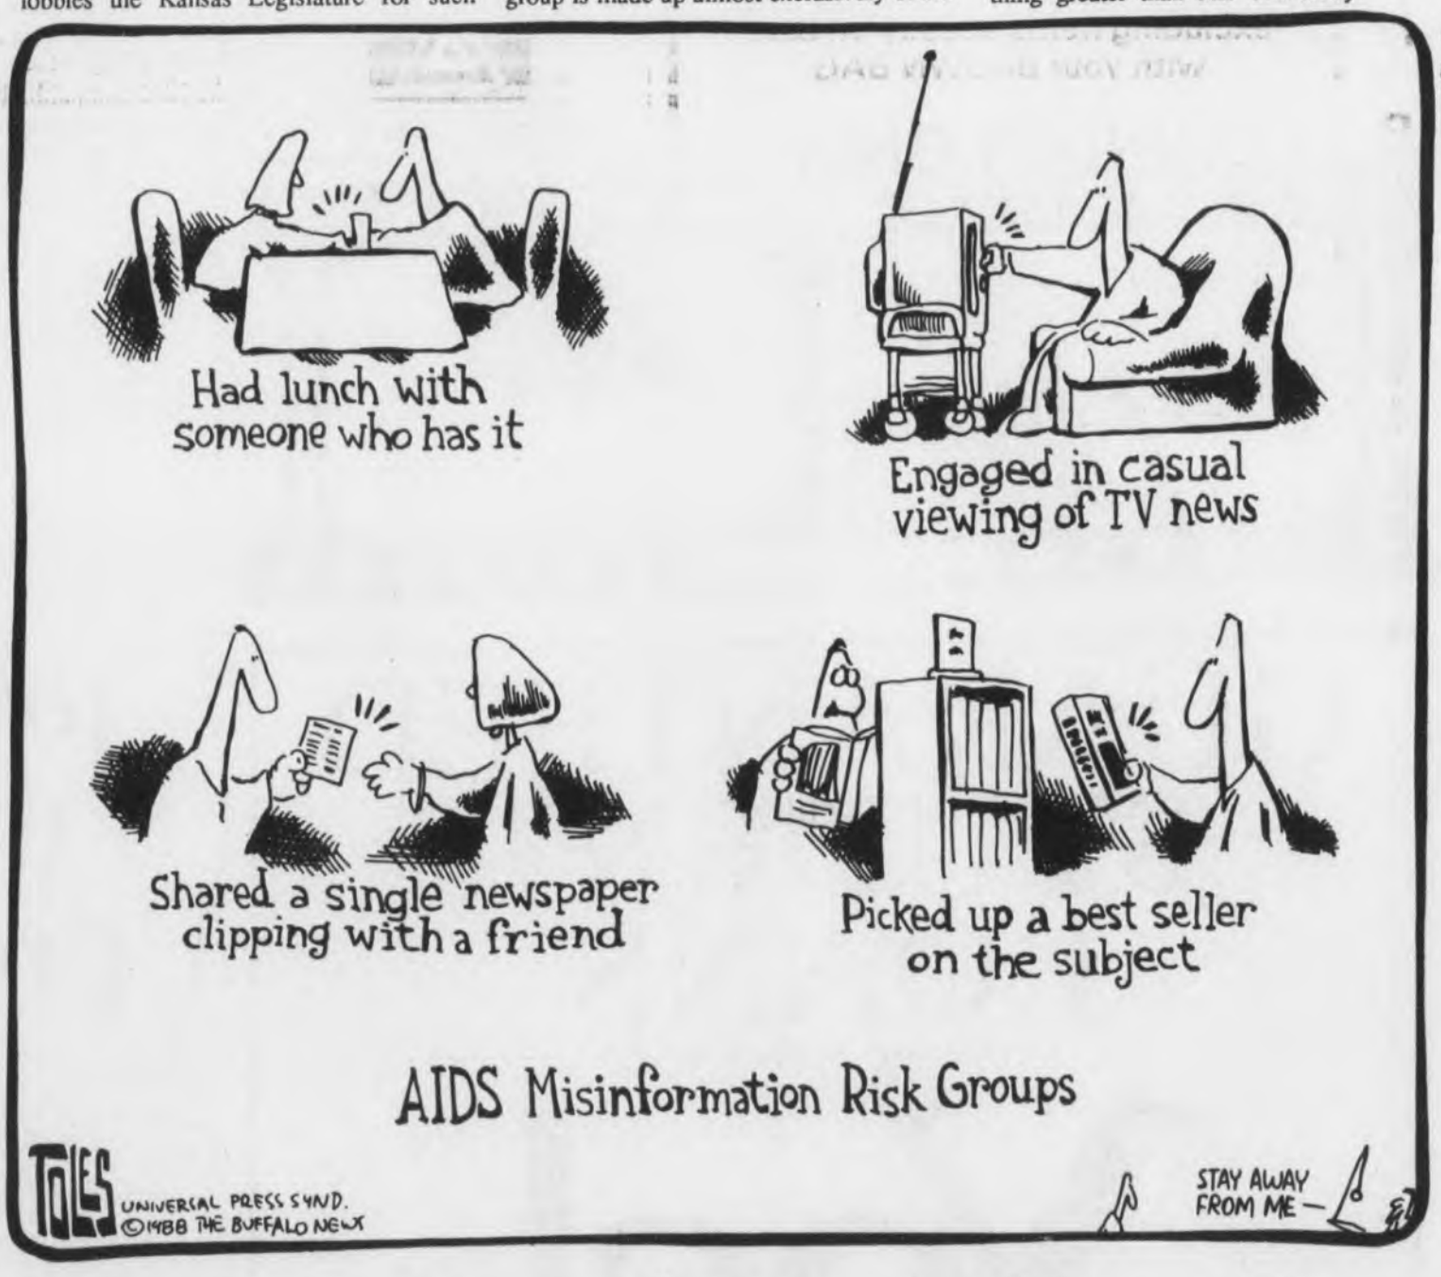
The proposal also suggests an amendment which would require conferences and seminars that charge a fee and are conducted during permit hours to provide $1 per participant per week to support the parking system.

That's $1 even if that participant is only on campus one day. And that's $1 even if that participant carpooled with four other people or rode a bus with 40 others. Somehow, that doesn't seem to be quite fair.

Once a group has chosen K-State as the site for its event, it isn't right that the members be subjected to an increase that will more than likely be passed on to them.

However, the proposed changes do make a limited attempt to control a portion of the present problem. It restricts students who live in residence halls, other than Edwards Hall, from purchasing on campus permits. Jardine Terrace residents can purchase Terrace permits in conjunction with on campus at a reduced rate.

Riley County officials shouldn't rezone land



Some Riley County officials need to get their heads on straight.

At last week's Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board, two controversial rezoning petitions had to be tabled after it was learned a mixup had occurred in the rezoning process. The mixup concerned published notices and letters sent to area residents to inform them of the rezoning petitions. The notifications had been accidentally switched so that not all the proper landowners had been informed about the petitions.

Perhaps the mixup can be overlooked. Everyone makes mistakes. But what shouldn't be ignored is that the petitions were allowed to be filed at all. The areas to be rezoned are along McDowell Creek Road southeast of Manhattan and are to be changed from agriculture to heavy industry. The problem is that the area all lies in a 100-year floodplain.

A recent survey by a Kansas City, Mo., company recommended that because of that reason, the land should stay zoned as agriculture. But before the issue was tabled at last week's meeting, a county official recommended that the first of the two rezoning petitions be approved.

That survey cost $40,000. To go against its findings would be ludicrous.

'Hello — how would you like $10 million?'

If Mr. Harper returns the winning number before Feb. 29, 1988, John R. Harper shall be paid $10 million! Hurry — delay could be costly.

I am sure most of you have received this kind of junk mail at one time or another. Lines like those above are printed in bold across the page, and it proceeds on to make similar statements.

At first sight, you think it is a personalized letter just for you. But on scrutiny you would realize that you have to hold the winning number before anything could materialize. It has to be returned along with your purchase order, usually a magazine subscription; you may not purchase anything and still enter a sweepstake, the law says.

Some people are of the opinion that it is not such a terrible idea to enter these Ten Million Dollar sweepstakes; after all it costs only 25 cents worth of postage since no purchase is necessary. But do you seriously believe that entries marked "NO" go into the same box as those marked "YES?" They supposedly belong to the same place, according to the law; but who is checking?

Furthermore, what could prevent the sweepstakes organizer from not holding a fair drawing at all? Is it not possible for them to not send out the winning number at all and hand it over to some pre-selected person? I rest my case.

Besides these multi-million dollar scams, there exist numerous other modest "money-for-nothing" chicaneries. On similar lines, people get junk mail informing them that a check for an amount like $2,000 is waiting for one of the three persons listed on the letter. Obviously, one of the three names belongs to the receiver. All the recipient has to do is probably send in the solution to an extremely trivial puzzle (some of them are of the intelligence level of a fourth grade student) along with a nominal entry fee. Is not it then possible for the two of the other names to be of fictional non-existent people? I rest my case, again.

Coupon books are yet another form of fraud. Some of you have definitely received a telephone call, which proceeds as follows:

"May I speak to John Harper?"

"Yes, this is him."

"Hi! This is Kathy Smith. I am glad to inform you that you have been chosen to receive goods worth more than $1,000 in the form of ...."

Well, she goes on to tell you about car-repairs, movie rentals, ice creams, burgers, furniture and so forth. If this is John's first time, he would innocently ask as to what his next step should be to claim the stuff. Kathy would then inform him about a coupon book which has an obscure price tag like $34.95, but if he buys it right away she would give him a $5 discount. But, if this is John's second time, he hangs up on Kathy, assuming John is not "penny wise and pound foolish."

"Penny wise and pound foolish" — what an appropriate way to describe the people who get lured by record clubs. These clubs offer new members six to eight records for a penny. They then involve purchasing three to eight records at a regular price, the minimum price being $8.98. Paying this for eight records would total up to a hell of a lot of money.

Another scam is to send you a letter informing that you have definitely won one of the four prizes listed. For instance, one of $5,000 cash, a Macintosh computer, a 19" idiot box or a 10-day stay in Mexico. When you go to collect your prize, you would invariably have won the last one. Yeah, you get 10 days free hotel accomodation in an obscure town in Mexico, but you have to pay for the to-and-fro fare. The agency that sent you the letter would be most willing to make your travel arrangements (and reap profits in the process).

Once I got a postcard telling me I had won a free trip to Florida. When I called the number, a sweet young girl on the phone informed me after considerable sales talk that it was a "buy one, get one free" kind of deal. She was even very kind to explain how I could convince a friend to split the cost. I almost told her, "No, Thank you. I am to smart too want money for nothing."

Care for elderly subject of forum

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

Caring for the elderly at home will be the focus of a forum Saturday in the Union.

"More and more people are caring for their elderly in their own homes," said Nancy Barnaby, director of patient care for Homecare, which is co-sponsoring the Caregivers Fair.

Barnaby said the fair is designed to help those who have chosen to care for aging people in their homes to find out what agencies are available to help with the care process.

"You need to know what services are out there to help and educate you," Barnaby said.

Barnaby said the main reasons for the increased emphasis on home care is the high cost of nursing homes and an increase in the willingness of insurance companies to help with the costs.

About 20 exhibits will be available at the Caregivers Fair between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. Saturday. Barnaby said these exhibits will represent a variety of agencies, including state and local non-profit organizations, insurance companies and health care companies.

Other activities include a presentation at 10 a.m. by Pat Donahue, who will discuss providing for long-term care costs. Donahue is the state coordinator for the Senior Citizens Law Project.

Esther Valladolidie Wolf will be the keynote speaker for the luncheon. She is the secretary of aging for the Kansas Department of Aging.

Barnaby said she hopes to see more than 100 students attend the fair.

"We hope many people in the gerentology and social work departments will attend," she said. "I think it will be very informational for them."

Other sponsors of the fair are Kansas State Bank, the Caregivers Fair Task Force and Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

Prestigious scholarships awarded

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

Three K-State students have been awarded scholarships in recognition of their academic excellence.

The Truman Scholarship has been awarded to Sharon Patnode, sophomore in political science, and Mary Hale, sophomore in history and political science. The scholarship is named for former President Harry S. Truman and provides for up to four years and $28,000 of study leading to public service careers in government.

The addition of these two students runs the K-State total to 13 recipients. That number ranks as the top among all state universities and also ranks among the elite private schools in the nation.

Dan Owens, senior in economics and modern languages, has been awarded the Fulbright Scholarship for a year of study in Germany. This is the second scholarship that Owens has been awarded, as he received one in 1985-86 for a year of study in Giessen, Germany. He is the 18th winner from K-State in the past 10 years.

Patnode, who commutes from Abilene at least three times a week, is seeking a career in local government administration after completion of a master's degree in public administration. She currently maintains a 4.0 grade point average in her major while her overall GPA exceeds 3.9.

"I feel like this is a dream come true that I thought would never happen," Patnode said. "I'm just glad to be involved with Kansas State. It has been a great nurturing environment."

Hale, who boasts a perfect overall GPA, is very excited about the opportunity and the entire application process.

"(I'm) ecstatic, it's just a great honor," Hale said. "(I'm) relieved that I don't have to be worrying about paying for school and I can concentrate on my studies."

For both of the recipients of the Truman Scholarship, the application process proved to be a valuable experience. The process includes filling out a detailed application and an essay along with going through two personal interviews. The interviews are conducted first by the K-State committee and then by the regional selection committee.

"It was one of the best things I've ever done," Hale said. "It was really a wonderful process."

This year, 100 to 103 grants were awarded nationally for the Truman, and each school could nominate up to three candidates. Only sophomores are eligible for the scholarship.

Owens was one of 179 successful applicants from a group of 534 who competed for the Fulbright Scholarship, which provides for round-trip transportation, tuition and a monthly stipend. Owens has also been the president of the K-State economics club for two years, a member and scholarship chair for Blue Key honor society and a student senator.

McCain to host 'The King and I'

By The Collegian Staff

"The King and I," the Broadway classic by Rodgers and Hammerstein, will be performed at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium. It will be performed by the Music Theatre Group, a national touring company based in New York.

The play tells the story of an English governess who travels to Siam to serve as a tutor to the many wives and children of the king. The tutor's most interested pupil turns out to be the king himself, who learns to govern in more enlightened ways.

The conflicting personalities of the king and the independent Englishwoman provide the basis for a clashing of two worlds.

"The King and I" is supported in part by a grant from FirstBank.

Richard Martin, McCain director, said the McCain Development Board is seeking more corporate sponsorship to fund McCain events.

"The cost of talent is increasing and ticket revenues cannot pay the total cost of a production," Martin said.

Ticket prices for students are $13 for lower balcony and $11 for upper balcony. Orchestra seating has been sold out, he said.

Meeting will address parking; rules, fees to head discussion

By The Collegian Staff

Proposed changes in parking rules and fees will be the topic of discussion Friday at an annual public hearing in the Union Big Eight Room.

The public hearing, which is conducted as a requirement of the Kansas Board of Regents, will be at 3 p.m. The meeting will be an open forum-style hearing so that opinions and comments may be heard from concerned parties.

Heading the meeting will be K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom; John Lambert, director of public safety; and John Devore, director of the parking board.

"Every spring we have to have a meeting with the public to discuss the parking situations," Lambert said.

Among the proposals this year is a fee increase for parking permits. The new fee would call for student and residence halls permits to be raised from $22 to $30 per year.

Faculty and staff permits would increase from $44 to $50, and visitors would be charged $1 for the daily permit instead of the current no-charge policy.

These fee increases would help to accommodate the increase in budget requirements and the yearly maintenance of the parking lots. In addition, the addition and redesigning of parking lots would be aided by this increase.

"We have a lack of parking spaces and this summer we are hoping to add some 400-600 spaces," Lambert said. "And those won't come free."

The addition of parking spaces would come in three different locations. The first project would entail a redesigning of the West Stadium lot so that more spaces would be available. A similar revamping would also take place at the northeast residence hall lots near Haymaker and Moore halls.

Greek chariot races begin today

By The Collegian Staff

The 25th annual Lambda Chi Alpha Chariot Relays will be at 4 p.m. today at Memorial Stadium.

The relays, which benefit Manhattan Special Olympics, should raise about $800, said Evan Mapes, coordinator of the event.

This year, Deb Engstrom, area director for the Kansas Special Olympics, will be grand marshall and others involved in Special Olympics are expected to attend, he said.

For the relays, two men pull a chariot around the track, and half way through they switch off with two others who pull until the finish. A sorority member rides the chariot throughout the 440 yards. There is also a women's division where sorority members pull a chariot with a male passenger around the track.

Fifteen fraternities and nine sororities are expected to participate in the chariot relays, which will have preliminaries, semifinals and finals in the men's division and semifinals and finals in the women's division, Mapes said.

Last year's winner in the men's division was Sigma Phi Epsilon, while the women's division winner was Gamma Phi Beta.

The Ranch:

Where the music is country and the entertainment is live

Lisa Stadler, senior in pre-veterinary medicine, dances with Ken Caldwell, Manhattan, during a slow dance at The Ranch. The dance floor is one of the main attractions at the bar.

Tony Irvine, Manhattan, pushes Dell Dieball, senior in animal sciences and industry, around the dance floor on a modified bar stool during a race to raise money for Multiple Sclerosis.

Far away from the bright lights and loud sounds of Aggieville is a haven for the rock 'n' roll-haters of Manhattan and the surrounding area. Actually, you don't have to hate rock 'n' roll to like this place, you just have to love country music.

This place is The Ranch Saloon, commonly referred to as The Ranch. It is a second home to many K-Staters just as Aggieville is to others.

If you drive east on U.S. 24 about 3 miles, you will see The Ranch to your left. It opens at 1 p.m. daily and usually closes around 2 a.m.

"It is the only bar that plays country music full time in Manhattan," said Bob Dieball, the owner, who opened The Ranch in 1981.

"This building used to be a farm supply store called B & R," Dieball said. (He owned the store with his father, Ray.) "We hit a couple bad seasons and couldn't weather the storm so we put in a bar."

Besides the 16-foot bar, Dieball installed a 20- by 36-foot dance floor surrounded by a railing, booths lining one wall, pool tables, pinball machines, a second bar in the back — affectionately called "The North Forty" — and a collection of farm equipment lining the walls and ceilings.

On a typical weekend, there are usually a few pickups in the large, dirt parking lot by 6 p.m. There aren't many spaces left by 9 p.m.

A typical weekend at The Ranch means a band will be playing from 9:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. Some bands which frequently play at The Ranch are The Davis Sisters, Smokey Hill River Band, Southern Cross and Full House.

Full House is a four-member band which features two K-Staters.

Matt and Lois Bunker are the guitarist and lead singer, respectively, of the group.

Matt is a graduate student in journalism as well as a teaching assistant for the department and Lois is a senior in accounting. Both Matt and Lois graduated from K-State in December 1979, and they were married the day after Christmas.

■ See RANCH, Page 12

Lois Bunker, senior in accounting, and her husband Matt, graduate in journalism, put on a show with their band, Full House, as part of the live entertainment at The Ranch.

Bud Wege, Olsburg, lines up a shot on the pool table at The Ranch, where he plays on a regular basis.

'Romeo and Juliet' featured at Nichols

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

It's a story of love, tragedy and an ongoing family feud. It's William Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," and it's being presented by the Department of Speech, the K-State Players and Manhattan Town Center.

The first performance was Thursday and it will be performed again today at 8 p.m. It will also be presented at 2 p.m. April 17 and at 8 p.m. April 19-23. All performances will be at Nichols Theater.

"This is a story about two lovers who are trying to overcome the feuding of their families to enjoy a better world than that (which is) around them," said Gary Leffler, graduate student in speech and assistant promotion director of the play.

Romeo, played by Dwight Tolar, sophomore in theater, and Juliet, played by Tamara Grothaus, sophomore in music-theater, attempt to make sense out of an idyllic love which is caught between the feuding of their families, the Capulets and the Montagues, Leffler said.

Performers in the play have been working on the production for about eight weeks. One area that has taken particularly extensive rehearsal time is that of the sword combat which occurs on stage, Leffler said.

Director Charlotte MacFarland, speech instructor, hired a fight master from a San Francisco organization, Touche Unlimited, to help the performers advance their techniques in the art of fencing.

J.R. Beardsley, the fight master, began working with the actors about a month ago. Previously, the performers had taken fencing classes with the University for Man to learn the basics, Leffler said.

Now every move is planned and precise in the fighting, Leffler said, although it "looks very random and real."

MacFarland wanted to emphasize the brutality of life surrounding the characters, but also stressed the role that fate plays in the drama, Leffler said.

A new character is introduced into Shakespeare's script by MacFarland to depict the chance involved in the story. The masked character is named Fortune and delivers no dialogue other than the prologue.

Fortune doesn't determine the course of action that the story will take, but has foreknowledge of what is to come.

"Fortune knows what is going to happen and just sits back and enjoys it," Leffler said.

Tickets for "Romeo and Juliet" are available at Nichols Box Office from noon to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Tickets are $6 for the general public and $4 for students and senior citizens. Reservations can be made by calling 532-6398.

Concert to raise money for group

By The Collegian Staff

Gospel, choral and folk music as well as a little drama will fill the air when the United Black Voices, the Madrigal Singers and Ebony Theatre come together to present a fund-raising concert at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in Union Forum Hall.

"We hope to have at least 350 people there and raise between $600 and $800," said Martin Grizzell, freshman in English and president of the United Black Voices.

Profits from the concert will go to the United Black Voices, which presents concerts in cities including Kansas City, Mo., Salina and Wichita.

United Black Voices features 40 student singers and its presentation will include the gospel songs "Resurrection," "Since Jesus Came Into My Life" and "How I Got Over."

It will be co-directed by Ron Hopkins, sophomore in music, and Greta Spears, junior in radio and television.

Ebony Theatre, a K-State drama troupe, will perform a one-act skit titled "Train Ride to Hell." It is directed by Raymarlyn Barnes, graduate student in public administration.

Choral songs "My Love is a Red Rose," the American folk song "Cindy," and the American spiritual "Witness" will be sung by the Madrigal Singers under the direction of Rod Walker, professor of music.

The money raised will go to helping the United Black Voices pay for traveling expenses, uniforms and flyers to advertise the group's services to clients, said LaBarbara James Wigfall, assistant professor of environmental design and the group's faculty adviser.

"We are primarily invited by churches (to perform)," Wigfall said. "Whatever money we accumulate from these churches we use to pay for the next trip's expenses. That doesn't always work."

The group had so many invitations to perform in February during Black History Month that it had to turn many down, she said.

Doors will open at 5:30 p.m. Admission price is $5 for the general public and $2.50 for students and senior citizens.

Clark more concerned with K-State's play

'Cats renew KU rivalry on diamond in Lawrence

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Anytime K-State meets Kansas in an athletic event, it almost always promises to be an intense rivalry.

Wildcat coach Mike Clark realizes that, but he is more concerned with his baseball team's play than the intrastate battle when the 'Cats open a four-game series against the Jayhawks today in Lawrence.

"We don't need to concentrate on KU. We need to concentrate on Kansas State. We need to start playing up to our capability," Clark said.

K-State, 21-13 overall and tied for last in the Big Eight Conference with KU at 1-7, has lost seven of its last nine games. But those losses were to Oklahoma State and Oklahoma, two of the conference's traditional powerhouses.

"I think OSU and OU had a lot to do with (our recent losing skid). Those are two tough teams to open (Big Eight play) against. Six out of the last eight years, those two teams have played for the conference championship," Clark said.

But Clark said more aggressiveness on pitching and eliminating mental mistakes on defense will allow the 'Cats to compete with nationally-ranked squads such as Oklahoma State.

K-State's team earned run average is 6.01. At this point in the season, Clark said, the only pitcher he knows he has a chance to win with is Jeff Peterson.

The junior right-hander — who was the Big Eight's pitcher-of-the-week for his complete-game, seven-inning wins against OU and Tarkio — is 5-1 with a 3.50 ERA. None of the other starters have an ERA under 4.00.

"We're way too passive. We're trying to pitch around too many people," Clark said. "Then when we walk batters we say, 'what the heck, let's just put it in there.' Then we make average hitters into great hitters."

K-State hasn't had problems putting runs on the scoreboard, and the 'Cats are batting at a record-setting pace of .323.

"We're scoring enough runs to win ballgames. We've just got to eliminate our mistakes. Everytime we made a mistake against (OSU and OU), they scored a run," Clark said.

"Teams in the Big Eight are good enough to create rallies without you helping them out. It's frustrating to experience that, but hopefully we've learned a lesson," he added.

Kansas was 16-17 overall entering Thursday's game with Wichita State. Despite their losing record, the 'Hawks have already won more games than all of last season — including a 10-1 win over nationally-ranked WSU.

KU's success this season can be attributed to first-year head coach Dave Bingham who came to Lawrence from Emporia State.

In 14 years at Emporia, Bingham guided the Hornets to five NAIA World Series appearances and a national title in 1978. He also was an assistant coach on the U.S. Olympic team at the 1984 Summer Games in Los Angeles, and will handle the same duties again this summer at Seoul, South Korea.

Bingham said he is anxious to return to Kansas after opening Big Eight play on the road against Nebraska and Missouri — currently the No. 2 and 3 teams in the conference, respectively.

"I think it is important that we get back on the winning track in Big Eight competition. Hosting Kansas State will give us the opportunity to do that simply because we've played well at home," Bingham said.

KU is 14-5 at Hogland-Maupin Stadium this season.

Kansas is led offensively by junior first baseman-designated hitter Tom Buchanan. He owns a .417 average and has been a Big Eight player-of-the-week. Junior second baseman Steve Dowling leads the team in hits (47), doubles (eight), RBI (31) and stolen bases (25).

The teams open the series at 7 tonight with a nine-inning game. A doubleheader is set for 5 p.m. Saturday with two, seven-inning games. The series concludes at 12:30 p.m. Sunday with a nine-inning game.

NOTES: K-State's starting lineup for the series is Zack Kimbell (2-3, 4.44), Peterson, Jim Haller (1-4, 7.92) and Darryl Rowley (2-0, 9.00). KU will go with Craig Mulcahy (4-0, 4.37), Tom Bilyeu (3-4, 5.51), Scott Taylor (3-5, 5.74) and Brad Hinkle (3-3, 9.43)...K-State's David Chadd leads the Big Eight in hits with 56...the 'Cats are on track to break several offensive records before the end of the 1988 campaign. The school home run record of 53, set last year, is in danger as K-State has 39 home runs after 34 games.

Los Angeles awaits K-State track teams

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State track and field teams will compete in a triangular this weekend against UCLA and Houston. The meet will be held at Drake Stadium in Los Angeles, with women's action getting underway at 11:15 a.m and men's action starting at 1 p.m.

Head track coach John Capriotti is pleased with the opportunity to compete against two of the best track programs in the nation, but thinks his team will be able to compete with them.

"We have a good team and good athletes of our own, so don't count us out," he said.

K-State will have about 35 athletes competing in the meet. Competitors for the men include speedster Jeff Reynolds in the dashes, Ron Stahl in the distance events, Dan O'Mara in the shot put and Brad Speer in the high jump.

Ten-time All-American Kenny Harrison is still recuperating from a sore knee and doesn't know whether he will compete. Harrison has not competed in the outdoor season yet.

The women will send some of their best, including Felicia Curry in the long and triple jump, distance runners Anne Stadler and Jacque Struckhoff and DeDe Henderson in the high jump.

The UCLA men are the defending national champions in outdoor track.

"They (UCLA) are the best in the nation and have had the best recruiting classes over the past five or six years," Capriotti said.

The Bruins are led by Danny Everett and Henry Thomas in the dashes. They also have last year's High School Athlete of the Year in Kamy Keshmiri.

Houston is led by Urusa Younger, who won the Southwest Conference meet last year in the 100-meter dash.

"Houston has some of the best individuals and is very good down the line," Capriotti said.

The Cougars are led by Lewood Burell in the long jump and Kevin Mason in the hurdles.

Climate conditions should be a positive change for the K-State teams, as sunny skies and warm weather are expected for the meet.

"We are guaranteed better weather out there," he said. "This is a good opportunity for us and we're excited to compete against two of the best teams in the country."

Golfers in Junction City today

Fresh from successfully defending its Nebraska Cup title a week ago, K-State's men's golf team returns to action today by entertaining two other teams in a triangular at Rolling Meadows Golf Course in Junction City.

Marymount and Emporia State will join the Wildcats for the 18-hole meet which will begin at 1 p.m. at the Par 72, 6,900-yard layout.

Chris Gomez, Troy Keller, Daran Neuschafer, Jeff Sedorcek and John Shields are scheduled to compete for the Wildcats.

In their last competitive action, the 'Cats garnered the team title in both the Creighton and Nebraska Wesleyan invitationals enroute to winning their second straight Nebraska Cup crown. In the process, Gomez claimed medalist honors in the Nebraska Cup competition as well as in the Nebraska Wesleyan event.

Tennis team to Colorado

K-State's women's tennis team will travel west this weekend for dual matches with Colorado College and Colorado.

The Wildcats will take on Colorado College at noon Saturday in Colorado Springs. K-State then resumes its Big Eight Conference schedule at 11 a.m. Sunday with a match against Colorado in Boulder.

"The Colorado College match should give us experience playing in the altitude," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Colorado finished second last year in the Big Eight and will be competitive again this year, Bietau said.

"CU is very close to the caliber of play as Oklahoma (a team K-State lost to 9-0 on April 10)," Bietau said. "We still have to play well."

Bietau will make some changes in the 'Cats' doubles teams in an attempt to strengthen the lineup.

Bietau plans to use the combinations of Valerie Rive'-Marijke Nel, Sigrid Ivarsson-Annika Emtell and Thresa Burcham-Miste Bitner this weekend in the doubles positions.

Seven sign 'Cat track letters

K-State track and field coach John Capriotti announced Wednesday that seven athletes had signed national letters-of-intent to attend K-State next fall.

"This year we wanted to make sure that we got most of the good athletes in-state, and I feel like we've done that in terms of distance runners," Capriotti said. "In the next few days, we'll be trying to sign more sprinters and jumpers. A large majority of them will be from outside the state."

Four of Wednesday's signees were girls from the Kansas high school ranks. They were Jennifer Hillier from Augusta, Janet Treiber from Altamont, Michelle Murphy from Ottawa and Janet Haskin from Onaga.

Dedication epitomizes crew team

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Crew at K-State is not always a warm weather sport, even in Texas as the members of the K-State women's crew will readily contest to.

"Four of us went to Texas over Christmas and stayed in tents," K-State women's novice rower Teresa Purvis said. "One morning there was ice on the boats, the grass was white and we were standing there in sweatshirts and shorts ready to wade into the water to row."

Neither does the team stay in luxurious Holiday Inn Holidomes like the football and basketball teams while on road trips.

"Crew is a lot of dedication," Purvis said. "Over spring break, 80 people stayed in tents in Ant City, USA, in Texas. It looked like Smurfville."

"The sign as we drove into the park said 'beware of fire ants,'" novice rower Debbie Dinges said. "The next sign said '90 people have died in the place, don't be the next.'"

If the fire ants and bleak weather weren't enough to ruin the morale of the team, the water turned out to be as congested and dangerous as the Texas freeways.

"We were constantly waked by all the friendly people with their power boats," Purvis said. "We were sitting in our eight and this guy is aiming right for the middle of our boat going full speed. We were sure we were going to die, but he turned at the last minute and our boat got flipped over."

Despite the hardships, a strong bond has been formed between all the women rowers from K-State and Manhattan High School. Perhaps it is this bond that has helped the members develop a winning women's program that is feared by other crews throughout the Midwest.

"We've all had problems, but it's worth it," James said. "You live with these people. They are really cool people. You can't do crew halfway. We've had people try before and they're gone. Your money, your time, everything goes to crew."

"Crew is a lot of team work," novice rower Cindy Blaker said. "If the eight people in your boat aren't a team, you can't even pick up the boat because everyone has to lift at the same time."

If the meteorologists are right, K-State's men's and women's crews won't have to worry about ice today and Saturday as they compete at the President's Regatta on Lake Shawnee in Topeka. Channel 27 will air selected races on Saturday.

The collegiate women's crew was formed several years ago when interest was sufficient to start a women's crew. Several years later, a MHS women's crew was added, and this year a MHS men's crew has been added.

"I'm very pleased with the Manhattan High School crews," K-State coach Don Rose said. "They are easy to work with and are hard workers. A year at that age makes a lot of difference, but there are some good things going for them. The high school crews always have an uphill battle because they are going against college people."

Throughout the spring season, the women's varsity eight has medaled in every meet they have entered. Rose said this year's women's varsity is a better organized crew than any he has seen in the past and has great potential.

"The women's varsity is a taller, more rangy crew than they have been in the past," Rose said. "They've had some problems in swinging and timing. If they can lick those problems they can be a real good crew."

Many of the younger women rowers look up to the varsity crew and try to work just as hard as it does. In return, the women's varsity takes care of the younger crews and teaches them the ropes.

"Wherever we go, the women's varsity is a team to be reckoned with," Purvis said. "They've medaled in every race this year. They work real hard and are really people we want to look up to."

The women's novice crew consists of 13 first-year college rowers. Add to that a MHS women's varsity crew which races against the collegiate novice crews and you have the makings of a strong rivalry. Throughout the season, the two crews have been competing against each other, trying to decide the better boat but with little luck. Odds makers would have a tough time placing a line, because on any day, either crew is capable of defeating the other one.

NCAA investigates Oklahoma

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — University of Oklahoma President Frank Horton revealed Thursday that the school has received a letter of official inquiry from the NCAA concerning alleged rules violations relating to the Sooner football program.

Horton would not comment on details of the investigation, but said he has heard nothing to reduce the "high esteem" in which he holds Athletic Director Donnie Duncan, his predecessor Wade Walker or football coach Barry Switzer.

"Although we consider any alleged violation of NCAA rules to be a serious matter, we are hopeful that the matters raised in this inquiry can be resolved without a substantial impact on the university's football program," Horton said in a prepared statement.

Switzer had left his office and had not returned phone calls to The Associated Press. There was no answer at Duncan's home in Norman.

Walker, who resigned as athletic director in 1985, said Thursday evening that he did not know of any NCAA probes into the football program prior to his depature.

"I haven't heard anything," Walker told The AP Thursday evening from his Palm Springs home. "And I have refused to make comments because Mr. Duncan is in charge of the program and should be the one who makes any comment."

The Sooners lost to the University of Miami in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 1 in a contest that decided the national championship.

Oklahoma was on NCAA probation in the 1973 and 1974 seasons following allegations of recruiting violations. The penalties included prohibitions against appearing in post-season bowl games or on television.

Horton said Thursday the letter of official inquiry was dated Feb. 25 and asks the university to conduct its own investigation and prepare a detailed response.

It was the second announcement involving an NCAA investigation at an Oklahoma school in as many days.

Oklahoma State University President Lawrence Boger said Wednesday the Stillwater school had received notification of an NCAA official letter of inquiry concerning alleged rules violations involving the school's football program.

David Berst, NCAA director of enforcement, would only confirm Horton's announcement of the official letter of inquiry. He said the NCAA has between six and 10 such letters outstanding at any given time.

An official letter of inquiry reports to the school the results of an NCAA investigation. A preliminary letter of inquiry announces that an NCAA investigation is under way.

The University of Oklahoma has retained the Oklahoma City law firm of Crowe & Dunlevy to prepare the response to the NCAA probe in cooperation with faculty representative Dan Gibbens, an OU law professor.

"At the University of Oklahoma, we are determined that our athletic programs will operate within the letter and spirit of the NCAA rules, Horton said.

"Nothing has come to my attention to cause us to lose any of the high esteem in which we hold our athletics department leadership, especially including Athletics Director Donnie Duncan, his predecessor Wade Walker and Coach Barry Switzer."

ask for the automatic delay, about 1 million more than last year. If you plan to join that number, says IRS spokesman Wilson Fadely, you should get a Form 4868 immediately.

The IRS is expecting 107 million individual tax returns this year and estimates that 37 million of them will come pouring in during the 21 days that end on April 22. More than 58 million had been received by April 1. Some of the remainder will be filed after the deadline; some will come from military personnel who are stationed abroad; some will come later from taxpayers who have deadlines other than April 15.

The IRS has processed 81 percent of the returns received so far, down slightly from last year. More than 77 percent are getting refunds, compared with 78 percent at this time last year. Refunds are averaging $825, up from $806.

Tax authorities speculate that uncertainty about the new tax law caused many people to put off filing this year. The new law is blamed by the IRS for an increase of about 2.5 percent in the number of taxpayer errors on this year's returns. And the biggest rewriting of the law in the history of the income tax means some people — clearly a minority — are paying more tax.

"For a lot of people it's a bit of a surprise," says Vern Martens, senior tax attorney at Merrill Lynch headquarters in New York. "They were impressed by the fact rates were cut but forgot that certain deductions are no longer available.

"The groups that benefit most are lower-income people and those at the other extreme who were in the 50 percent bracket and suddenly they're down to 38.5 percent," Martens said. "The vast majority in the middle are paying from a little bit more to a lot more."

On the plus side, the maximum tax rates applying to most taxpayers were lower in 1987 than in 1986. On the other hand, some key deductions that had spelled lower taxes for millions were no longer available.

The deduction for sales taxes was wiped out entirely. Only 65 percent of consumer interest was deductible. Only unreimbursed medical expenses that exceeded 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income were deductible. And only the portion of miscellaneous deductions, including union dues, exceeding 2 percent of AGI were deductible.

To attain its accreditation, the accounting department went through a self-evaluation process that required submitting various reports to the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business in St. Louis, Mo.

Some reports were strictly numerical, including information on the number of faculty, the number of the faculty who have doctorates and how many of the faculty were CPAs.

Along with this report was an evaluation of the research and service function of the faculty. This included information on the number of publications by faculty.

There was also a report about the curriculum that described what percentage of it was devoted to non-business and non-accounting subject matter, and the availability of libraries, computers and other types of resources.

All of this was then submitted to the central office of the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business.

K-State's Department of Accounting was visited by the business assembly's Accounting Accreditation Committee on two occasions over the past two years. The committee consisted of a dean of an accredited college, a department head of an accounting department and a practicing professional from the field of accounting.

Stark and Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration, then appeared before the committee to make a presentation and answer questions, Laughlin said.

students' advisory committee, recommended on behalf of his committee that the regents consider taking the program one step farther and evaluate the success and placement of recent graduates.

The board listened to Krakow's idea, but did not indicate if it would take action on the proposal.

The six universities and the Kansas College of Technology (formerly the Kansas Technical Institute) are to present their final plans for assessing undergraduate education at the January 1989 regents meeting.

The board originally asked the universities to prepare a progress report of their assessment plans for presentation in September. However, at the advice of K-State Provost James Coffman, the board amended its request to October, because of the large number of faculty members who do not work during the summer.

Matt graduated with a degree in business and Lois received a degree in music education and theory.

The Bunkers then moved to Los Angeles where they worked in the music business for two years.

"It was too precarious an existence. A lot of ups and downs," Matt said. "I decided to do that (music) on the side."

They left Los Angeles for KU, where Matt earned a law degree. Matt was in a rock 'n' roll group, and the two of them often performed for greek parties.

Matt practiced law for a while, but decided he wanted to go back to school. Lois and Matt are now back at their alma mater, playing every weekend at bars and parties to earn their way through school a second and third time.

"This (Full House) is the first project we originated ourselves," Lois said. "We got it off the ground. It's our own little baby. It's successful, exciting."

If bookings are a sign of success, Full House is certainly doing well. The band is almost booked solid through the rest of 1988, Matt said.

"We're primarily thinking about getting through school ... supporting ourselves," Matt said. "We're pretty lucky — not many people can do this at this age."

Both Matt and Lois are in their early 30s.

"A lot of lawyers I know — when I left practice, they said, 'Gosh, I wish I could do that,'" Matt said. "So many people get locked into a career — kids, mortgage ... they don't have the freedom to do that."

The group even plays some weeknights and has been known to work four or five nights a week at such places as The Ranch, The Dougout, University Club, The Silver Bullet in Junction City, and "a lot of private stuff ... weddings, Ballards' Christmas party," Lois said.

One place which often calls Full House back is The Ranch, where it is one of the crowd favorites.

How big the crowd is depends on the band, said bartender Lori Lindstrom, also a K-State graduate.

"When Smokey Hill River Band, Full House and Davis Sisters play — it's always packed," she said.

"The Ranch is a fun place," Matt said. "People get uninhibited and it's a real exciting place to play."

And, according to Bobbie Reutzel, junior in elementary education, "It's the only place with decent music."

Arab leader's assassination disrupts country

Israeli sources claim responsibility

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israeli sources said Sunday that Israeli agents had assassinated PLO official Khalil al-Wazir, the No. 2 man in the organization who headed the uprising in the occupied territories.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir declined comment.

The sources said the operation was carried out jointly by the Mossad intelligence service, the Israeli navy and an elite commando unit. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

They said it had been postponed several times before Saturday.

Al-Wazir, who was in charge of the PLO's military operations against Israel, was shot to death Saturday at his home in the Tunis suburb of La Marsa by an eight-member squad.

Palestine Liberation Organization officials blamed Israel, saying the killing was designed to demoralize Palestinians and end PLO-directed protests in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"I'm not ready to relate to these matters," Shamir told The Associated Press at his office in Jerusalem when asked about reports Israel was behind the operation.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, co-leader of the coalition government, said in an interview on Israel radio that he hoped al-Wazir's assassination would not affect peace efforts.

Apparently referring to al-Wazir, he added: "We have to uproot violence as a ... factor that delays a political development. People who use violence will in the end see the limits of violence. It leads nowhere."

The issue came up only briefly in Israel's regular Cabinet meeting Sunday. Israel radio said that when Shamir was asked what happened, he said he had heard the details on the radio.

NBC television said Shamir, Peres and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin approved the assassination after Fatah guerrillas hijacked a bus and

PLO members protest, boycott jobs

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Palestinians angered by the assassination of a PLO leader boycotted their jobs and staged protest marches Sunday, and Israel imposed curfews on cities and camps in the occupied territories.

Eight Arabs were wounded in scattered clashes with Israeli soldiers in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, hospital officials said.

Leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organization have blamed Israel for Saturday's killing of PLO military chief, Khalil al-Wazir, in Tunisia. Many protesters carried black flags Sunday to mourn his death.

Also Sunday, most of about 100,000 Arabs who work in Israel stayed away from their jobs. Most businesses in the occupied territories were closed in the new general strike called to protest al-Wazir's death.

The strike coincided with the beginning of Ramadan, a month-long Moslem period of fasting. In the West Bank town of Obeidiyeh, near Bethlehem, about 4,000 Arabs held a march Sunday before prayers, chanting anti-Israeli slogans. Arab witnesses said three protesters suffered injuries from beatings by Israeli soldiers who used force to disperse the march.

In the Gaza Strip, where al-Wazir once lived and where he still has relatives, soldiers opened fire on teenagers who blocked roads with burning tires and stoned the troops. Six rioters were wounded, according to officials at Gaza's Shifa Hospital.

Troops also shot and wounded two Palestinians near Tulkarem in the West Bank after the Arabs tried to assault the soldiers with hatchets, Israel radio reported.

The death toll from violence sweeping the occupied territories Saturday after al-Wazir's slaying rose to 16 when a 13-year-old boy died early Sunday from bullet wounds, according to Palestinian sources.

The Israeli military command said the report was being checked.

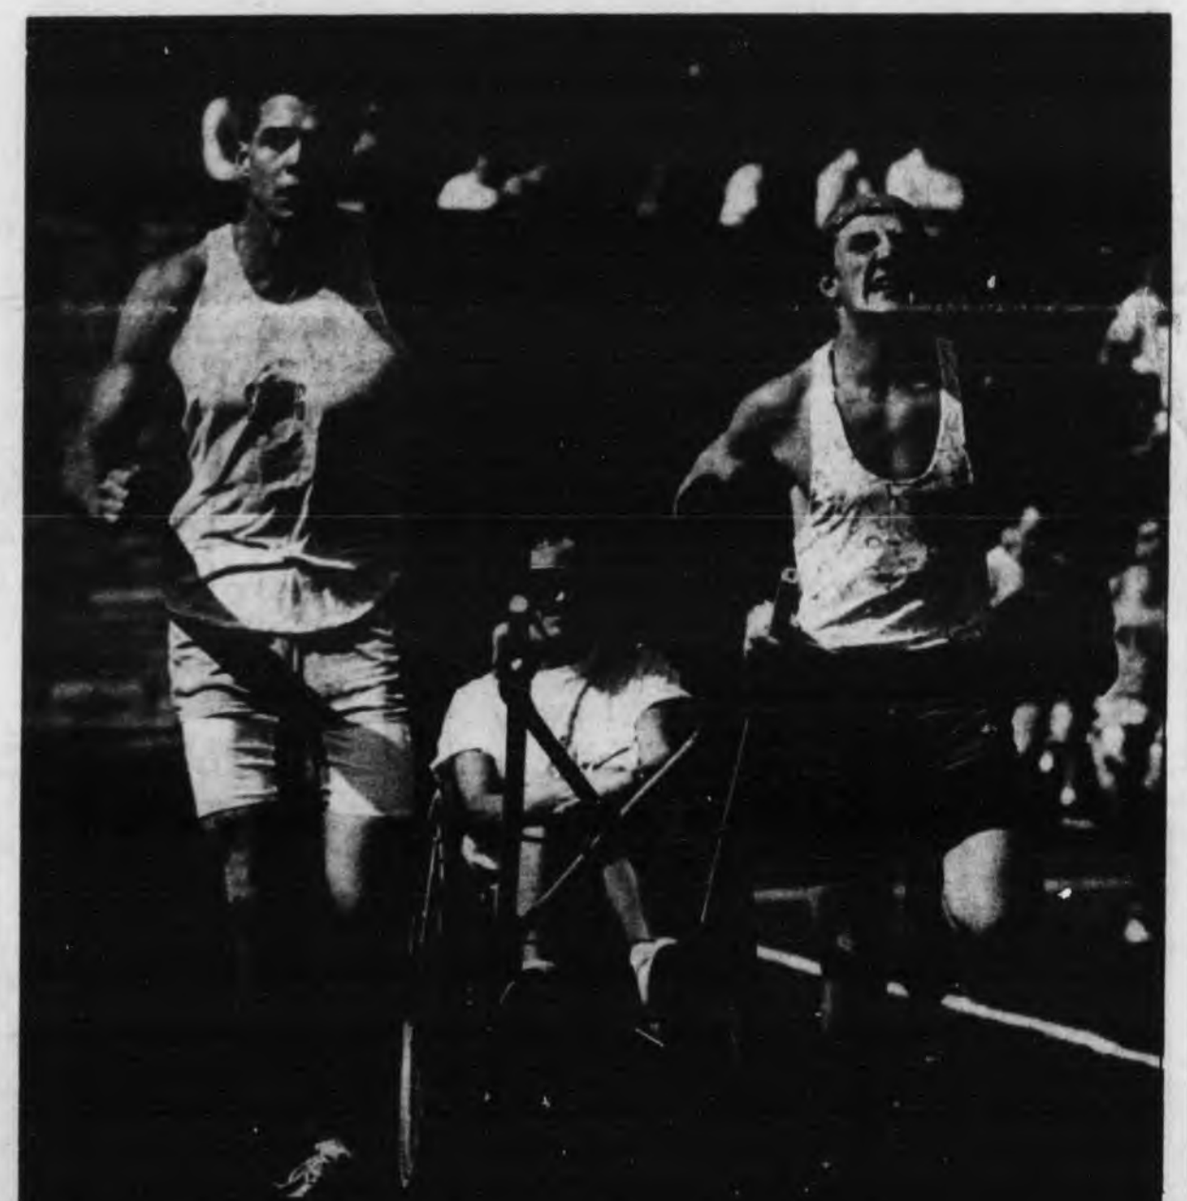
Charity successful

By The Collegian Staff



K-State's oldest greek charity event went off smoothly Friday and may have raised almost $300 for the Manhattan area Special Olympics.

Paul Siegfried, assistant coordinator of the event and sophomore in business administration, said Lambda Chi Alpha members hope to be able to donate about $300 once expenses for the rental equipment are paid.

Members from 15 fraternities and nine sororities competed in the 25th annual Lambda Chi Alpha Chariot Relays at Memorial Stadium. The six-member teams pulled chariots fashioned from pipes and bicycle parts around the track in men's and women's divisions.

The winning team in the men's division was the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. Tau Kappa Epsilon finished second.

The women's division was won by the Kappa Alpha Theta team. The Alpha Delta Pi team finished second.

Search continues for missing student

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

An investigation into the whereabouts of a K-State student who has been missing since April 5 has yielded no leads, but available evidence strongly suggests that foul play is not involved in the disappearance.

The student, Mark Carlson, freshman in arts and sciences undecided, is believed to be in no danger, according to those who know him and a police official.

"Nothing leads us to believe there's any foul play," Richard Herrman, detective with K-State Police, said last week. He said the investigation is continuing to rule out the likelihood of foul play.

Concern by Carlson's parents and friends over his whereabouts is the reason for the investigation, Herrman said.

"Legally, he's done nothing wrong," Herrman said, adding that he plans to meet with Carlson's parents, Gene and Janet Carlson of Wichita, later this week.

Matt Hampton, junior in business management and Carlson's Haymaker Hall roommate, said Sunday he has yet to hear from the 19-year-old Carlson.

"We haven't been able to find anything to find out where he's gone," Hampton said, adding that he has continued to keep in touch with acquaintances across the Midwest who may have seen Carlson.

Hampton said he doesn't expect Carlson to return to K-State.

"I don't think he's coming back to school," he said, adding that Carlson left the key to his Haymaker Hall room behind when he left. Hampton had speculated earlier that Carlson's frustration over classes may have prompted him to leave.

Although the senior Carlson said Sunday that he had hoped to have heard from his son by now, he's not alarmed that he hasn't.

"I can't say I'm real surprised," Carlson said, adding that he remains convinced that his son left on his own.

Raids in Kenya leave 192 dead

By The Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya — Rustlers armed with machetes and rifles raided nomad camps at dawn and killed 192 people and injured 50 in a remote part of northwestern Kenya, the government said Sunday.

The rustlers stole about 3,500 cattle, sheep, goats and donkeys, officials said. Forty of the 50 rustlers were captured and killed and about 3,000 animals were recovered.

The sky over the massacre scene was black with vultures. Hyenas and other wild animals ravaged the bodies of the victims, said the Sunday Nation, an independent newspaper.

Laban Kitele, a minister of state in the office of the president, said police tracked and killed about 40 of the 50 rustlers in a search aided by recent heavy rains in the district. The rest escaped across the border to Sudan.

Kitele said in a statement that the attackers were a well-armed "terror gang" of Sudanese from the Toposas tribe and Ndongiros from Ethiopia.

The attackers hit 30 nomadic camps about 30 miles west of the border town of Lokichoggio on Wednesday. The semi-arid district, whose mountains and rugged valleys make it inaccessible by car, is near the borders of Ethiopia, Sudan and Uganda.

Police recovered 3,000 of about 3,500 animals stolen by the rustlers, Kitele said.

On March 30, rustlers hacked 15 nomads to death in northern Kenya and stole 2,000 goats.

"Rustlers have lost all respect for human life to the extent that they will massacre human beings in cold blood," Kitele said. "I wish to warn anybody within Kenya or outside still harboring ideas of rustling to desist. ...Government response to rustling will always be prompt and aggressive hot pursuit."

In the latest incident, rustlers struck at 6 a.m. and killed men, women and children with crude machetes and automatic and semi-automatic rifles, Mohamed Yusuf Haji, the Rift Valley provincial commissioner, told the Sunday Nation. The newspaper had chartered a plane to the area.

Rustling is a tradition among East Africa's nomadic tribes.

Board to hear rezoning request

Residents complain, want no expansion

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

A rezoning petition to come before the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board at 7 tonight is causing a stir among some residents southeast of town.

News Analysis

The petition is a request to rezone a small tract of residential land sandwiched along the Kansas River between Shilling Construction Inc. and Manhattan Concrete Services. Both businesses are located along McDowell Creek Road next to the Kansas River.

The tract of land is owned by Lazelle and Virginia Guliford, who are requesting to rezone it from a general agricultural district to a heavy industrial district. The matter went before the board at its April 4 meeting, but was tabled because of a mix-up in notifying area residents about the petition.

At the April 4 meeting, several residents who live near McDowell Creek Road complained that the company that wants to purchase the Guliford property — Shilling Construction Inc. — was polluting their air and should not be allowed to expand.

Before the petition was tabled, County Planner Monty Wedel recommended the area be rezoned.

Lou Fina, who lives on Crestline Drive up the K-Hill east of the Shilling company, said residents in the area are angry because Riley County officials are not consistently following rezoning regulations.

In 1974, the area was zoned an agricultural district. In 1982, Riley County commissioners voted to rezone the southern portion — where Manhattan Concrete is located — to heavy industry. In late 1985, a request was made to rezone the northern portion to heavy industry as well, but the planning board voted unanimously against it. The area was rezoned in January 1986, however, when county commissioners went against the board's recommendation and voted unanimously in favor of it.

"Residents objected strenuously against it in 1986," Fina said. "But we didn't have a prayer. The county commissioners ran roughshod over us."

At that time, Fina said, he decided to call the Federal Emergency Management Agency, which administers flood insurance programs and provides relief for natural disasters.

Besides the pollution complaint against Shilling, Fina said, residents were also concerned because the company is located in the floodplain of the Kansas River and its stockpiles of gravel and some storage buildings would be an obstruction in the event of a flood.

FEMA made the county rewrite the zoning resolutions, but decisions made prior to that were left intact under a grandfather clause.

"So we felt the only chance we had would be to restrict Shilling from expanding their holdings," Fina said. "We have to make them observe and follow the resolutions just like everyone else has to. Gulifords have had an injustice, but there's no reason why we should suffer an equal injustice."

Fina cited a survey conducted by a Kansas City company and adopted by the planning board last month as one such injustice.

The survey, which cost the county $40,000, recommended that "the Judges to issue 'Ivan' verdict

JERUSALEM — John Demjanjuk, who has spent the past 11 years fighting charges he was the notorious Nazi death camp guard "Ivan the Terrible," faces a verdict today in his 14-month-long court battle in Israel.

The three-judge panel's 450-page judgment is based on more than 15,000 pages of emotionally charged testimony from Holocaust survivors, documents experts and the suspect himself.

Holocaust mastermind Adolf Eichmann, the only other Nazi war criminal to be tried in Israel, was convicted and hanged in 1962. Unlike Eichmann, Demjanjuk has insisted he is an innocent victim of mistaken identity.

The retired autoworker from Cleveland, Ohio, is charged with operating gas chambers that killed 850,000 Jews at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland in 1942 and 1943.

Contras reject truce proposal

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Government negotiators offered Sunday to sign immediately an agreement for a permanent truce but rebel leaders rejected the proposal as "dangerous."

The rebels, known as Contras, insisted the Sandinista government must first take steps to return Nicaragua to democratic rule.

But despite the dispute, spokesmen for both sides said they were not ready to quit the closed-door talks that began Friday night.

The Sandinista offer was announced at a brief news conference by Defense Minister Gen. Humberto Ortega about an hour after the morning session started.

Ortega, President Daniel Ortega's brother, called the proposal "reasonable, mature and flexible, with the genuine goodwill to resolve in a quick and civilized manner the situation of this war."

He said as soon as a permanent truce is signed, eight leaders of Nicaraguan Resistance, the Contras' umbrella organization, could join representatives of the 14 legally recognized opposition parties in "national reconciliation" talks with the Sandinistas.

2 sentenced for purse robbing

LINCOLN, Neb. — A former Manhattan woman was sentenced in Lancaster County District Court to 90 days in the county jail and two years' probation for stealing several purses from a Lincoln church during a wedding on Nov. 30, 1985.

An arrest warrant affidavit filed in Lancaster County court alleged that Lori Culver, 25, and her common-law husband, Allen Robinson, 39, were suspects in several purse thefts during weddings at churches in Nebraska and Kansas.

Acrobat dies in trapeze fall

HIALEAH, Fla. — A trapeze artist fell to her death Sunday, hitting the floor of a circus tent headfirst before about 900 horrified spectators, police said.

Belinda Amandis, 31, of Sarasota was performing alone without a net about 17 feet above center ring of Circus USA when she missed a maneuver, said police and circus owner David Mobbs.

While swinging back and forth balancing on her back, she attempted to drop upside down and catch the bar with her knees, Mobbs said. Performing without using her hands, she missed the bar and fell.

"She fell forward and she was trying to right herself up, and by doing that she fell right on the side of her face. She wasn't that high up. She just hit the wrong way," said Tom Koenig, 40, of Hialeah, who was at the show with his two children.

His wife, Annie Koenig, said, "At the second she fell, everybody was silent. Everybody thought it was part of the act. Then we realized what had happened."

Children try to steal car

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Pint-sized would-be desperadoes drew mustaches above their upper lips before swiping a car from a repair shop and taking off in it, police said.

"It looked like they were painted on with Magic Markers," Boca Raton Police Sgt. Robert Muth said. "I know what it was: They wanted to look like they were old enough to drive.

"I don't think they could see over the steering wheel," he added.

But the 6- and 7-year-old brothers, stumped by the Honda station wagon's standard transmission, drove into a wall.

A police officer who had seen the pair taking the car from Randy's German Car Repair followed them, parking his car in front of them so they couldn't drive away.

"But they went in reverse. They put it in R for race," Muth said.

'Gone with the Wind' to proceed

ATLANTA — For 50 years people have wondered: Did Rhett Butler and Scarlett O'Hara ever get back together, or was it all over for the tempestuous lovers of "Gone With the Wind" when Rhett walked out the door.

Margaret Mitchell never told, and now the answer is up to Alexandra Ripley, a Virginia author chosen by Mitchell's estate to write the sequel to the Civil War-era epic.

Ripley isn't saying what she'll do, but her novel appears certain to be a multimillion-dollar production that the luxury-loving Scarlett would have appreciated.

Officials of the William Morris Agency in New York, which is handling the book for the Mitchell estate, said publishers are reading the first two chapters this week and next and will bid on the book at an auction in a week to 10 days. It is to be published in 1990.

"I just can't talk price because we just don't know," said Robert Gottlieb of the Morris agency, who represents Ripley.

Panel addresses parking
Few students attend forum

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

Campus parking may be a bone of contention for many students, but it didn't show at Friday's public hearing on proposed changes in parking regulations.

"I was surprised at the lack of people there. I had hoped that there would have been more," said Charles Beckom, K-State police chief and panel member.

"The forum was a way to receive the public's comments on the proposed changes or possible changes not proposed. Now it is up to the committee to go back into session and decide on the basis of what they have been told," Beckom said.

The committee has proposed a fee increase for student parking permits of $8 and an increase of $6 for staff parking permits. The proposal also includes restricting students who live in residence halls, with the exception of Edwards Hall, from purchasing on-campus parking permits.

It would also enact a $1 fee per participant per week for the organizers of conferences and seminars that charge a fee.

The committee is expected to make a decision Friday based on the hearing, and a final proposal will be prepared for the Board of Regents on April 29, Beckom said.

The regents agreed Thursday to allow $450,000 to be collected from revenue created from parking fees for improvements in parking near Bramlage Coliseum and KSU Stadium.

However, Beckom said, this revenue would not be collected through parking permit sales or fines.

"It has nothing to do with parking on campus," he said.

Instead, he said, the money will probably be raised through parking fees in those lots.

Revenue raised from the proposed fee increases is expected to be used in improving campus parking lots, he said.

Beckom said plans have been made for adding 400 to 500 parking spaces near West Stadium and in residence hall lots this year. Within the next two years, Beckom said plans have been made for the addition of 800 to 1,000 parking spaces on the north end of campus near Weber Hall.

Two independent studies are being conducted on the parking system and are expected to be finished this summer, Beckom said.

"They won't have an impact this year, but could make a difference next year," he said.

The first is a comprehensive study of the parking system including its use, fees, parking permits, space utilization, additional parking and the feasibility of a high rise or a transit system.

The second will study the maintenance aspect of the parking areas.

"You can't just build the lots then leave them. You have to take care of them, too," Beckom said.

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, said he attended the hearing to express his concerns about changes the committee might decide to make for state vehicle parking.

"I wanted to make sure that the need and importance for state vehicle parking was clearly understood by the committee," he said. "Many of the vehicles transport students to labs and need to be readily available. They need to be able to move quickly and efficiently.

"I'm just trying to avoid problems in the future."

The total number of vehicles used for extension, research and teaching within the college is more than 100, Woods said.

Prelecture panel's focus to be American poverty

By The Collegian Staff

Poverty in America will be the focus of the prelecture panel at 7 tonight in Union 206.

The panel will include Jacque Gibbons, assistant professor of sociology, anthropology and social work; Jim Ragan, professor of economics; and Marlene Howell, instructor of women's studies.

"Poverty is related to family arrangement," Ragan said.

He said the highest percentage of households below the poverty level are headed by a female. Homes which are headed by a male rank second, while homes which are headed jointly by a male and female have the lowest percentage.

The panel precedes the 7 p.m. Thursday Lou Douglas Lecture in Forum Hall by Barbara Ehrenreich. The topic is "The Disappearing Middle Class."

Howell said Ehrenreich has several ideas and beliefs about workfair, which is similar to the KanWork program approved by the Kansas legislature this month.

Let's face some facts

Eye contact on campus not so hard

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

Walking to class is a contact sport.

At least, it should be a contact sport. The contact should be like in baseball, not like in football. Baseball players rarely bump each other, but they always chat and chatter. Frank White of the Kansas City Royals talks with the other team's runner on second base between batters. White does not act like the bases are empty.

But it seems to me that we pretend like the bases are empty when we walk around campus. At least I do. The whole goal should be to admit that another person is there.

It is like sitting in class before the bell rings and not talking. I admit I almost never talk before class. I usually have a book or something to excuse me from it. But that is not good.

Everyone feels awkward when walking alone and spotting another person 50 yards away heading the opposite direction. Do I look at the person? Do I pretend not to see? Do I act like I can't see because I am studying? Do I fake interest in the design of that bike rack there?

I think this is true because I have looked back at people after they have passed me. They stop looking at the cracks in the sidewalk and hold their heads up again.

I think this is true also because the few times I have locked eyes with someone for more than a moment the awkwardness got so bad we both had to smile and say something. But this happens about once a week. Most people look away as soon as they see that I am also looking.

Basically, I am worried that I am uglier or scarier than I think I am because people look at the cracks in the sidewalk or the leaves on the trees or the stones in the buildings. I have never liked to look at architecture more than at people.

All I am talking about is eye contact. We pracuce the sport ot walking to class for at least 20 minutes every day, and most of us — or at least most of the people I know — are not very good yet.

I have even heard people say that friendly salespeople in stores are fake because they are so friendly. But they seem fake only because people are not normally friendly, not because being friendly is fake.

People must be strong-willed to meet people they have seen before and recognize their faces yet walk past and pretend to be blind.

The contact that does exist is not usually eye contact. It is shoulder contact. I call it jousting. Two guys will not get out of each other's way, and so they bump shoulders. Only weak men move out of the way. Jousting is the male-dominancy ritual for humans. Deer butt horns, birds fluff feathers, men bump shoulders.

Other contact occurs when people have matching paths after leaving a class. It is good to watch these people, especially if the pair is a man and a woman and one of them sort of skips away after they part but the other walks on as if he or she had been alone all along.

Other contact comes from people showing a parent or friend around campus. They wave at every acquaintance they see, as if to prove to their companion that they do indeed have other friends.

But it seems to me that most of us walk without seeing the other walkers, just as we poke our heads into classrooms only to see that the class before ours has not left yet, in effect saying to the people in the room: "Oh, it is only you. There is no one in here I would want to see."

Just as baseball has rules, walking to class has a few rules.

First, if you are a guy and are walking on campus after dark, make a lot of noise as you go. Whistle or something — I don't care. Wear bright clothes. In short, make sure that any woman in the area knows you are there so she will not get scared and start kicking you or something.

Second, do not listen to Walkmans. It is cheating. While buildings are not as interesting as people, music at least comes close. Music is a good excuse to retreat into your own little world. You can be honorably distracted. But if you must listen to music, at least listen to decent music. Do not say in effect, "I'd rather listen to AC/DC than you."

The third taboo is sunglasses, especially mirrored ones. It is cheating. The person you are looking at cannot know that you are looking, and so you do not have to get nervous and say hi. If you must wear dark glasses, at least wait until mirrored contacts come out.

Fourth, never walk so slow or with so many people that you block the sidewalk off.

The big thing is to at least look at the other people walking by; they are more interesting than buildings or studies. They know you see them, and you know they see you. You even have to shift your course a lot to keep from crashing into each other. And if you lock eyes, enough tension will build up that you will have to smile and say hi.

ROTC reinstatement puts students in limbo

The Air Force ROTC program at K-State has taken on the resemblance of a seesaw — being canceled, reinstated and possibly canceled again.

In January the Air Force ROTC program at K-State — along with the programs at 36 other universities — was canceled to save the Air Force approximately $10 million a year.

Last Monday, however, the Air Force reversed its decision to close the 37 programs. But the programs have been put on a two-year probation, at the end of which time they will be re-examined and possibly canceled.

The announcement that the program is being reinstated, at least for two years, is welcome news for the cadets who were faced with the choice of switching to another program, such as the Army ROTC, or moving to a university that still has an Air Force ROTC program.

But the fact that the program is to be re-examined in two years — and possibly canceled — creates an atmosphere of uncertainty. It will be even more difficult to build up the program now, since it is not guaranteed that cadets entering the program at K-State will be able to finish here.

Another strike against the program is that no new cadets have been recruited since mid-January. Also, the summer staff was cut back when it was learned that the program was going to be eliminated; now that it has been reinstated, the staff will be left shorthanded this summer.

The way in which the Air Force has dealt with the ROTC programs is unfair. The original decision to eliminate the program in the spring of 1989 showed no concern for the freshmen and sophomores who had entered the program with the belief that they would graduate from K-State.

And the decision to put the programs on a two-year probation is also faulty. It puts the program in an awkward position, trying to recruit new cadets but not being able to guarantee that those cadets will be able to graduate from K-State.

If the Air Force thinks it must cut these programs, the only fair way is to eliminate them in four years. That way the cadets who have already entered the programs will be able to graduate, and any new cadets entering the programs will know that those programs will be terminated.

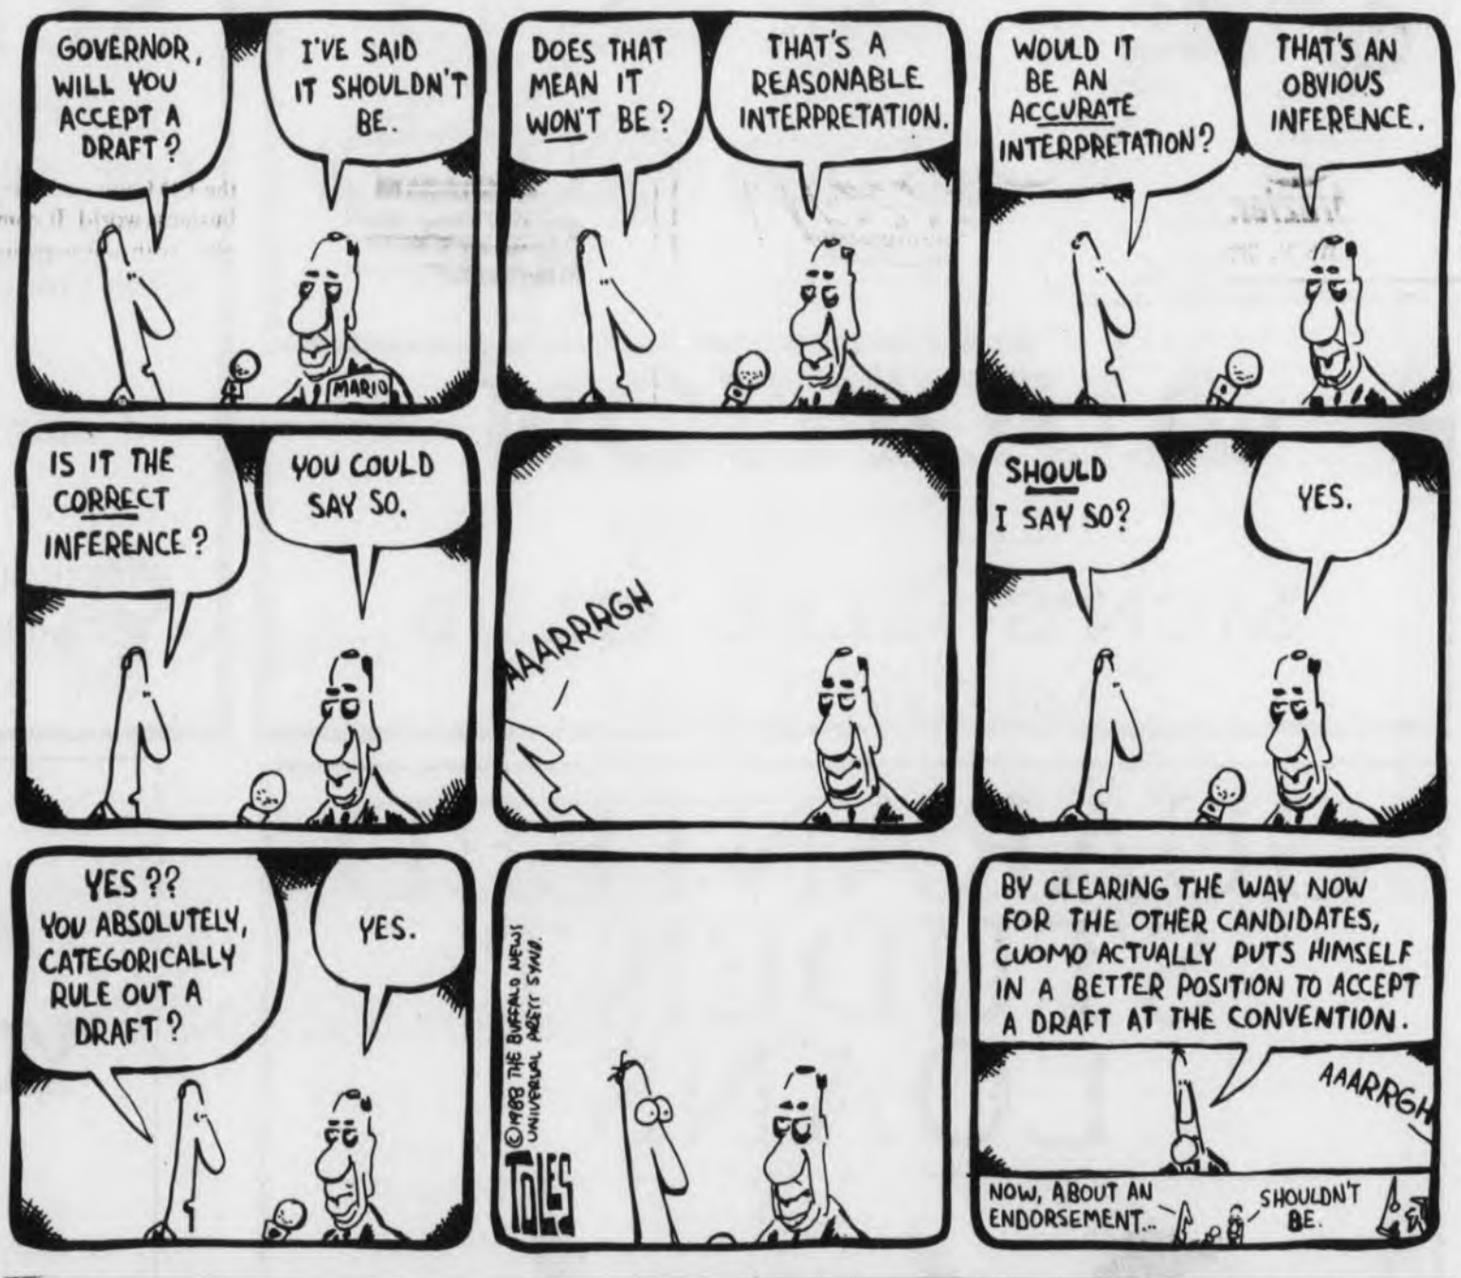
Water plant's growth won't ruin local park

The Manhattan Board of Zoning Appeals decided Wednesday to approve the Manhattan water treatment facility's expansion into Goodnow Park despite opposition from local residents.

Goodnow Park, which is located on Thurston Street between Fourth and Fifth streets, will decrease in size after the treatment plant's expansion, but there will still be adequate room for children to play and families to have picnics, said Jim Colley, recreation superintendent.

Colley said the baseball diamond on the east side of the field has been used for league baseball and softball games in the past, but plans had already been made to discontinue its use for league games.

He said this would have been done regardless of the water plant expansion. Games that were previously played at Goodnow Park will be moved to Griffith Field at 11th and Yuma streets.



The ball diamond will become approximately 40 feet smaller after the plant expansion but could still be used for drop-in softball activity and practices, Colley said. The other ball diamond will be turned into a smaller, grassy area.

Bruce McCallum, director of Public Works, said the change in status for the ball diamond had been anticipated for a long time. He said the lights were going to be taken down because of their age and state of disrepair.

McCallum said the city will continue with the upkeep of Goodnow Park after the expansion.

It appears the local residents who are opposing the water treatment plant expansion will only be losing a small amount of space. They will still have a place for their children to play, a ball diamond for practices and a grassy area for picnics.

It is understandable that the residents want to hold on to what they have, but in this case, the good of the entire community also must be considered.

Unique group

Editor,

As a member of the Coalition for Human Rights for more than three years, I have heard the "political" question about the group raised each year. It is a common concern that involves some misconceptions about the group.

Student Senate's debates have indicated that the group has been consistently funded for three main reasons: One, the group has consistently provided high-quality speakers and movies for K-State; two, these educational forums have lent diversity to our campus; and three, as a group, Coalition has increased the awareness of human-rights issues without engaging in partisan politics.

The only well-reasoned argument I have heard or read for opposing Senate's funding of Coalition is that there are no guidelines which could refute a claim by a hate group — such as the Ku Klux Klan — that it deserves funding as well to further diversity. However, I believe students can and should trust to some degree the ability of present and future students, including student senators, to base some decisions on widely held values or concepts of morality. It is on such a basis that Senate funds Students Against Driving Drunk, as opposed to a group calling for the legalization of marijuana.

I encourage everyone who is curious about Coalition to attend the next presentation at 7:30 p.m. April 28 in the Union Little Theatre, when Phyllis Bennis will address the Palestinian issue. Like most of the presentations arranged by Coalition, we can expect this one to be controversial and to be followed by a fairly lively question-and-answer period.

The Coalition for Human Rights exists only at K-State. Its low-budget forums provide direct access to the views of people with extensive first- or second-hand experience of governmental oppression of some particular race or nationality.

I guarantee that those who choose to attend a Coalition presentation will leave with some new ideas — whether comforting or discomforting. The group is uniquely educational.

Save Van Zile

Editor,

I enjoyed the positive student comments relative to the saving of Van Zile Hall. As a Manhattan native and K-State alum, I have many warm, fuzzy feelings and recollections of these two "institutions." My father helped build Van Zile, and I dated some of the girls who lived there when the weeknight curfew was 10 p.m.

I am saddened by an all-too-prevalent attitude that "new is better." The rehabilitation of Nichols Hall brought joy to my heart. While I've never been able to travel in Europe yet, I still have hopes. It would be interesting to see buildings in use that were built centuries ago. What stories they could tell!

This reminds me of Joyce Kilmer's poem, "The House With Nobody in It" — a poignant message, though on a smaller scale.

Counseling to be required for loan recipients

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Starting this academic year, graduating seniors with a Guaranteed Student Loan are required to be counseled before graduation on repayment of the loan.

The counseling, or exit interview, consists of informing students on loan repayment, deferments and default, said Cleta Raine, the GSL coordinator in the student financial assistance office.

Under the reauthorization of the Education Act in October 1986, universities are required to counsel students who have a GSL, Raine said.

The only loan previously requiring an exit interview was the Perkins National Direct Student Loan. The exit interviews for GSLs is something new, she said.

Students are requested to attend one of the four scheduled sessions in which they can meet with the lenders, Raine said. At these sessions, information dealing with repayment of the GSL is explained to the student by staff members of the student financial assistance office and local lenders. Questions can be asked of these individuals, Raine said.

Each session has a different local lender to provide counseling, but the student does not need to go to the lender from whom they received the GSL. According to Raine, many will have out-of-town loans anyway.

Although Raines prefers students attend one of the sessions, they are not required to, she said. Those who can't attend one of the sessions must fill out a Summary of Rights and Responsibilities form and give it to personnel in Fairchild 104.

A packet containing information on monthly repayment schedules, deferments, loan consolidation and debt management will then be given or mailed to the student, she said. This same packet will be given to those who attend the session, who are also required to fill out the Summary of Rights and Responsibilities form before attending the exit interview.

The Reauthorization Act requires that loan information be passed along to the student, and does not require institutions conduct actual interviews.

"Either a student attends a session or we mail the information out to them," Raine said.

Exit interviews for this academic year will be conducted April 19 and 20 and May 3 and 4 in the K-State Union. For more information contact the student financial assistance office at 532-6420.

Hostage sends message to Kuwait

Passengers may face death aboard hijacked plane

By The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — A passenger aboard a hijacked Kuwait Airways jumbo jet said Sunday about 35 hostages on the plane faced certain death if Kuwait refused to release 17 convicted terrorists.

"All the passengers are in good health. I hope the Kuwait government will act quickly to liberate the 17 young prisoners. Otherwise we all face a black end," said the man. He identified himself as Suleiman Farhan Doukhi.

Doukhi, who spoke Arabic in a firm voice, also sent "greetings to the Kuwait people, to my mother and father and to all those who miss me."

The message appeared to be a recording.

On Friday, the hijackers brought two other passengers to the aircraft's radio to make similar statements to the control tower.

Shortly before midnight Sunday, several Algerian police cars traveled to and from the plane. It could not be determined who was in the cars. The Kuwaiti delegation remained in an airport lounge well after midnight.

It was the latest that the delegation had stayed at the airport since negotiations began, leading to speculation the hijackers might make a gesture connected with the Moslems' observance of Ramadan, the month-long period of fasting. Ramadan begins Monday.

Since the Bangkok-to-Kuwait flight was hijacked April 5, the hijackers have demanded the release of the 17 extremists, jailed for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in Kuwait in December 1983.

Kuwait has rejected the demand.

The plane, carrying 112 passengers, first landed in Iran, where 57 hostages were released and additional hijackers reportedly boarded the plane. The jet then went to Larnaca, Cyprus, where the gunmen killed two passengers and released 13.

On Tuesday night, it arrived in Algiers and on Friday the hijackers released an ailing hostage.

Algerian officials said Sunday that Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat was expected in Algiers but declined to say when he would arrive or whether he would play a role in the negotiations.

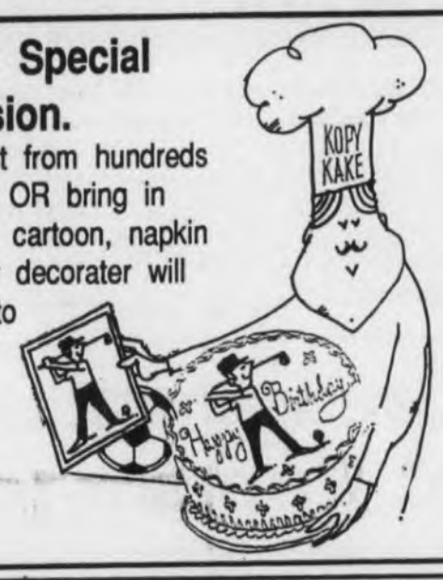
On the morning of the 13th day of the crisis, Algerian authorities abruptly expelled hundreds of print and television reporters from the section of the VIP lounge where they had been staying for nearly a week.

Reporters moved into tents, erected by Algerian security men, on the lawn near the lounge.

At about the same time, Algerian policemen, armed with pistols, took up position on the roof of the terminal building facing the plane. It was not clear why they had been dispatched.

One official, who refused to be identified by name, said the lounge was needed for Arab ambassadors expected to come to the airport for a possible expansion of the negotiations. The official declined to provide any details.

The Shiite Moslem gunmen have threatened to fly the jet out of Algeria "to settle our score with Kuwait somewhere else." Early Sunday, they said they would extend their "departure time warning" to pursue negotiations. There has been no indication of where they might go.



The estimated five to eight hijackers asked for and received about 6,600 gallons of fuel to maintain conditions inside the plane, but did not set a deadline or directly repeat their previous threats to kill the hostages and blow up the plane. The hijackers also asked for and were given newspapers.

Meanwhile, Moslems prepared to observe Ramadan, the month-long period of fasting when Islamic values are particularly stressed. It starts here today.

Sunday's game suspended in eighth with K-State leading, 10-9

'Cats dominating 4-game series with Hawks

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State's baseball team traveled to Lawrence over the weekend for a four-game series with the Jayhawks. And now that the weekend is over, the 'Cats have a 24 8/9-14 overall record and are 4 8/9-7 in Big Eight Conference play.

Those fractional records are correct. After winning the first three games of the series — 12-7 Friday and 22-14 and 23-2 in Saturday's double-header — the final game of the series was halted in the top of the eighth inning Sunday due to rain.

The Wildcats are holding a 10-9 lead and will have one man on base when play resumes this afternoon at 3 at Hoagland-Maupin Field.

Should today's game get rained out, the game will be called and K-State will be awarded the victory, raising its records to 25-14 and 5-7.

In Sunday's game, the 'Cats scored in spurts. Reese Beers' second-inning grand slam, the fourth Wildcat grand slam of the series, tallied four runs for K-State. The squad added six runs in the fifth to account for their 10-run total.

Sunday's game has proven to be the closest game of the series. Saturday's opener was a bona fide slugfest, as the two teams combined for 36 runs and 26 hits. K-State prevailed, winning 22-14.

K-State's starting pitcher, Jeff Peterson, didn't make it through four innings, and was relieved by David Hierholzer, who picked up his third win in pitching 2⅓ innings of relief.

The game was tied, 1-1, in the bottom of the third when Peterson began having problems. Led by Dan Benninghoff's two-run homer, the Jayhawks sent 11 men to the plate and scored five times. Peterson also walked four batters, including two with the bases loaded.

Hierholzer then took over, and used one pitch to produce a Rocky Helm flyout to end KU's rally with the bases still loaded.

In the top of the fourth, K-State had a rally of its own. The 'Cats scored nine runs to go ahead, 10-6. Catcher Jeff Hulse hit two home runs in the inning, including a grand slam.

The 'Cats didn't stop in the fourth, however. In the fifth and sixth innings, they scored seven and four runs, respectively, to take a 21-9 lead. Shortstop Scott Spangenberg belted another grand slam in the sixth.

In the fourth, fifth and sixth innings combined statistically, K-State sent 31 players to the plate, batted around twice and scored 20 runs.

KU never gave up, however, and scored eight runs in the final three innings.

"It's tough to be up 6-1 and then give up nine runs," KU coach Dave Bingham said. "We never gave up, and that's the hardest thing not to do."

The second game of the doubleheader was a K-State blowout. The 'Cats scored 12 runs in the second inning en route to a 23-2 victory.

Spangenberg recorded another grand slam, while starting pitcher Darryl Rowley turned in a sparkling performance. Rowley struck out six batters, walked just two and gave up two runs, both unearned.

The 'Cats had another big day against the Jayhawks in the opener of the series, winning 12-7.

K-State scored two runs in the top of the fifth inning to take a 5-0 lead, but KU answered with three runs of its own in the bottom half from home runs by Benninghoff and Jeff Spencer off the 'Cats starting pitcher, Zack Kimbell, 3-3.

Staff/Jim Dietz

K-State shortstop Scott Spangenberg prepares to tag out University of Kansas runner Steve Dowling at second base during the Friday game against the Jayhawks in Lawrence. The 'Cats played a four-game series with the Jayhawks over the weekend.

The Wildcats had a big sixth inning and doubled their run total and their lead to 10-3. K-State was paced in the inning by a three-run Jim Donohue home run and a solo shot by Spangenberg.

"Every time (KU) scored, we created opportunities on offense and came right back," Clark said.

The Jayhawks came back to score two runs in both the seventh and eighth innings.

Men's golf team wins third event; in Wichita for 8-team invitational

Women hosting Kansas State Classic

From Wire Reports

K-State's men's golf team captured its third consecutive event of the spring by winning a triangular Friday in Junction City at the Par 72, 6,900-yard Rolling Meadows Golf Course.

The Wildcats tallied an 18-hole total of 298 to outdistance runner-up Emporia State who finished at 307. Marymount placed third with a team score of 315.

Friday's title comes on the heels of winning both the Creighton and Nebraska Wesleyan invitationals last week.

Troy Keller's 73 topped the scoring individuals for K-State in Friday's triangular. In addition to Keller, Daran Neuschafer, Todd Fowler and John Shields all carded 75's while Jeff Sedorcek notched a 76.

The best round of the afternoon was carded by the Wildcats' Chris Gomez who fired a two-under par 70. His score, however, did not count as part of the team's total. Other non-scoring individuals who competed for K-State included Tim Jennings who shot a 77 and John Novosel who had an 84.

"We played well," Coach Rob Sedorcek said. "It marked the first time this spring that we have broken 300 as a team. We're pretty happy about that as we head to Wichita next week."

The 'Cats will take part in the Wichita State Invitational today and Tuesday.

This tournament begins today at 8 a.m. with a round of 36 holes. Action concludes on Tuesday with a final round of 18 holes starting at 9 a.m.

The invitational will be contested at the Par 72, 6,945-yard Willowbend Golf Club.

Besides K-State and host Wichita State, other schools competing include Creighton, Emporia State, Kansas, Missouri-Kansas City, Southwest Missouri State and Washburn.

"The results from the Wichita State meet will help determine just who will go to our final two tournaments of the season," Sedorcek said.

After the WSU Invite, K-State will finish its schedule April 29-30 at the Midwestern Intercollegiate Invitational in Lake Geneva, Wis., and then journey to Tulsa, Okla., May 16-17 for the Big Eight championships.

The women's squad will also be in action today and Tuesday, as it entertains three other teams in the Kansas State Classic which will take place at the Par 73, 5,850-yard Manhattan Country Club course.

Today's action is set to begin at 10 a.m. while tee time will be 8 a.m. Tuesday. A round of 18 holes is slated each day.

Chris Adams, Keli Blake, Jill Zientara, Beth Holmberg and Cory Harlow are scheduled to compete for K-State. In addition, Lisa Lugar will participate but her score will not count toward the team total.

Staff/Gary Lytle

Daran Neuschafer chips onto the green of the first hole on his way to a three-over par score at the triangular golf tournament Friday against Emporia State University and Marymount College.

Crew teams do well at Topeka regatta

By The Collegian Staff

Strong southerly winds and cooperative weather made the Fourth Annual President's Regatta a success for all involved.

The regatta was held on Lake Shawnee in Topeka and featured more than 800 athletes from 24 different universities and rowing clubs around the Midwest including Washburn, Kansas, K-State and Wichita State.

K-State's men's varsity-eight took home the gold in the open 2,000-meter race with a time of 6:05.4, followed by the Kansas A boat, 6:10.0 and the Kansas B boat 6:16.1. Kansas and K-State battled for the lead for much of the race, but in the end KU missed a stroke as the K-State shell raced past to the finish line.

The men's winning time marks the second consecutive week the varsity has set a course record. Last Saturday, K-State set the course record at the Washington University Crew Classic in St. Louis, Mo.

"The men's time of 6:05.4 was a course record," K-State crew coach Don Rose said. "As far as I know, it was also the fastest time a K-State crew has rowed the 2,000-meter in the 25 years of crew at K-State."

K-State picked up its second gold of the day when the women's varsity edged out the St. Paul Rowing Club by two-tenths of a second in the open 400-meter race. K-State rowed a time of 1:20.8, St. Paul was second at 1:21.0 and Kansas came in third at 1:21.8.

"It's nice to see the women having some success," Rose said. "They have been working just as hard as the men, if not harder. That was their first significant win this year."

The K-State women's novice-eight claimed fourth in the open 400-meter dash behind Washburn, Texas and Kansas. The Manhattan High School women's crew placed fifth in the race.

About 350 partake in Taxi Triathlon

By The Collegian Staff

About 350 athletes from 10 states did not let the damp weather dampen their endeavors Sunday morning as they competed in the Third Annual Taxi Triathlon.

Race director Michael Chisam, a member of Theta Xi fraternity, sponsors of the Taxi, said 346 participants took to the pool and roads to test themselves and each other.

The athletes performed three events: a 700 yard swim in the Natatorium, a 14.5 mile bike race and a 3.1 mile run, which started on the K-State campus and finished in the parking lot behind the Nautilus Fitness Center in Aggieville.

Chisam said the number of competitors in this year's event is the most ever and was up almost 100 people from last year's total of 257.

Athletes competed in five divisions; men's; women's; men's team; women's team; and mixed. Winners of each division received a Nike totebag. All entrants, as well as volunteer workers, received t-shirts.

Winners in each division, their times and the number of participants were: men's — Clark Campbell, Lawrence, 1:02:10 (course record) (189); women's — Kristi Newcomb, Lincoln, Nebr., 1:17:20 (46); men's team — Kurt Becker, Jason Lilly, Franic Jakofcich, Manhattan, 1:02:27 (15); women's team — Jan Foresman, Suzanne Milburn, Pam Rogers, 1:20:46 (8); mixed — Robert Wilkerson, Kelly Green, Manhattan, Anne Martin, Leawood, 1:08:57 (14).

Chisam said mixed teams could be combinations of two males and one female or one male and two females.

Chisam said he thinks the primary reason for the increased number of participants in the Taxi was increased publicity. He said ads were placed in two magazines — "Triathlete" and "Triathlon Today."

Chisam said preparations for Sunday's competition began in December. He said 45 Theta Xi's, as well as about 55 volunteers from the community, helped run the event.

Proceeds from the triathlon will go to Multiple Sclerosis, the national philanthropy of Theta Xi chapters.

'Weekend warriors' find Fridays, Saturdays rewarding

Commentary

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

All hail the weekend warrior, the student or faculty member who throws caution to the wind two days a week in pursuit of athletic excellence and a sense of enjoyment he or she isn't likely to find anywhere else.

I'm one of those weekend warriors, and though I don't profess to be a great athlete, I enjoy being on the field and competing and sharing some experiences and a great deal of fun.

I played in our fraternity's regional softball tournament this past weekend as a member of our chapter's alumni team. It was a weekend I'll long remember.

I'm not going to bore you with the details, except to say my team went 1-2 in its three games and I was named to the all-tournament team (Lord only knows how or why).

My fun was tempered a bit by an injury to my right ankle — I still can't slide worth a darn, and now I can't walk as a result — but it was great being a part of such a worthwhile event.

The tourney benefitted the March of Dimes, so I guess an injury to my ankle, in the overall scheme of things, is pretty insignificant.

Sunday afternoon a different breed of weekend warriors took to the streets and water in Manhattan as participants in the Taxi Triathalon.

Those who can compete in this grueling event, which consists of running, bicycling and swimming sections, earn the utmost respect from a guy like me who struggles to run one lap around City Park.

What prompts competitors in such an event to put themselves through the rigors involved in these competitions? Though I've never competed in a triathalon, some of the same reasons I play softball probably are the same reasons others run, swim, golf, row, bike or play tennis.

Those reasons include:

■ A chance to live out fantasies: I know when I'm at the plate in a softball game, I'm trying my best to accomplish those things I've watched my favorite major league baseball players do for years. When someone puts a long birdie putt in the hole on the 18th green at their local golf course, chances are their minds might wander a bit and find them on the green at Augusta National winning the Masters.

■ A chance to spend time with friends: Although competing in a triathalon is basically an individual endeavor, participating in a softball game, a round of golf, a tennis match or even a regatta is an excellent opportunity to get together with friends old and new and just have a great time. Sharing similar experiences makes friendships closer.

■ A chance to keep in fair to good physical condition: Though I don't claim to be in great shape, I'm in a lot better condition because of my intramural sports participation than I would be otherwise. In a day and age when physicians are startled by the overall poor physical conditioning of America's youth, any activity is bound to help the participant increase the quality of his life and most probably his lifespan.

■ A chance to put aside day-to-day worries and just have fun: When an athlete is on the field, course, court, etc., he or she likely forgets the pressures of the classroom or the job. In this dog-eat-dog world where competitiveness leads to an almost cut-throat mentality, the chance for some friendly competition that gets the mind off such circumstances is truly welcome and a great deal of fun.

If those of us who are weekend warriors can just remember that our time spent competing isn't going to greatly change the face of the Earth in the overall scheme of things, and can display good sportsmanship (something I've got a bit of difficulty with from time to time), and can just have fun while we're out there, then there isn't a more rewarding way to spend a weekend.

Ask anyone among us how much fun he or she is having, or ask me for that matter. I'm the one with the bum ankle who can't wait to be well enough to hit the field for yet another weekend of fun.

Cheerleading squad, new Willies selected

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

As of now, it's the only K-State team that has a pretty good idea as to what it will look like next fall.

No, it's not the football team, or the basketball team. "It" is the K-State cheerleading squad.

Scott Johnson, assistant instructor of animal sciences and industry and cheerleading adviser, said the 1988-89 squad, selected Friday night in Ahearn Field House, will have a combination of experience and talent.

"Right now we've got a lot of guys who are making a return and that will be good for the stunts," Johnson said. "On the girls' side we have a lot of talented individuals and that will help our tumbling quite a bit.

"It's a well rounded group," he added. "Right now we don't have them divided into varsity and junior varisty. We've got to see how they develop the next few weeks and then we'll make the decision (as to who get's placed on varsity and junior varsity)."

Returning members of the men's varsity squad are Bill Criqui, Allen Hettich, Jimmy Houck, Charles Tucker and Mike Whitney. Members of this year's junior varsity squad selected for the 1988-89 squad are Heath Perry and Brian Pratt. Newcomers to the squad are Rodney Brown, Dirk Fankhauser and David Swalander.

Returning members of the women's varsity squad are Danyel LaVergne and Megan O'Hara. Jill Kottler returns from the junior varsity squad. Newcomers are Angie Boeve, Tarra Calgren, Mary Kunkel, Kristi Menges, Megan Porter and Brenda Paquette.

Criteria for being selected for the men's squad was overall appearance, jumps and tumbling ability, fight song routine and partner stunts.

Women were judged on the same categories, plus one dance routine done to the Wabash Cannonball.

"It's a well rounded group."
—Scott Johnson

Tryouts for Willie the Wildcat were also held Friday. This year's Willie auditions were done in an environment different from that of last year. Tryouts were conducted in front of grade school gym classes at Amanda Arnold Elementary School.

"In that environment, we could see how each reacted to a different situation and how they composed themselves," Johnson said.

The new Willie's identity, however, will remain a secret.

"We had four good tryouts this year," Johnson said. "All were pretty even in talent and the way they performed.

"They were all so good," he added. "We just couldn't say no to any of them. We're going to have a varsity and junior varsity Willie and have two alternates."

Track teams second at UCLA meet

From Wire Reports

The Wildcat track squads traveled to California on Saturday to take on the men's national defending champion, UCLA, and another top contender, Houston. Coach John Capriotti knew the competition would be tough but that his teams could compete with that level of competition, and compete they did.

The men finished behind UCLA, 89 to 53, but finished ahead of Houston, which scored 36 points. The women also finished between the two schools, as UCLA scored 89 points, K-State had 40 and Houston had 39.

Ten-time All-American Kenny Harrison competed for the first time this outdoor season and came away with wins in the triple and long jumps and met both national qualifying marks.

The men also came away with first-place finishes by Doug Brown in the javelin, Brad Speer in the high jump, Jeff Reynolds in the 400 meters and Ron Stahl in the two-mile and 1500 meters. Stahl and Reynolds are undefeated in three meets this season.

For the women, Felicia Curry won the triple jump and also surpassed the national qualifying mark.

Other K-State women who finished first were Jacque Struckhoff in the 3,000 meters, Kim Kilpatrick in the 400 meter hurdles and DeDe Henderson in the high jump.

92nd marathon today in Boston

Most of top Americans not competing in race

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Ibrahim Hussein of Kenya, winner of three consecutive marathons, and Juma Ikangaa of Tanzania, ranked No. 1 in the world in 1986, could give Africa its first victor ever in the Boston Marathon today.

Some outstanding African runners have competed in Boston, including 1960 and 1964 Olympic champion Abebe Bikila and 1968 gold medalist Mamo Wolde, both from Ethiopia, along with Ikangaa, but not one has crossed the finish line first.

But that may well change in the 92nd renewal of the event, which begins at noon, EDT.

In addition to Hussein and Ikangaa, the African brigade in the field of 6,607 includes Kenyans Joseph Nzau, Gabriel Kamau, Wilson Waigwa, Sam Sitonik, Joseph Kipsang, Geoffrey Koech and Simon Kilili; Tanzanians Suleiman Nyambui, Gidamis Shahanga, John Burra, Simon Robert, Agapius Masong, Alfredo Shahanga, Zakariah Barie and Filbert Bayi, and Moroccan Nechadi el Mustafa.

Most of the top Americans are sitting out to prepare for the Olympic trials, leaving the challenge to Steve Jones of Wales; Geoff Smith of Britain; John Treacy of Ireland; Gelindo Bordin, Orlando Pizzolato and Gianni Poli of Italy; Rodolfo Gomez and Jose Gomez of Mexico; Tommy Ekblom and Martti Vainio of Finland, and Hideki Kita and Tomoyuki Taniguchi of Japan.

Marathon organizers, hoping to keep the race at a high quality, vigorously pursued a strong international field, after being rejected in a bid to host the U.S. Olympic Trials.

Not only was the search successful, but the organizers induced some national federations to use the race as their Olympic trials or part of their selection process. Those agreeing were Britain, Finland, Kenya, Tanzania, Mexico and Italy.

The U.S. is holding its men's trials April 24 at Jersey City, N.J., and its women's trials May 1 at Pittsburgh.

"Boston has an Olympic-quality field," said David D'Alessandro, senior vice president of John Hancock Financial Services, which entered a 10-year, $10 million sponsorship agreement with the Boston Athletic Association in 1986. The BAA has conducted the world's oldest marathon since 1897.

The women's field is not nearly as deep.

Portugal's Rosa Mota, the defending champion, 1987 world champion and ranked No. 1 in the world, is a prohibitive favorite, with 43-year-old Priscilla Welch of Great Britain, winner of the New York City Marathon last year, expected to be her closest challenger.

It looks like an unpredictable race.

The Africans are notorious for trying to break the field early and running extremely fast over the first half of the 26-mile, 385-yard course, which begins in the little town of Hopkinton and ends in the center of Boston, near Copley Square.

Jones and Smith cannot afford to lose to each other. They will be vying for the final place on the British Olympic team, and the one who performs best will get it.

Detroit beats Kansas City, 8-6

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — Chet Lemon credits his switch from center field to right for his fast start in 1988.

Lemon extended his hitting streak to all 10 Detroit games, driving in two runs and scoring twice and leading the Tigers to an 8-6 victory Sunday over the Kansas City Royals.

"Right field is less demanding," said Lemon, who made the switch after the Tigers acquired Gary Pettis in an offseason trade. "It lends itself to letting you concentrate on hitting.

"That's not to say it's less demanding. But center field here probably is the largest in baseball. It takes a lot of time and preparation to play center field in this park."

Lemon, whose best year in 13 major league seasons was .318 in 1979 for the Chicago White Sox, hasn't hit over .300 since 1981. He hit .277 last year and has a .277 lifetime average. He's hitting .378 with four RBI, two game-winners, so far in 1988.

"You could see it coming a little bit in spring training," Detroit batting coach Vada Pinson said. "Maybe the change to right helped.

"I remember when I was traded to the St. Louis Cardinals in 1969, they had Curt Flood and I was moved to right field. I found all I really had worry about was going into the right field wall."

Jeff Robinson, 1-1, allowed three runs on four hits over 6⅔ innings. Three of the four hits off him were solo homers, two by George Brett and one by Jamie Quirk. Brett also drove in a run in the eighth with a single and had three RBI.

Don Heinkel, Willie Hernandez and Mike Hennaman finished up for Robinson. Henneman worked the final 1 1-3 innings for his fourth save.

Mark Gubicza, 2-1, gave up five runs on seven hits in four innings for Kansas City.

"We just didn't pitch the ball very well," Kansas City manager John Wathan said. "And the home runs didn't come with anybody on. That's what, five in two games, all solo?"

And the Royals lost both games.

"Our bullpen is trying," Wathan said. "Shoot, they're human. But there's way too many balls and not enough strikes, that's for sure."

The Royals scored twice with two out in the ninth off Henneman. With one out, Thad Bosley singled, then moved to second on a wild pitch. After Bo Jackson struck out, Quirk doubled, scoring Bosley. Quirk scored on a single by Kurt Stillwell.

Detroit scored three runs in the second and two in the fourth.

Brett's fourth-inning homer, his third, cleared the roof in right field, the first ball out of Tiger Stadium since Kirk Gibson's shot against Milwaukee's Chris Bosio on Sept. 10, 1986. There have been 22 homers hit out of Tiger Stadium, all but two by left-handed hitters.

Brett in select company with roof-clearing homer

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — George Brett joined some select company Sunday when he cleared the Tiger Stadium roof with a home run.

Ted Williams, then a rookie, was the first to hit a ball out of the ballpark on May 4, 1939. It didn't happen again until 1955 when Mickey Mantle connected for the first of three times.

Only 22 homers have cleared the roof since the stadium was rebuilt along its present lines in 1938. Only two people, Harmon Killebrew and Frank Howard, have ever cleared the left field roof. It's 340 feet down the line to left, 325 in right.

Brett's fourth-inning homer, his third of the season and first of two he hit Sunday, was the first ball out of Tiger Stadium since Kirk Gibson's shot against Milwaukee's Chris Bosio on Sept. 10, 1986.

"I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't hit it," said Brett, who stood in the box, watching it go out. "I very seldom watch like that. It felt tremendous. I lost it when it went over the roof. I didn't see it bounce, so I figured it went over.

"I didn't want to stand there too long. I'm not the type to show anybody up."

Professors study water conservation

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

Conservation of water by farmers on the High Plains is the subject of a study being conducted by two geography professors.

Dave Kromm and Steve White received a $50,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to conduct the study as part of the foundation's Rural Resource Program.

The two-year grant, which began March 1, will allow Kromm and White to look at the variety of water conservation practices in three Kansas counties and seven counties in Nebraska, Oklahoma and Texas.

"We've had a series of studies over the last 10 years on the depletion of ground water in the High Plains," Kromm said. "While we have been carrying out this research, one thing we've noticed is that irrigators in different areas of the High Plains are using different techniques to conserve water."

Kromm said that while an irrigator in Kansas might be using one technique to conserve water, an irrigator in Texas may use a different technique and a third irrigator in Nebraska might use still another.

"One might expect that if there is a technology that helps save water, irrigators everywhere would be using it — but they're not," Kromm said.

Both professors agree that there are a number of factors that determine which system a farmer might choose. These factors combine with the large amount of technology available to complicate the issue and may make it difficult to determine why such diversity exists.

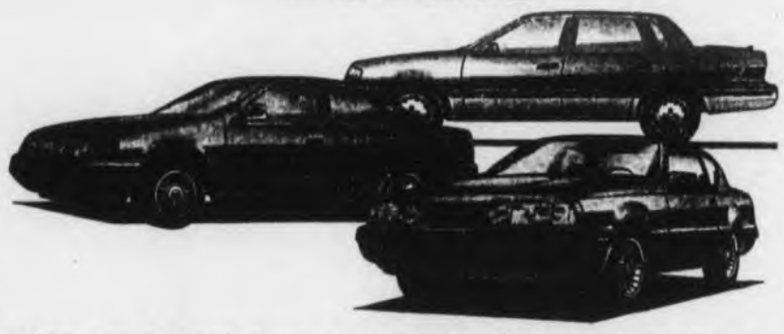
"Obviously there are a lot of factors," White said. "But the management institutions, the type of crop and the amount of rainfall is a factor. All of these combine with the way farmers are receiving their information."

Kromm said information on conservation methods is available to farmers, but many farmers may not be exposed to it.

"Some places you go there are just piles of publications dealing with irrigation technologies — go to other areas and there are very few," he said.

White said that while water conservation may prove to be vital to agriculture on the High Plains in the next few decades, it is also important to the communities of the region.

He said while it is good for municipalities to conserve water, total domestic consumption probably adds up to between 5 percent and 10 percent of the water used in the region.



"There are probably a couple of individual irrigators in western Kansas who use more water than the entire community of Garden City," White said. "The best way to ensure the domestic water supply in the High Plains is to see that irrigators conserve water."

Study focuses on rural women

Obesity problems found

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

There are seven basic personal health practices that influence an individual's health, said Carol Ann Holcomb, associate professor of foods and nutrition, during the Friday Focus on Women series.

The seven practices include sleeping, eating breakfast, eating between meals, getting physical activity, controlling weight, smoking cigarettes and using alcohol.

"Sleep as a health practice is a key risk factor relating to the disease process," Holcomb said.

People who sleep seven or more hours on a regular basis are more likely to have a better health status than those who sleep less than six hours, she said.

"Excessive sleep on a regular basis shows a degree in the relationship in the negative direction. Many of these individuals have some pathology or condition," Holcomb said.

According to a study on weight control of rural Kansas women completed by Holcomb, 33.6 percent of women between the ages of 22 and 34 are obese. This figure increases to 47.3 percent of women who are between the ages of 45 and 55.

Holcomb's study also indicates that 70.5 percent of rural Kansas women over 55 years of age tend to eat breakfast on a more regular basis than women between the ages of 20 and 34.

"This could be due to time restraints put on younger women," she said.

The study also shows that middle-age women exercise more than women between the ages of 22 and 34.

"At about middle age, women have more time on their hands. This is the problem younger women are facing ... finding the time to exercise if they have young children," Holcomb said.

According to a national study completed in 1986, "Health Habits of U.S Adults," only 16.7 percent of rural women get less than six hours of sleep compared to 21.4 percent of all U.S. women, Holcomb said.

"The hard work and peaceful quiet in rural areas carries the stereotype of people doing a lot of physical labor. But this has been reduced due to mechanization," she said.

The two studies show that 65.6 percent of rural Kansas women eat breakfast almost every day, compared to 56.4 percent on the national average.

Eating breakfast on a daily basis produces a more favorable health status compared to those who often skip breakfast, Holcomb said.

Only 16.8 percent of rural women are physically active compared to 21.9 percent of all U.S. women.

"In rural areas there is no strong tax base for bike trails, playgrounds, or health and fitness centers like in urban communities," Holcomb said. "But everyone can walk. Getting people into walking clubs or walking activities might be the approach."

When drinking practices were studied, 46.9 percent of rural Kansas women reported to have more than one glass of alcohol each week, compared to an average of 40.3 percent of women nationally.

Alcohol use for women between the ages of 22 and 34 was 73 percent, according to the national study. Middle-age women reported 46 percent.

On the national average, 27.8 percent of women are smokers compared to 14.9 percent of rural Kansas women.

Holcomb began researching for her study on rural Kansas women in 1984. Her research was funded by the Agricultural Research and Experiments Station.

Students reconstruct system

New parts designed

By Jeff Stead
Collegian Reporter

A team of K-State electrical and computer engineers are working with a Topeka company to redesign a therapeutic ultrasound system.

The four-person team is working in cooperation with Physio Technology Inc., a medical equipment manufacturer in Topeka, and the Kansas Technology Enterprise Corporation on a new design that will replace certain system modules that are now being imported from a company in Europe, said Stephen Dyer, associate professor of electrical and computer engineering.

The main use of ultrasound in medicine is in treating soft tissue injuries by heating the area, which speeds up the healing process, he said.

The new design is intended to be smaller, more lightweight and allow for the finished instrument to be calibrated faster by using a microcomputer, a process which before took a technician several hours to do, Dyer said.

Physio Technology Inc. decided to redesign the system's modules for economical and technological reasons.

"Our number one priority is to improve the system," said Chris Castel, executive vice president of Physio Technology Inc. "We would like to obtain technological excellence."

By having manufacturing under his company's control, he said the company would no longer have to import while the value of the dollar continues to fluctuate on the European market.

More than 20 percent of the modules for the ultrasound instrument are now imported, but when the new design is finished it will be built entirely in Topeka, Castel said. Having the module manufactured in Topeka will create about 25 new jobs.

The team from K-State consists of Dyer, Ruth Dyer, assistant professor; Richard Gallagher, professor; and Norm Mortensen, graduate student, all in electrical and computer engineering.

The team started work on the project in January and are contracted to be finished by mid-August.

Physio Technology Inc., contributed almost $69,000 to the project, in addition to $45,885 contributed by KTEC.

Slattery to discuss hopper car shortage

By The Collegian Staff

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., is scheduled to participate in a public hearing on grain quality issues by the U.S. House of Representatives' Subcommittee on Wheat, Soybeans and Feed Grains at 9 a.m. today in Union Room 212.

Slattery is also scheduled to meet with independent grain shippers and representatives from the Union Pacific Railroad at 2:30 p.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room to discuss the current hopper car shortage.

Prior to the public meeting, Slattery will hold a news conference at 2:15 p.m. in the council room of the Union.

In a news release from Slattery's office, the 2nd District congressman said about the covered hopper car shortage: "This complex issue will require shippers, railroads and suppliers to work together to reach a long-term solution that is fair and equitable to all parties."

Soviet Union accepts U.S. weapons stance

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union has notified the United States it accepts the American argument that futuristic weapons carried by intermediate-range missiles are outlawed under a superpower treaty awaiting Senate ratification, a U.S. official said Sunday.

The concession seems to remove concerns that had been raised by the Senate Armed Services Committee about weaponry using exotic technologies such as lasers, plasma or ion beams.

Although the panel has endorsed the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty, Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., on Thursday described the futuristic weapons matter as a possible "hole in the treaty" that had to be filled before he would bring the pact to a vote of the full Senate.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze accepted the U.S. position in a letter delivered Friday night by Soviet Ambassador Yuri Dubinin to Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne L. Ridgway, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

killed three Israelis in southern Israel's Negev desert last month.

Former intelligence officials and Israeli newspapers openly compared the assassination to Israel's April 1973 raid on PLO offices in Beirut in which three top PLO officials were killed.

They also noted Israel, not rival PLO factions or Arab regimes, had the ability to mount such a sophisticated operation 1,500 miles from its shores.

Rafael Eytan, who resigned as head of a defense ministry intelligence unit after the Jonathan Pollard spy scandal in 1985, said, "there is no doubt there is a parallel" between the attacks.

The 1973 slaying was aimed at Ali Hassan Salameh, known as Abu Hassan, the PLO's security and intelligence chief who later died in a car bomb attack. Instead, al-Wazir's predecessor, Kamel Adwan, Fatah spokesman Kamal Nasser and Mohammed Abu Najjar, a key figure in the Black September terror group, were killed.

Three Israelis involved in the 1973 raid now hold senior security positions.

Israeli experts say al-Wazir was responsible for a list of bloody attacks such as the 1975 takeover of the Savoy Hotel in Tel Aviv in which 11 hostages were slain and a March 1978 bus hijacking in which 33 Israelis were killed and 82 wounded.

PLO

The death toll from violence that swept the occupied lands after al-Wazir's slaying rose to 17. A 13-year-old boy and a 23-year-old man died Sunday from bullet wounds inflicted the day before, according to Palestinian sources.

The Israeli military command said the reports were being checked.

Saturday's death toll was the worst in a single day since the Arab uprising began Dec. 8. At least 166 Palestinians and two Israelis have been killed.

As PLO chief Yasser Arafat's No. 2 man, Al-Wazir supervised military operations in the territories occupied by Israel since the 1967 Middle East War.

As main military planner for the PLO's mainstream Fatah, he was held responsible by Israel for a list of bloody terror attacks, including a bus hijacking last month in which three Israelis were killed.

low-lying land ... east and west of McDowell Creek Road should be used for agriculture or similar unintensive uses because of its location in the 100-year floodplain."

Wedel said the reason he made the recommendation to the board to rezone the Guliford tract was mainly because the area is less than 1 acre in size and because no other use exists for the land.

"This doesn't conform to the plan, but in this particular case, the situation does overshadow it," he said. "What is a reasonable use of that property out there? It won't be sold for a residential area."

Wedel said the $40,000 survey was only a guide.

"It is not set in concrete," he said. "You've got to weigh it against all the other factors."

Wedel said another possible recommendation would be to down-zone the entire area. But, he said, down-zoning is controversial and doesn't happen often.

"It's just a can of worms," he said. "I just don't see that happening. If we're not going to do that, then why not rezone Gulifords?"

Wedel said he didn't blame residents for wanting the asphalt plant out of the area.

"But it's not up to me," he said.

Fina wrote a letter to FEMA representative Kay Carter April 8 requesting "immediate attention" to the matter.

"The Guliford land is of questionable agricultural value," he said. "The only way for them to sell the land is if it is rezoned heavy industry and sold to Shilling Asphalt Co. ... The only apparent solution would be for the county to purchase the land and retain its agricultural zoning, rather than compound the already existing misuse of floodplain land."

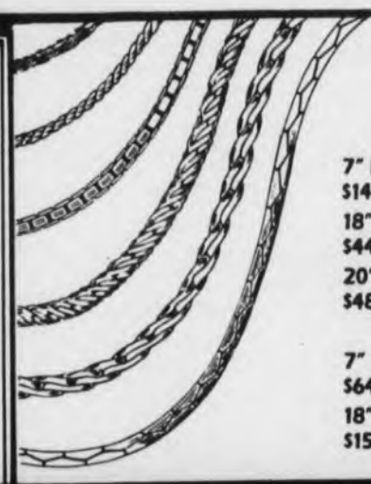
Carter said Thursday that the rezoning controversy for the most part is the county's problem. But, she said, when her office receives complaints of violations, FEMA does get involved.

Carter said because Shilling Construction Inc. is located in an identifiable floodway, rezoning it to heavy industry was not a good idea.

"I have real problems with the county doing that," she said. "Just because it was done before the area was identified as a floodway doesn't mean it's all right to do it now. When a floodway is identified, it is expected to be left open from the time it is identified."

For the time being, Carter said FEMA is in the process of investigating the matter.

"We can't force the county to do anything about pollution and those kinds of problems, but we do regulate floodway problems," she said. "If they do go ahead and rezone it, we'll keep an eye on them.



"If we find the county is ignoring regulations and not developing the floodplain according to regulations, we put them on probation. If we find they don't comply, the county will lose its floodplain insurance."

Israelis convict Nazi war criminal

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Retired Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk was convicted Monday of Nazi war crimes by an Israeli court that said there was no doubt he was "Ivan the Terrible," a sadistic death camp guard who ran gas chambers that killed 850,000 Jews.

The three-judge court convicted Demjanjuk of the four counts against him: war crimes, crimes against the Jewish people, crimes against humanity and crimes against persecuted people.

Applause broke out in the courtroom when the verdict was announced, and a judge admonished the spectators.

Demjanjuk, 68, listened to the guilty verdict from a cot in a cell next to the courtroom. Six police officers had carried him there feet first after he said he was unable to sit down because of a back injury.

After the verdict, Demjanjuk slowly walked to a police van and told reporters: "I'm very good. I'm an innocent man. I will appeal and I'm sure I will win."

"This is ridiculous what happened hayom (today)," said Demjanjuk, using the Hebrew word for today.

Surrounded by 18 guards, Demjanjuk walked with his head bowed and his hands clasped. Two guards supported his arms. He was not handcuffed.

Demjanjuk was the second person to be convicted of war crimes in Israel. Adolf Eichmann, architect of Adolf Hitler's "Final Solution" for the extermination of European Jewry, was hanged in 1962, the only person to have been executed in Israel's 40-year history.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, who lived in suburban Cleveland before his extradition to Israel in 1986, could face the death penalty when he is sentenced April 25. Observers have said he would probably receive life in prison.

Presiding Judge Dov Levine said the court had determined "decisively and without hesitation or doubt" that Demjanjuk was "'Ivan the Terrible,' the operator of gas chambers."

"The accused wasn't an ordinary guard who just obeyed orders, but fulfilled a central position in the Treblinka death camp. With his own hands, he took part in the murders of masses of human beings," Levine said.

Demjanjuk was accused of operating gas chambers that killed 850,000 Jews at Treblinka in Nazi-occupied Poland in 1942 and 1943.

Halfway through the 12-hour reading of the 450-page opinion, Demjanjuk's relatives left the courtroom in protest and did not return to hear the verdict.

Demjanjuk's 22-year-old son, John Jr., said the judges were biased.

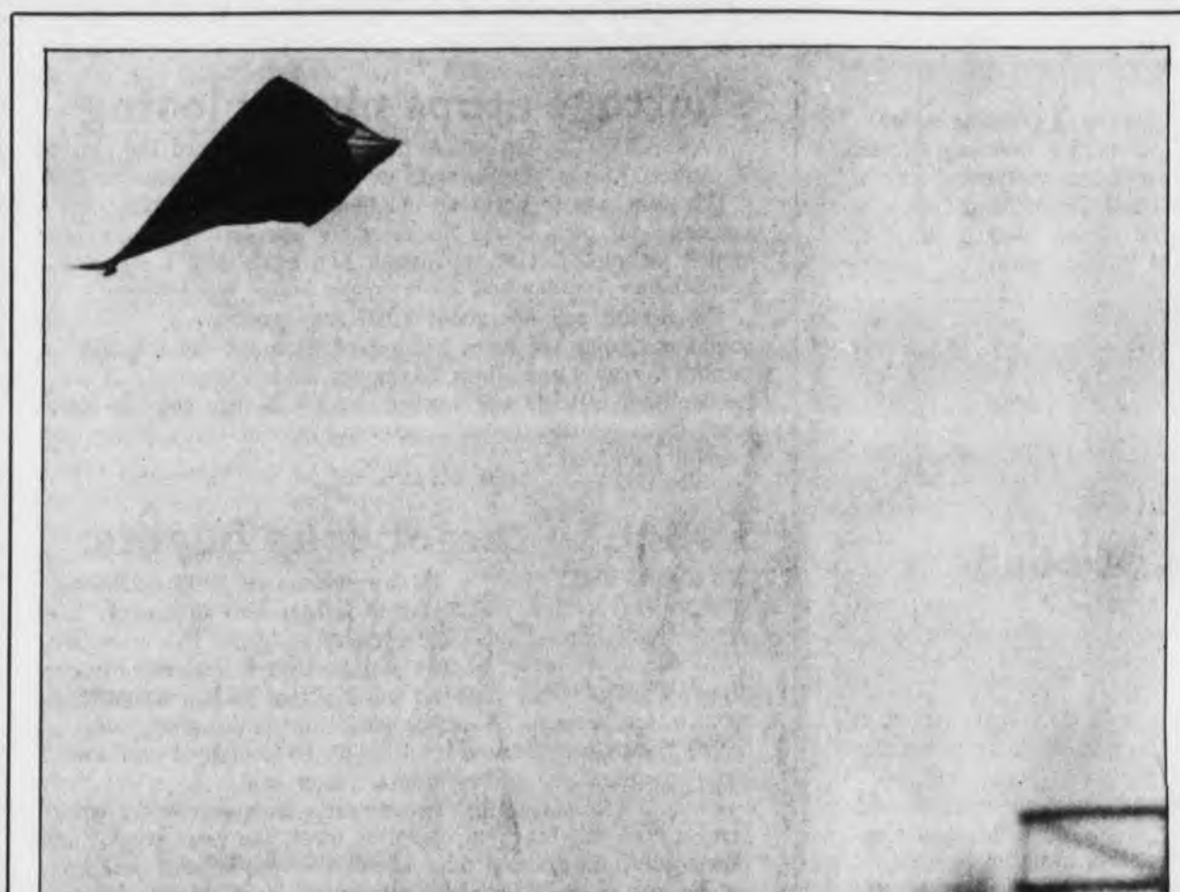
"As far as I'm concerned, this was nothing more than a Soviet show trial. Whenever one of our witnesses came on, they got the hammer," he said.

"This is going to go down in history as the most lopsided case ever conducted anywhere in the world," said Demjanjuk's son-in-law, Ed Nishnic, who raised $650,000 for the defense.

Defense attorney John Gill said the court automatically rejected defense arguments.

Jewish leaders praised the verdict.

"The trial was an affirmation of law and civility in response to the barbarity of the Holocaust," said Harry Wall, director of the Israel branch of the B'nai Brith Anti-Defamation League, a major American-Jewish organization.



Demjanjuk maintained his innocence, saying he was a victim of mistaken identity and was not the infamous Treblinka guard who would stand near the gas chambers and strike prisoners with a metal bar or bayonet as they went to their deaths in 1942 and 1943.

The defense had challenged as unreliable the testimony of five Holocaust survivors who identified Demjanjuk as "Ivan."

Levine indicated the court gave great weight to the survivors' testimony.

"These experiences are deeply ingrained on their memories, the horrors are a deep part of them, the sights are before their eyes and the stories are true and accurate," Levine said.

Defense attorneys also argued that "Ivan" was killed in a prisoner revolt at Treblinka in August 1943.

Zoning debated

Residents protest vote

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

Despite the protests of one member and some angry residents, the Urban Area Planning Board passed a rezoning petition Monday night for a tract of land southeast of downtown Manhattan.

The petition was a request by Lazelle and Virginia Guliford to rezone a small tract of residential land from agriculture to heavy industry. The tract is sandwiched along the Kansas River between Shilling Construction Inc. and Manhattan Concrete Services. Both businesses are located along McDowell Creek Road next to the Kansas River.

The matter went before the board at its April 4 meeting, but was tabled because of a mix-up in notifying area residents about the petition.

At the April 4 meeting, several residents from the area complained because they said the company that wants to purchase the Guliford property — Shilling Construction — was polluting their air and failing to follow floodplain regulations.

Before the petition was tabled, however, Riley County Planner Monty Wedel recommended the area be rezoned.

Board members Monday night said while rezoning the tract was not consistent with Riley County floodplain regulations, the small size of the tract — less than 1 acre — made it an exception.

"This area has been deemed by FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency) to be unhealthy for heavy industry," said Chairwoman Eleanor Brent. "However, we have an unusual situation here. In all fairness to the people who own it, there isn't much else they can do with the land."

Board member Ray Weisenburger, professor of regional and community planning, did not agree.

"The planning commission by law is to uphold the regulations," he said. "I don't see how we can in any clear conscience make this kind of

U.S. Naval forces attack Iranians in Gulf

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — American forces destroyed two of Iran's Persian Gulf oil platforms Monday, sank or damaged four attack boats and disabled two frigates that fired missiles at American planes, U.S. officials reported.

Iranian naval forces responded with attacks on Arab oil facilities; U.S., British and Cypriot commercial vessels, and on a helicopter chartered by the NBC television network.

No American casualties were reported, but Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci said a Cobra attack helicopter with two crewmen was late in returning to a Navy cruiser and a search had begun.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, in a dispatch Monday night, said Iranian warships "in a heroic clash with the aggressor American helicopters in the Persian Gulf shot down one of them Monday afternoon."

The agency, monitored in Britain and Cyprus, did not elaborate.

Monday's conflict between the United States and Iran was the most intense since President Reagan ordered last summer that Navy forces be strengthened in the gulf, where Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980.

Washington called destruction of the oil platforms a "measured response" to the explosion of a mine, allegedly planted by Iran, that blew a hole in an American frigate last week and wounded 10 sailors.

Reagan said Monday's operations were a warning to Iran that "we will protect our ships and, if they threaten us, they'll pay a price. We undertook this action to make sure the Iranians have no illusions about the cost of irresponsible behavior."

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said there were deaths and injuries aboard the platform but it did not say how many.

In the ground war between Iran and Iraq, the Baghdad government claimed it regained most of the southern Faw peninsula that Iranian forces captured more than two years ago, including the town of Faw. Iran claimed U.S. helicopter gunships fired at Iranian troops in the area.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Fred Hoffman denied the Iranian claims. No U.S. military forces have been involved with Iraqi units, he said.

On Reagan's instructions, at about 9 a.m., two groups of Navy warships struck the Iranian oil platforms Sassan and Sirri-D, 100 miles apart in the southern Persian Gulf.

They gave the Iranians advance warning to evacuate the platforms, which have been used as speedboat bases for attacks on neutral shipping. Reagan ordered the attacks as retaliation for the mine that holed the frigate USS Samuel B. Roberts on Thursday.

Both platforms were destroyed and left ablaze, one by naval gunfire and the other by explosives placed on it, according to statements in Washington.

The Iranian news agency said U.S. warships hit the Sassan platform at 9 a.m. and, 23 minutes later, the Nasr platform off nearby Sirri Island.

Sirri Island is one of the makeshift oil export terminals in southern waters to which Iran ferries oil from its main Kharg Island terminal in the northern gulf. Kharg has been a frequent target of Iraqi air raids.

The Iranian agency said Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati wrote a letter of protest to U.S. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar that said, in part: "Iran will never submit to the policy of violence and intimidation, and will definitely respond to the cowardly U.S. attacks."

After the U.S. attacks, Iranian gunboats went on a rampage in the southern gulf. They attacked oil facilities and commercial vessels at the Mubarak oil field off the Sharjah emirate, and hours later assaulted a Cypriot freighter leaving the United Arab Emirates with a load of fertilizer.

Carlucci said a Navy helicopter was fired upon during the raid on the platforms but not hit.

Slattery speaks in favor of action, desires lower visibility in region

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

In light of attacks on six Iranian vessels Monday in the Persian Gulf, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., said although it is the right and responsibility of the United States to keep those waters open, it is important America maintain its visibility in the region.

"There is no reason why U.S. taxpayers foot the total expense of the operations (in the Persian Gulf)," he said. "We can decrease our visibility by getting our allies — Great Britain, France, Germany, Japan and Korea — to become more directly involved."

Slattery, who was on campus Monday to attend a congressional subcommittee field hearing and to conduct a public meeting, said countries which have a more immediate dependence on oil shipped through the Persian Gulf should help carry the burden of keeping international waters open.

Should the Gulf oil sources be cut off, the United States would lose only 5 percent of its oil imports, Slattery said. However, Europe and Japan would have to compete for other sources.

Slattery did not comment on President Reagan's motives in the actions launched Monday in the Persian Gulf.

"I don't know if the action that we took on Robbins was an act of escalation on the part of Iran. The president has access to information I don't," Slattery said.

Last week, the frigate USS Samuel B. Roberts was struck by a mine, wounding 10 sailors. The Reagan administration contends the mine belonged to Iran.

Power outage darkens millions

MONTREAL — A widespread power failure Monday night blacked out Quebec and parts of New Brunswick province, affecting millions of people including some in scattered districts in Maine and Vermont.

Hydro Quebec, the provincial power utility, said the power outage began at 8:09 p.m. EDT.

Among the blackout victims was television coverage of the Adams Division final game between the Montreal Canadiens and the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League. The game at the Montreal Forum was interrupted in the first period but then continued with the use of emergency lights. Montreal won 5-2.

Hydro Quebec spokesman Jean-Guy Ouimet said the breakdown began on a power line between Churchill Falls, Labrador, and the Arnaud generating station near Sept-Iles, Quebec, but the cause was was not known.

"The problem came from the Churchill Falls power house. For some reason the power stopped coming" and that caused an overload on other lines, he said.

Power was being restored in one area at a time, he added.

Cities on the New York side of the border were not affected because the state does not operate on the same system, according to a spokesman for New York State Electric and Gas.

In Montreal, street lights and traffic signals blinked out and passengers were rescued from stalled subway trains.

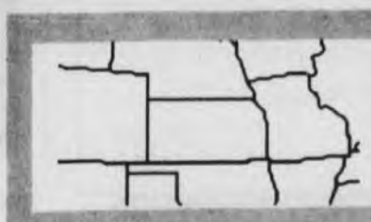
Baby eats 2 lines of cocaine

SALINAS, Calif. — A woman was arrested for investigation of child endangerment after her 14-month-old daughter reportedly licked up a small amount of cocaine from a nightstand, investigators said Monday.



Debra Rodriguez, 29, was released on $5,000 bail after being booked for the endangerment charge and a count of possessing cocaine, police said.

The infant was taken into protective custody, authorities said.

Rodriguez was taken into custody at Natividad Medical Center on Saturday after her daughter had her stomach pumped.

Police said the woman put the baby in bed with her after the child woke up crying on Saturday. When the mother woke up again a half-hour later, the baby had white powder on her mouth and was acting oddly, according to police reports.

Rodriguez reportedly told police she realized "two lines" of cocaine were missing from her nightstand. The mother told police she gave her baby whiskey and lemonade to calm her down before calling the emergency 911 number.

Kansas City fires kill two

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Two Kansas City residents were killed in separate house fires Monday, authorities said.

Charles E. Williams, 8, died in a fire that began about 10:45 a.m. at his grandmother's home, fire officials said.

His sister, Sharinga Williams, and a Kansas City firefighter were also injured in the blaze, said Harold M. Knabe, fire department spokesman.

Sharinga, 5, was reported in critical condition Monday at a Kansas City hospital. Fireman Dave True was treated for burns on his face, neck and chest, and released Monday afternoon.

Mark G. Barnett, 34, of Kansas City, was killed in a separate house fire that began about 2:40 a.m., Knabe said.

Barnett was found in the rear of the house and apparently died of smoke inhalation, he said. His mother, Kathleen Barnett, was taken to a hospital but did not require treatment.

Knabe said the cause of the fire was listed as careless handling of flammable materials.

Shortage stops plant closing

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A parts shortage delayed the closing of General Motors' Leeds plant in Kansas City for another day.

The plant was to begin an indefinite shutdown Monday, but a shortage of parts closed the assembly line early and left some models incomplete. GM spokesman Ken Euritt said Leeds will be operating Tuesday and for a couple hours Wednesday.

The closing will idle about 1,700 auto workers.

GM is closing the plant because of poor sales of the Oldsmobile Firenzas and Buick Skyhawks made exclusively at Leeds. Plant officials and workers have said they hope to convince the automaker to build other vehicles at Leeds rather than close it permanently.

Police to target drug buyers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A new undercover drug operation targeting buyers gets under way in Kansas City this week, Police Chief Larry Joiner said Monday.

"We've never really taken a serious look at the user of drugs. It seems every time we put a dealer in jail, someone replaces him because of the demand," the police chief said.

The undercover operation will begin on the city's east side with surveillance of a drug house, Joiner said.

Under the new plan, the department's undercover drug enforcement unit will begin an operation much the same way it does now against dealers and drug houses — with officers making an undercover purchase and obtaining a search warrant for the house.

But the officers will observe suspected buyers arriving at the house, arrest them after they drive away and confiscate their vehicles. "It'll make people a little more apprehensive about going to get drugs," said East Patrol Capt. Richard Easley.

Joiner said the operation will be expanded into other areas of the city if it is successful on the east side.

Memorial offers scholarship

Corporate matching funds have helped create a $6,000 scholarship to benefit a high school graduate enrolled in the College of Engineering.

The William Karl Lockhart Memorial Scholarship has been created by Herman Keller and his wife of McKinney, Texas, the honoree's daughter and son-in-law.

Lockhart, who died in 1984 at age 81, was an engineer with Union Switch & Signal. He received his Bachelors of Science in electrical engineering from K-State in 1924. Matching funds will be provided by Mobil Oil on a two-to-one basis.

The scholarship will be managed by the KSU Foundation.

Departments to plan course

The departments of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science and Philosophy will cooperate in the development of a model course dealing with ethics.

The Education and Research Foundation of the Associated General Contractors of America has awarded $25,000 to the two departments to conduct the two year project.

Robert Dahl, a professor of architectural engineering, will serve as the project's principal investigator, while Sarah Merrill, a professor of philosophy, will assist.

Hijackers allow hostage to speak

By The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — A man identified as a member of Kuwait's royal family spoke Monday from the hijacked Kuwaiti jetliner and he said he hoped his government yields to the gunmen's demands to end the two-week ordeal.

Most of the brief radio message from the man the hijackers said was Fadel Khaled Al-Sabah was impossible to understand, except for the part about their demand that Kuwait free 17 pro-Iranian prisoners convicted in the 1983 attacks on the U.S. and French embassies in the Persian Gulf sheikdom.

"I hope that Kuwait releases all the prisoners," the man said, speaking in Arabic in a feeble, halting voice. Kuwaiti officials insist they will not give in to the hijackers, who have killed two Kuwaiti passengers.

Three of the approximately 35 people still aboard the Kuwait Airways Boeing 747 that was hijacked April 5 are distant relatives of the emir of Kuwait. Two of those relatives are women.

Hostages released earlier have said al-Sabah is in worse condition than any of the other hostages aboard the jet, describing him as "the most psychologically broken down" and suffering from a stomach ailment.

When the message was read on the plane's radio about 3:10 p.m. (10:10 a.m. EDT), the control tower had trouble understanding it.

"It was not very clear. Could he try to say it once more?" the control tower said in English.

"No, because he doesn't want to speak, but I want to confirm that he is one of the royal family, he is Fadel Al-Sabah," a hijacker responded in English.

Radio conversations Monday made no reference to refueling the plane or leaving Algeria. On Saturday, the gunmen said they wanted fuel to fly elsewhere and commit a "massacre," but Sunday they said they would give Algeria more time to seek a solution. No deadline was announced.

Algerian officials have been acting as mediators between a high-level delegation from Kuwait and the gunmen, boarding the plane several times a day for talks, little of whose substance has been disclosed.

The jumbo jet was hijacked while en route from Bangkok to Kuwait with 112 people aboard, and first diverted to Mashhad in northeastern Iran, where 57 passengers were freed. On April 8, it was flown to Larnaca, Cyprus, where the hijackers killed two passengers and released 13 others. It came to Algiers' Houari Boumedienne Airport on Wednesday.

Panel: poverty hits single moms

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

The second-largest group at the Manhattan Emergency Shelter is single women with children — and the numbers in that group are growing, according to a panelist in the discussion of the "Feminization of Poverty."

Earl Robinson, social worker and life skills coordinator from the shelter, said the largest group is single males.

A three-member panel delivered this year's final Pre-Lecture Forum to a Lou Douglas Lecture Monday night in Union 206.

Poverty is unequally distributed in society, said Jim Ragan, professor of economics and panelist. Ragan defined the poverty rate as the percentage of society below the poverty line. A family's status is one of the factors contributing to that percentage.

"Currently, the poverty rate among households with a single, female (parent) is 34 percent. That is more than triple the overall average for families," he said.

The third panelist, Jacque Gibbons, assistant professor of social anthropology and social work, said people measure poverty differently.

Said Gibbons: "The feminization of poverty is a subject that is very real. Whether the numbers are growing or shrinking depends a lot on (varying) views of the poverty level.

"The reality is how we translate policy into practice on the local level," he said.

Since 1980, the local policy has increased problems for women with children, Gibbons said.

A basic issue of feminine poverty is the government's role in the situation, Ragan said. The concept of government intervention, he said, creates conflicting views on whether it is insufficient or too much.

But Gibbons said the question of intervention is one of philosophy.

"The role of government, whether it is to be increased involvement or decreased involvement, is a philosophical argument," he said.

He said he was afraid the Reagan administration's current focus on building up the nation's defenses and paying the interest on the national debt has prevented it from addressing any large-scale social problems. One of those problems is the single-mother households, he said.

Some people believe the government is more detrimental to feminine poverty than helpful due to "disincentive effects" — loopholes that discourage people from working and encourage them to rely on government funds, Ragan said.

Robinson used a Manhattan woman's situation as an example.

The woman came to the Emergency Shelter from an abusive relationship, drugs and alcohol in another state, he said. She and her four children received $480 from Aid For Dependant Children, a medical card and food stamps.

"This was comfortable for a while, but being on welfare is an extremely humiliating experience. Every cent you have has to be accounted for. Everybody wants to know where it goes," he said.

After earning $75 a month, the woman lost some of those funds. She enrolled in a program through the Social Rehabilitation Service, obtained a job and began earning $540 a month. Because of these changes, she lost her AFDC funding and the medical card, he said.

"When you have four children, one of the biggest problems you have is medical coverage. It would have been a big incentive to go back," he said.

This is the same situation many women face daily.

"On the local level, there are more and more poor women here and the numbers are going up," Robinson said.

Gibbons said women have to search to find information on what is available, because the programs are not public knowledge.

Monday-Friday, 6:30-9:30 p.m.
102 Calvin Hall
Instructor Dorothy Friesen

This course will examine the role (s) and influence of women in religion. Students will examine the implications of patriarchy for women in the Bible, Christian thought and history, and in the contemporary religious milieu.

Topics in Comparative History: A History of Arms Control (HIST 563)
3 undergraduate or graduate credits
May 16-June 3
Monday-Friday, 6-9 p.m.
120 Denison Hall
Assistant Professor John Daly

The course will examine the history of arms control prior to the twentieth century and the reasons for a relative lack of success. The course will focus largely on twentieth-century efforts in the area of arms control with concentration on the post-war era, and U.S.-Soviet relations.

Lifeguard Training (PE 114)
2 undergraduate credits
May 16-27
Monday-Friday, 4:30-7:30 p.m.
Natatorium 15B and Pool
Instructor Deb Christie

This course is to help students become aware of the common hazards associated with various types of aquatic facilities and develop the knowledge and skills to eliminate or minimize such hazards, and to provide explanations, demonstrations, practice, and a review of the rescue skills essential for lifeguards.

Special Studies in Music: Clarinet and Saxophone Music(MUSIC 390)
2 undergraduate credits
May 16-27
Monday-Friday, 6-9 p.m.
135 McCain Auditorium
Associate Professor Frank Sidorfsky

Music written or arranged for the clarinet and saxophone will be studied primarily through listening to recorded examples of concert music. Composers and construction of the instruments will also be studied.

Topics in Coaching and Officiating Volleyball (PE 128)
2 undergraduate credits
May 16-27
Monday-Friday, 6-9 p.m.
North Court of Ahearn Field House
Instructor Margo Coleman

This course will provide discussion and demonstration on practical applications for coaching. Topics include the practice session; selecting a team; motivation; conditioning equipment; publicity; scheduling; charting and scouting; developing a philosophy; officiating; and game considerations.

Study Skills Laboratory (EDCI 051)
3 undergraduate credits
May 16-June 3
Monday-Friday, 6-9 p.m.
116 Bluemont Hall
Professor Charles Heerman

Helps the student learn effective study methods, analyze difficulties in reading and studying, and prepare for improved performance in examinations. Improve GPA performance and polish your communications skills for academic and professional success.

Problems in Construction Science: Application of CAD to Engineering, Architecture, and Construction (CNS 544)
2 undergraduate credits
May 16-27
Monday-Friday, 6-9 p.m.
221 Seaton Hall
Associate Professor James F. Goddard

This course will include the basics of operation of AutoCad and its use. It will involve lab applications and students will be required to spend time applying uses in lab. Mastery of the command structure will be the primary goal of this course.

Enrollment
Intersession enrollment will take place in the basement of Farrell Library from April 25 to 27 between 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Additional enrollments will be accepted from 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Monday through Friday at 317 Umberger from April 28 through the first day of classes. Students may also phone or mail in their registration. Phone and mail registrations will be processed only if spaces remain in the class as of 4:00 p.m. on April 25. Tuition is $43 per UG credit and $62 per G credit and is due at the time of enrollment. Call 1-800-432-8222 or 913/532-5566 for more information.

A nation of hypocrisy

Israel's violence exempt from own views

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

"We have to uproot violence as a ... factor that delays a political development. People who use violence will in the end see the limits of violence. It leads nowhere."
—Shimon Peres, Israeli Foreign Minister

Is the above statement the epitome of contradiction, or has hypocrisy become a way of life for Israeli politicians?

Can a nation that has been responsible for the deaths of at least 165 Palestinians since the Arab uprising began on Dec. 8 honestly criticize those who advocate the use of violence? Or what of a nation that condemns terrorism but in turn murders not only angry protesters but important opposition leaders as well? Case in point: the assassination of PLO military leader Khalil al-Wazir before dawn Saturday by nine masked commandos.

Many may justifiably argue that in no way was al-Wazir a pacifist or observer of human rights, and his firm belief in violence as a means to create a Palestinian homeland is a well-established fact. Among other acts of terrorism, al-Wazir was noted to have planned the 1975 takeover of the Savoy Hotel in Tel Aviv in which 11 hostages were slain, as well as the March 1978 bus hijacking in Israel in which 33 people were killed and 82 wounded. But when calculated murder is used to silence an opposing ideology, however destructive it may have proven to be, the most likely outcome is a senseless spiral of unending violence.

Harsh?

Like its good friend South Africa, Israel has yet to realize that murdering opposition leaders, as well as portions of the population, is not an efficient way of solving a problem it has created itself. The question then is whether Israel has any desire at all to seek peace with its Palestinian foes.

Al-Wazir was not the first Palestinian leader to be allegedly murdered by Israeli intelligence, nor probably will he be the last. According to Diana Johnstone in the April 13 issue of In These Times, the familiar argument that Israel cannot achieve peace because there is "no one to talk to" on the Palestinian side is extremely misinformed. Johnstone recounts the assassination of Issam Sartawi on April 10, 1983. Sartawi was a former Palestinian military leader who was killed while trying to establish peace talks between Israel and the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Five years earlier, Said Hammami, the first PLO representative to seek contact with Israelis, was also murdered. Four months after that, on May 4, 1978, Henri Curiel, who had played an important role in bringing Palestinians, Israelis and other Jewish leaders together, was killed in Paris while conducting peace talks.

While it will never be proven who was to blame for these murders, the general consensus is that Israel was the only party that stood to gain from the deaths of peace-seeking Palestinian leaders. Any form of recognition of the movement for an autonomous Palestinian homeland would suggest equality between Israeli Jews and Arabs, an assumption most Israeli leaders seem dedicated not to consider.

A nation that blatantly denies political participation to a sizeable portion of the population, forbids them to fly their flag and meets their protests with live ammunition cannot have equality in mind. The exclusionary measures the Israeli government practices when dealing with Palestinians are not only discriminatory and racist, but serve also to perpetuate the real problem: the inability of Israeli Jews to recognize the validity of a Palestinian claim to a homeland.

By killing al-Wazir, the Israelis not only lowered themselves to his level of terrorist activities, but sparked a new series of strikes and protests, which began Saturday. The weekend's death toll was impressive: Saturday saw the most deaths in one day since the beginning of the Arab uprising. Even worse, the assassination and resultant protests coincided with the beginning of Ramadan, the month-long period of fasting observed by practicing Moslems. The Israelis could probably not have picked a better time to ensure that the slaying of al-Wazir would generate certain chaos in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Israel further alienated Palestinians approximately a week ago by shutting down the Palestine Press services in East Jerusalem, denying the foreign and domestic press reliable information on the Palestinian uprisings. Henceforth, all information will come from military "media information centers," whose objectivity will have to be closely scrutinized. Two Arab-owned magazines were also threatened with being shut down, and curfews were imposed on Nablus as well as 14 other West Bank towns.

Is this the best way to handle the uprisings?

Along with the beatings, killings and other shows of force Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin insists will restore "tranquility" to the area, Israel is gradually distancing itself from any possible solution to the inevitability of a Palestinian homeland. Perhaps the Israeli attitude can be better understood if one substitutes Rabin's "tranquility" for the word he would most likely prefer to use: "submission."

Dukakis has poor ideas about foreign policy

As the governor of Massachusetts, Michael Dukakis has shown his ability to deal with domestic issues. However, domestic policy is only part of the job of president of the United States.

The president is also the key figure in determining the foreign policy of America — a policy that affects the entire world and plays a pivotal role in many of the areas of conflict around the globe.

Recently, Dukakis commented to the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations: "It is critically important that the world understand who is responsible for the turmoil and the violence. It is, regrettably, Arab leaders themselves who have time and again rejected the chance to sit down with Israel and negotiate peace."

After the damage done to U.S. foreign policy by the Reagan administration, the country needs a president who can quickly and skillfully repair that damage. Alienating the Arab world by placing the blame for the violence solely on the Arab leaders isn't sound foreign policy.

In a recent interview with the staff of the New York Daily News, Dukakis incorrectly interpreted Israel's policy torward the PLO. More importantly though, Dukakis stubbornly refused to admit he was mistaken on the issue even when Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y. and a Dukakis supporter, tried to correct him.

No other job in America can completely prepare a person to be the president. Dukakis will have to do a great deal of learning if he is to be a good president, and stubbornly clinging to mistaken ideas is not the way to go about that.

And if Dukakis gets a chance to be president he will also have to learn a great deal about diplomacy. If America is to play a role in negotiating between conflicting groups — such as in the Middle East between the Arabs and Jews — the president must be careful not to alienate either or both sides of the conflict.

14 years can't erase bad memories of Nixon

Sorry, Julie Nixon Eisenhower.

Maybe some individuals are slightly interested in hearing your father espouse his political views, but it's going a bit too far to say "the people" are eager to hear what he has to say.

Eisenhower, daughter of the man who exited the presidency in disgrace 14 years ago, said last weekend that her father's views might not have been welcome a few years ago, but people and their views have since changed.

"It couldn't have happened five years ago," she said. "Now the people are eager to hear his views and he's eager to put them forward."

Although it has been said that time heals all wounds, Richard Nixon will never be disassociated from the Watergate scandal that drove him and many of his aides from office and greatly embarrassed all Americans.

If nothing else, it seems people are interested in the man because he is the epitome of a joke rather than a political expert. His was an administration of shame and will never go down as a hallmark of good government.

Richard Nixon can write his memoirs and tell his grandchildren what a great president he really was. But Americans should not be forcefed the same man who slapped them in the face.

Exchanging ideas

Editor,

I am writing in response to the recent Student Senate decision to fund two philosophical groups: the Coalition for Human Rights and Amnesty International. While they contribute to the exchange of ideas on campus, this is not reason enough to supply them with the hard-earned money of fellow students. Senate appears to have a previously followed rule to fund obviously non-partisan groups or those that provide a distinct service, such as U-LearN.

Groups do not have a fairy godmother in Senate, one who grants their every wish. I would encourage any and all philosophical, political and religious groups to appeal for funds. After all, it's all for the "exchange of ideas."

Ticket sales

Editor,

In regard to Robert Disberger's letter in the April 8 Collegian, there is a way to run basketball ticket sales so it is fair to all. Starting back in 1982, the Student Governing Association formed what was called the Student Basketball Ticket Sales Committee. I was on the committee in 1982-83 and chaired it in 1983-84.

This was back in the years when it was most definitely hard to get tickets. The committee was formed to help everyone obtain tickets, because if you didn't live in a greek house or a dorm, it was hard to get tickets. I found out because I lived off-campus.

The system we set up I feel was a good one and was fair for the most part. We always worked with and helped the single or small numbered groups get tickets. The SBTSC worked in conjunction with the Athletic Ticket Office and K-State Police. Back at this time the majority of reserved tickets were sold by the lottery system, then later the remainder of the reserved and all of the non-reserved tickets were sold to "campers."

We were informed as to when the remaining tickets were to be sold. We generally began camping out the weekend before — after all, it really was fun to camp out. An ad was then placed in the Collegian stating the starting time and date, along with the rules and regulations, as follows:

One, one person may hold up to five numbers while camping out; two, no roll-calls were to be made between the hours of 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. (this way no one was missing any classes — unless they wanted to); three, there was a 15-minute grace period and if the person holding those numbers wasn't there, that person was bumped; four, on the day of the ticket sales everyone wanting a ticket had to be there; five, if there were only a few people wanting tickets, we'd help find them a tent and help group them so that no one had to camp the entire time; six, if the weather reached a certain temperature, we had the right to disband the line and start where we left off when the weather was better.

This system seemed to work well when we used it, and I would be more than happy to work with the present committee as an alumni adviser. I think students are an important part of basketball, and everything should be done to make it fair. I was strongly disheartened, to say the least, when I saw that one person could purchase 20 tickets. I feel that however the system was determined, they were not thinking of all the individuals wishing to purchase tickets.

Date rape

Editor,

I am writing concerning the date rape occurring to K-State women students. Twenty-five percent of all college women have been victims of rape or attempted rape and almost 90 percent of them knew their assailants, according to an article about a study conducted by Ms. Magazine in its October 1985 issue, using a nationally representative sample of 35 schools.

There are 7,717 female students at K-State, according to information obtained by U-LearN. Of this number, 1,930 K-State women have been victims of rape or attempted rape, according to the averages presented in this study.

We, as students, can help cut down on the number of date rapes that occur on the K-State campus by educating ourselves and our friends about this problem on our campus, by volunteering our time to speak about this issue to campus groups, and by encouraging anyone we know who has been through the tragedy of a rape or date rape to seek help and support from our own Women's Resource Center.

Incredible irony

Editor,

I would like to take objection, once again, to the Collegian's self-absorbed method of manipulating our student-funded newspaper for your own highly over-assessed "news."

The last example of this — besides your constant, overstated dribble on the editorial page — is your article "Editors selected for 1988-89" in Wednesday's Collegian. You used an extensive number of column inches of valuable news space to spotlight the new editors of your sister publication, the Royal Purple.

This type of self-acclamation is most distressing when you consider that you force the many distinguished service honoraries on this campus to buy advertising space to announce their new members.

The Collegian is a student-funded newspaper for all the students of K-State. It is not a Department of Journalism and Mass Communications brag sheet! I find incredible irony in the fact that you lampoon Ed Meese on your editorial page, yet the conflict of interest you practice on a regular basis could teach Meese a few things.

Commission: airlines 'safe for now'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A presidential commission concluded Monday that the U.S. air transport system is safe for the time being, but urged appointment of a "safety czar" in a newly independent Federal Aviation Administration whose officials would be insulated from political pressures.

"The nation's air transportation system is safe, for now," said John M. Albertine, chairman of the Aviation Safety Commission whose final report was issued after a nine-month study of the rapidly growing airline industry.

"However, that safety is being maintained to an increasing extent through delays and through what I can only characterize as heroic efforts of air traffic controllers, airways facilities technicians, safety inspectors" and others, Albertine said.

The report said there was widespread public concern about the safety of air travel, coinciding with burgeoning technological advances and a backlog of safety improvements waiting to be written into government regulations.

"Now is the time for decisive action by Congress and the executive branch," the study said.

The panel recommended that the FAA expand its force of inspectors and begin conducting surprise inspections of airlines in addition to pre-announced examinations, to give the airlines "increased incentives to keep their day-to-day operations in close conformance with safety regulations."

It also urged the Transportation Department agency to publish stricter safety standards for commuter air carriers, and to require private planes to contain equipment that can report their altitudes to ground controllers when they are making a landing approach at busy airports.

The report proposed a dramatic restructuring of the FAA, including appointment of a "safety czar" within the agency who could initiate or block proposed air safety regulations.

Long-range missile treaty appears unlikely

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Reagan administration officials acknowledged Monday that hopes are fading that a treaty to curb U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear missiles would be ready for signing at the Moscow summit at the end of May.

"There's always hope," an official said as Secretary of State George P. Shultz prepared for a new round of talks in the Soviet capital.

But the official, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, said there was virtually no progress on resolving differences between the two sides since Shultz met in Washington last month with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

He blamed a lack of cooperation on the Soviet side.

"I'm not one for bashing the Soviets," the official said in an interview. "But they're not exactly following through on the problems. And look at the calendar."

Shultz is due in Moscow on Thursday for talks with Shevardnadze and General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev over three days. He also will make stops in Kiev and Tblisi, the capitals of the Ukraine and Soviet Georgia, before returning home next week.

The monthly meetings are in preparation for President Reagan's visit to Moscow for talks with Gorbachev from May 29 to June 2. Shultz hoped to crown his fourth and final superpower summit meeting with a treaty to reduce long-range bombers, missiles and submarines by 30 percent to 50 percent.

But a senior U.S. official, briefing reporters under rules of anonymity, said four drafts prepared by American and Soviet negotiators had 1,200 distinct items of disagreement.

The official said about half deal with definitions, and the other half with the difficulty in verifying the locations and numbers of three weapons: mobile missiles and sea- and air-launched cruise missiles.

"The longer time goes by without solving these issues, the more unlikely there will be a signing in Moscow," the official said. "But we'll keep trying."

Kansas farmers are losing foreign countries as grain buyers because the grain here has more foreign particles in it than that of the competition, which is mainly Canada and Australia.

The general consensus of the Kansas grain experts who gathered Monday in the Union at the public hearing on grain quality is that clean grain is better but more expensive.

Three panels gave testimony on grain quality issues to the subcommittee reviewing clean-grain legislation.

The U.S. House of Representatives' Subcommittee on Wheat, Soybeans and Feed Grains is examining grain classification and the reauthorization of the Federal Grain Inspection Service, said Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., chairman of the subcommittee.

Glickman, along with Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., and Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., heard testimony from panels composed of K-State faculty, grain elevator owners, and representatives from the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, the Kansas Wheat Commission and the FGIS Advisory Committee.

"I will definitely seek changes in FGIS' operating mandate," Glickman said.

The composition of the FGIS Advisory Committee will be examined because it is presently dominated by the grain trade. The representation should be broadened to include growers, users and researchers, he said.

"I want changes (in the committee) to ensure that the administrator is not captive to a narrow group of interests," Glickman said.

A number of research projects concerning grain quality are "begging for funding" while the FGIS has about $5 million sitting in the bank drawing interest, he said. At the same time, some people are suggesting lower FGIS fees.

"I believe we need to direct some of these idle funds to furthering these projects, and I will be seeking such a legislative change," Glickman said.

This action will ensure that funds are put into research, so Kansas farmers can take advantage of the most up-to-date advancements in grain breeding and development sciences. This will allow American agriculture to "stay on the cutting edge of technological advances and maintain competitiveness," Glickman said.

The House subcommittee should give serious merit to considering the commodity programs policy and FGIS' reauthorization period at the same time, he said.

"Presently, there is an institutional bias against examining some of the grain quality issues in their broadest sense simply because Congress takes commodity program changes and FGIS issues at different times," Glickman said.

Harvey Kiser, associate professor of agricultural economics, spoke to the subcommittee. He presented results from studies he has conducted on cleaning wheat as well as computer programs that enable elevators to evaluate the economics of cleaning wheat. He also shared observations to help provide incentives for marketing cleaner wheat.

A 1984 study funded by the Kansas Wheat Commission found that using aspiration-type cleaning systems would reduce the cost of cleaning wheat, Kiser said.

Later that year, another study showed that removing dockage — non-wheat material that remains after a sieving process is used — to less than 0.5 percent was economical and profitable, he said.

Glickman observed that even if the cleaner wheat cannot bring a higher buying price in the world market, it will cost less money to store and handle before it gets to the market.

Kiser said incentives for farmers and elevator owners to clean the wheat include: reduced price discounts for poor quality wheat, premium prices per bushel of clean wheat, reduced shipping costs for grain without dockage, receipts for selling the cleanings as a feed ingredient, increased storage income, reduced aeration and drying costs, lower fumigation costs and fewer insects.

"The KSU computer technology provides tools with which elevator operators can determine the profitability of cleaning and shipping cleaner wheat," he said.

Math professor to give lecture

By Lori Ingmire

Raoul Bott, professor of mathematics at Harvard University, will speak at the sixth annual Friends of Mathematics Lecture.

Bott's lecture, "On the Points at Infinity," will be held at 2:30 p.m. today in Cardwell 102. An awards banquet, held in conjunction with the event, is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. in the Union Flint Hills Room.

Bott earned a Doctor of Science degree from the Carnegie Institute of Technology in 1949. From 1949 to 1951, he was a member of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton University.

Bott's honors include being named a Higgins Professor of Mathematics at Harvard University from 1974 to 1977. Since then, he has been selected the William Caspar Graustein Professor of Mathematics at Harvard. He is also a member of the National Academy of Sciences.

President Ronald Reagan named Bott to be the recipient of the National Medal of Science in 1987 in recognition of his studies in the topology of lie groups and differential geometry. Specifically, it recognized his work on the periodicity theorem.

This national honor was established by Congress in 1959 to provide special recognition to individuals for their outstanding contributions to the physical, mathematical, biological, engineering, behavioral or social sciences.

The Friends of Mathematics Lecture Series is an endowed event that emphasizes the accomplishments of the mathematical sciences. This includes historical, recent and potential contributions to society.

Previous lecturers in the series include Paul Halmos, Ivan Niven, Peter Hilton, Henry Pollak and Lynn Arthur Steen.

The awards banquet, scheduled to complete the annual event, will recognize individuals for their mathematical excellence. Scholarships and awards will be presented to both undergraduate and graduate students.

"In our department, teaching assistantships are apprenticeships during which we train graduate students in the skills that will make them effective mathematics educators," said Louis Pigno, head of the mathematics department.

"It is important for our students to know that as professional mathematicians they are expected to have a commitment to excellence in teaching as well as research," he said.

Job search continues for Justice official

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — John Shepherd, Attorney General Edwin Meese III's choice to fill the No. 2 post at the Justice Department, told officials Monday to proceed with a search to fill the job, department sources said.

While not yet closing the door on the post, Shepherd is on the verge of withdrawing from consideration for the job of deputy attorney general, the sources said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Shepherd has said he is concerned about the stress on his family of the public scrutiny that has occurred since Meese picked him.

Less than two weeks ago, Meese hurriedly selected Shepherd, a former president of the American Bar Association, for the position without customary White House clearance and FBI background checks. President Reagan has not yet formally nominated Shepherd.

In brief remarks to reporters, Meese said that he didn't expect to have a decision from Shepherd until mid-week. But several sources said that Shepherd, as a matter of courtesy, had already informed the department that he probably will withdraw from consideration for the post and that aides to Meese should start looking for other candidates. In fact, the search was already under way, said the sources.

Meanwhile, Meese has gone outside the department in attempt to fill another top vacancy, the post of assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division, other Justice Department sources said.

Sounded out about the possibility of taking the criminal division post by aides to Meese is Stephen A. Saltzburg, a University of Virginia law professor. Saltzburg is a consultant on a legal question in the Iran-Contra prosecution of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, said the sources, also speaking on condition of anonymity.

Reached at his home, Saltzburg said he hadn't been offered the job, but would not comment when asked whether he had been approached about it.

Saltzburg is a consultant to former federal judge and ex-U.S. attorney, Herb Stern. Stern was hired by Walsh to represent the Iran-Contra prosecutor on the issue of congressional immunity.

The legal question is whether or not the congressional testimony compelled by grants of immunity to former National Security Council staffer Oliver North, former national security adviser John Poindexter and businessman Albert Hakim prejudice their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

Speaker to talk on dietetics jobs

Growth of food service lecture topic

By The Collegian Staff

The opening of job opportunities in the field of dietetics will be the focus of the 14th Annual Grace M. Shugart Lecture at 10 a.m. today in Forum Hall.

Darlene Dougherty, president-elect of the American Dietetic Association, will deliver "Marketing Dietetics in Hotel and Retail Division."

"There are new kinds of positions opening, as the public becomes more health minded," said Mary Gregoire, assistant professor of hotel, restaurant, institutional management and dietetics.

Dougherty is a management consultant specializing in computer assisted food service management and marketing. She has also lectured at San Jose State University about computers and undergraduate purchasing.

A panel of food service industry leaders will also discuss the opening avenues in dietetic practices from 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. in Forum Hall.

Dougherty will moderate the panel which is comprised of James Markee, associate project manager with Cini-Little International Inc.; Caren Messina-Hirsch, president of Food Performance, Inc.; John Pence, associate director of housing and head of resident hall food service at K-State, and Catherine Powers, chief nutritionist with the Culinary Institute of America.

The panel will complement Dougherty's lecture, said Gregoire.

"(It will) bring a different perspective and expand on Darlene Dougherty's lecture. (The panelists) will give a broader application to food services," she said.

The lecture is sponsored by the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Management and Dietetics, and the Grace M. Shugart Lectureship Fund.

Shugart was head of what was then the Department of Institutional Mangagement until her retirement in 1975. The lecture fund was set up at the time of her retirement to support the series of lectures which she began, Gregoire said.

Going home to a mobile home park is common among Southeast Asians, who settle in them because they are inexpensive.

Asians: adjusting difficult

By Christine Doll
Special Projects Editor

This is the third installment of a three-part series.

GARDEN CITY — They came to a city that had a bright future.

Garden City's economy was looking up — industry was booming, houses were being built and people were moving in.

About 5,000 Southeast Asians moved to the city in the last four years. They found housing and employment and tried to settle into the western Kansas community.

Like all newcomers, their transition was not without some trouble. They had the usual problems — enrolling their children in schools, finding new doctors, hooking up telephone service and the like. But for many, even the most routine tasks were overwhelming.

"Take junk mail. We Americans take it for granted. But I'll never forget when (a Southeast Asian) brought me a sweepstakes letter and thought they won," said Sister Levita Rohlman, refugee resettlement director of the Southeast Asian Mutual Assistance Center.

The key to successfully assimilating into the community is education. Both the Garden City school district and the Asian families are trying to speed up the process.

While some know English fluently, others have to struggle at communicating and reading. The obvious difficulties range from communicating with a doctor during an emergency to talking with a landlord about a plumbing problem.

The elementary-age Asians have the most hope for overcoming the barriers and adjusting to life in the United States. Most of the younger children do well in the English as a Second Language program the school district implemented, said Roxie Thompson, ESL teacher at Victor Orneales Elementary School.

Michael Sands asks a question during a board meeting of the Southeast Asian Mutual Assistance Center. The center helps immigrants ease into American culture.

But the program does not work overnight. It takes the children about two years to learn English well enough to communicate in a social environment. Another 3 to 5 years is required to become "academically fluent," or to learn academic subjects in English, according to research done by the Garden City school district.

Because of the time required, high school age children become frustrated because they are doing poorly in school when they could be doing something more rewarding.

"They get frustrated and discouraged, so they quit and go to work at (Iowa Beef Processors)," said Peggy Serry, who has been an ESL teacher at the high school for three years.

The ESL program is taught in English. Most of the teachers do not know another language. The school district also implemented a bilingual program aimed at the Hispanic chidren in some of the schools.

It teaches children their native language instead of English. Some of the schools in Garden City have implemented this type of program for Hispanic children. Thompson said she prefers the ESL program.

"I think we're headed for more problems (with bilingual education) down the road," she said.

While the children learn English in an intensive ESL program at school, their parents must juggle working and learning the language. To help inform parents, school officials send notes home in three languages. On one sheet of paper, parents can choose among English, Vietnamese or Spanish to read what is happening in their children's schools.

"We want the parents and children to feel comfortable," Thompson said. "The schools try to make as many accommodations as we can."

One of the accommodations made is planning parent-teacher conferences to fit in with parents' work schedules. Since many of the Asian families work in the meat-packing business, the conferences are held either after the early shift or before the late shift so the parents can attend.

Since some of the parents cannot understand English, the conferences require imagination from the teachers. Thompson said she shows Asian parents their children's work and uses facial expressions to portray how the children are doing. If there is a serious problem she cannot communicate, she relies on an Asian secretary in the school's office to translate.

Most of the elementary Asians do well and excell in school, Thompson said. However, the older students are not as successful overall partially because of the U.S. school system, Serry said.

"If they come in as sophomores we try to graduate them in three years because of their age," Serry said. "That's the crazy thing."

Most Asians realize a high school education will lead to a better future, but some still drop out of high school to earn money so they can help their relatives who are still living in Asia.

"When your family is sick today, you can't wait five years until you're finished with school to help them," Rohlman said.

University's two art collections not insured

Staff/Gary Lytle

Jessica Reichman, curator of K-State's art collection, looks through some of the 1,200 pieces of uninsured art in the collection.

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

Arthur B. Davies' "Woman with a Mirror," Birger Sandzen's "Still Water" and Henri Matisse's "Nude with Left Hand on Chin" are only three of the 1,200 pieces of art K-State owns.

K-State's art collection is considered valuable, but according to Jessica Reichman, curator of the collection, state law will not allow the University to have any insurance on it.

"The insurance is set up by the insurance committee in Topeka, and they have very specific things you can and cannot insure," said Bill Sesler, assistant in the controller's office.

"The state is self-insured, but that doesn't really mean you have (insurance)," he said. "If anything gets lost or destroyed, the state legislature has to determine whether to replace it."

The University has two art collections, the most valuable of which is the permanent collection, Reichman said. One part of this collection is about 1,000 pieces of mostly regional, 20th century art. The other part consists of photographs by Gordon Parks, photographer and critically acclaimed author of "The Learning Tree," who received an honorary doctor of letters degree from K-State in 1970.

The art lending collection is the second collection and contains about 200 works. These works are loaned to faculty and staff free of charge for display in offices.

Art from this collection is less valuable and usually is comprised of reproductions or student work, she said.

Only one exhibit — a traveling exhibit of contemporary printmaking in India — has insurance, Reichman said.

"We purchased a wall-to-wall, all-risks, fine art policy (for the traveling exhibit), and the only way we could purchase insurance was to use money from a foundation because the money was not state money," Reichman said.

The money for the policy was given by the KSU Foundation, and the policy was purchased at a local insurance agency.

When the University loans works of art to other institutions, it is assumed that that institution takes responsibility for the insurance, Reichman said. However, if it is another state institution, the same self-insured policy applies.

"The state is self-insured, but that doesn't really mean you have (insurance). If anything gets lost or destroyed, the state legislature has to determine whether to replace it."

— Bill Sesler assistant in controller's office

"Our problem here is when we are asked to function as a museum when we are not one," she said.

Museums must have insurance in order to protect visiting collections, Reichman said.

The part of the permanent collection that is displayed is located primarily in the K-State Union, Eisenhower and Fairchild halls and in the president's home, Reichman said. However, many of the works are not on display because they are too valuable, and places on campus lack the necessary security.

"It's really a shame that there's not really a place (to display the art)," she said.

"In good faith and good conscience we have to reassess places where we can display them, which is why we have more important works in administrators' offices," Reichman said.

Other works cannot be displayed on campus because they must have kept in certain conditions, such as a specific temperature or no sunlight, she said.

The remainder of the collection is kept in storage on campus.

The location cannot be revealed because of security reasons, Reichman said.

Some exhibits are displayed in other parts of Manhattan, such as the Union National Bank, she said. Security is greater and certain conditions may be met.

"We have a wonderful collection, and it is nice to share it with a greater number of people (at the bank)," she said.

K-State's permanent art collection was started in 1928 by an architecture professor, John Helm, and a Kansas artist, Birger Sandzen. The same two people also began Friends of Art, a group that supports the arts. The yearly dues of Friends of Art are used to buy art for K-State's collection.

Reichman said the fund used to purchase art is currently less than $5,000 a year, with the money coming from the Friends of Art account and private donations.

"We either purchase it (the art), or it is given to use either as an outright gift or as a bequest," she said. "The ratio is about three gifts to one purchase."

So far this year, the University has acquired four pieces of art, Reichman said. A committee from the University and from the community decides what art to select.

None of K-State's collection has been appraised by a professional appraiser because appraisers are very expensive, she said. Appraisers charge $75 an hour to $100 an hour, or they charge 10 percent to 15 percent of the value of the collection.

"All the works we own become state property, and we can trade with other institutions in the state system," Reichman said. "But we keep everything we acquire.

"It's a shame we can't show them in a more cohesive manner," she said.

"All the works we own become state property, and we can trade with other institutions in the state system. But we keep everything we acquire."

— Jessica Reichman art curator

Reichman is also a member of Celebrate the Arts, a committee Ruth Ann Wefald established. One of the committee's goals is to establish an art museum on campus.

"We have been traveling around the state telling people about the arts at K-State," Reichman said.

"It's been very successful," she said. "People become more familiar with all the arts here, because most people are familiar with just our agriculture and engineering."

Reichman credits the students and faculty that the University is able to display the works on campus.

"It only goes to prove we have an excellent student body here, and we can display the art in the Union, which is unusual for most universities," Reichman said. "Students and faculty respect art works and learn from them and enjoy them, which is why we have them.

"I can't praise the student body enough," she said.

Debate centers on health clubs' membership fees

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Some health clubs that offer lifetime memberships have prompted some legislative officials to consider endorsing a bill that would regulate those clubs, but Manhattan health club owners don't expect to be affected.

Consumers have complained that they never receive compensation for membership fees they paid after a club files for bankruptcy, he said. Other members get shipped to new clubs which don't offer the same services.

"People are getting ripped off," Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, said earlier this year when legislation was introduced. Morris was referring to club closings in the Sedgwick county area in the last few years and more specifically to the recent bankruptcy filings of two Mademoiselle clubs in Wichita.

Morris served on a Senate subcommittee of the Public Health and Welfare committee to study a bill presented by David Moses, director of the consumer fraud division of the Sedgwick County district attorney's office.

The basic premise of the bill required the registering of health clubs with the secretary of state and the regulation of pre-opening membership drives sponsored by clubs, Moses said. Moses added that the bill may require clubs to open in a certain number of days after beginning a membership drive.

The problem is not confined to the Wichita area, Moses said, referring to the closing of an International Fitness health club in Kansas City last year. Thousands of people lost money through lifetime membership fees when the club closed.

Moses advised consumers to stay away from lifetime membership fees, which he said are at times simply an agreement to pay an annual renewal fee to the club.

"They are always going to be for the lifetime of the club, and when the club closes you don't get what you bargain for," he said.

Local club owners were also against buying or selling lifetime fees.

"It's a big mistake to buy or sell lifetime memberships," said Larry MacPhee, who owns Nautilus Fitness Center and The Ladies Club. "It's a dangerous situation to become involved in because you have to deal with the question 'Who's lifetime are we talking about?'"

Consumers can join Nautilus for as "short as a day," MacPhee said. Other package plans include a two-month membership or a year-long membership, he said. If a health club patron wishes to purchase a year-long membership after belonging for two months, their time and money will be credited toward that account.

Most consumers choose to pay in monthly installments rather than in one lump sum, he said, adding that he believes most clubs nationwide are now using this kind of payment system as opposed to lifetime memberships.

One of the clubs that closed in the Wichita area was a Nautilus Fitness Center, but MacPhee is not worried about any adverse affect on his business.

"There is no real connection between the two centers," he said. According to MacPhee, if a club purchases a certain amount of Nautilus equipment they can request permission from the national company to use the Nautilus name.

When local clubs fold, it actually helps his business, he said.

"We begin to be perceived as a solid entity in the marketplace," MacPhee said, adding that since Nautilus has opened in 1983, he has seen four or five clubs open and close their doors.

Both Nautilus and the Schliebe Workout Center require their members to sign a contract when they join for a year, but both clubs also offer a window factor for those consumers who may be leaving the area within a year.

"It's just not fair to tie somebody up for a long time and then they move away and have to pay for something they won't use," MacPhee said. "When a club member has to move away, we rip their contract up."

K-State credit union to offer Expandachek banking services

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The KSU Federal Credit Union will take an evolutionary step forward on Aug. 1, when it begins offering Expandachek services to its members.

The services will allow members to write share drafts — which function like checks — on a credit union account, said Marla Mann, manager of the KSU Federal Credit Union.

Expandachek offers an added benefit. If a member writes share drafts and there are inadequate funds in the share-draft account, the credit union staff will automatically transfer money from the member's savings account to cover the overdrafts, she said.

Members will also have an option to automatically transfer money from their share-draft accounts to their savings accounts, she said.

"The board of directors feels the credit union has to expand and serve the people, or they will go elsewhere. It's a competitive thing," Mann said.

Patrick Alexander, president of Kansas State Bank, said the level of services provided by the credit union will determine how much of an impact on the market it will make.

"I'm sure there will be some impact, but you never know until it happens," he said. "People will bank where they get the best service."

Mann credits Christine Crenshaw with making the Expandachek program happen.

Crenshaw, associate director of Student Financial Assistance and a member of the board of directors of the credit union, said when she arrived at K-State, the credit union was offering far-above-average loan, savings and investment services but no share-draft accounts. For that reason, she continued to bank in Iowa.

"I decided I was going to do whatever I could to get checking services available for people like myself," she said. "The credit union was at the point where it could consider expanding its services — it has a strong financial base, forward-thinking members and a progressive staff — so the time was right."

Crenshaw said the August date was selected to ensure the services would be available for new staff and faculty arriving at the start of the academic year.

According to Mann, there are currently 2,674 members of the credit union. She expects that about 7 percent will sign up immediately when Expandachek becomes available.

Decisions have not been made regarding the cost of the services, if any, or if dividends will be paid on share-draft account balances, she said. The credit union is still deciding whether there will be a minimum-balance requirement, too.

"In my opinion, I would rather go with no fee," Mann said.

It will take six months to 14 months to have the program on a break-even basis, depending upon how many members sign up for the checking services and how quickly they start using them, Crenshaw said.

"If only 4 percent of our members started using the services on Aug. 1, we would never lose any money," she said.

The Kansas credit union average for membership participation in share-draft accounts is 7 percent when the services have been available for less than two years, Crenshaw said. That percentage increases to 20 percent for institutions that have offered share-draft services for more than two years.

A number of reasons contributed to the fact that the share-draft option had not been offered before, she said.

"It appears the board perceived that the membership was mostly interested in loan and savings services," Crenshaw said.

Members didn't express the need, and there probably was not the commitment to marketing that there has been in the last two years, she said.

Space limitations and concern that the services may cost more than the credit union could afford were also possible reasons why the services had not been offered before, Crenshaw said.

Costs associated with the Expandachek program include start-up

Prudent selection advised in limited partnerships

Commentary

STEPHEN P. HARRISON
Collegian Columnist

Prior to the sweeping tax law changes that resulted from the 1986 Tax Reform Act, many investors chose to ignore investment value in favor of larger tax write-offs. Because of this, thousands of tax shams were offered publicly with wild promises of cutting tax bills to practically nothing. Often these "investments" failed, leaving the buyer with a big financial loss. Later, these shams were disallowed by the Internal Revenue Service, exposing investors to additional tax liabilities and interest. Fortunately, excessive tax write-offs have been eliminated by the new tax legislation.

Many of these abusive tax shelters were offered in the form of limited partnerships. This doesn't mean limited partnerships were, or are, poor investments. To the contrary; if properly understood and prudently selected, many limited partnerships still offer excellent investment opportunity with some tax-sheltering benefits as a bonus. The key is to buy partnerships primarily as investments and keep tax consideration secondary. If older, more conventional limited partnerships don't fit your financial plan but you wish to participate in such managed ventures as oil and gas or real estate, there is an alternative: Master Limited Partnerships.

MLPs, a relatively new investment, are publicly registered and easily transferable. Like a stock, these partnership units may be listed and traded on the major stock exchanges, eliminating a major disadvantage of limited partnerships: no liquidity. If an investor sells a conventional limited partnership, he or she must find a buyer and then negotiate a price acceptable to both parties. MLP investors, on the other hand, are free to buy and sell units at present market prices with the convenience of regular stock transactions. Since the units are traded on stock exchanges, they're available to many more investors. As a result, more units are available at much lower prices — unlike traditional partnerships where a few investors made large deposits — and the current price of an MLP is available as quickly as any stock quotation.

There are currently more than 125 MLPs traded on the U.S. exchanges, with new ones forming regularly. They offer ownership in a diverse field of investments, including real estate, gas, cable TV, health care and more.

In addition to easy trading and liquidity, there still remains a real tax advantage to MLPs. Whereas shareholders of common stock must pay taxes on the dividends they receive, under current law, partnerships enjoy the benefit of no corporate tax on income. Any income filters down, intact, to the MLP owners who pay only their own tax. Since the top corporate tax bracket is now higher than the top individual tax bracket, MLP investors get a real tax advantage.

Of course the real benefit, or risk, lies in the quality of the investment, not the taxing of it. Before you dedicate any funds to a Master Limited Partnership, investigate and understand the partnership you're considering.

The industry, quality and anticipated income should all play important roles in your decision. MLPs are yet another investment option that could add another dimension to your financial plan.

Survey to help advising process

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to to improve the advising process, a study involving 1,500 undergraduates is being conducted.

Bernard Klahn, a doctoral candidate in the College of Education, said the study's results should help academic advisers and smooth the process of advising.

"Academic advising over the history of higher education has always been an important part and will always be a part of education," Klahn said. "Unfortunately, I think academic advising has been kind of taken for granted."

Most students tend to think of it as just getting their schedule signed, he said.

However, during the past 10 years, educational administrators have recognized the importance of academic advising and how critical the need for proper academic advising is.

Universities' declining enrollments have increased the need for strong academic advising, he said.

In an effort to help academic advisers receive feedback on their advising, the University Committee on Academic Advising was created in the fall of 1985. The committee's survey is the one that Klahn is now going to test.

"The thrust of my study will be to do a study of the qualities of this instrument (survey)," Klahn said.

The survey was sent to 1,720 undergraduates for their responses.

Questions on the survey range from how long students have had their current academic adviser to if the adviser has provided the student with information about changing majors.

Another section of the survey asks if the adviser has made available information to the student about improving study skills, dealing with personal problems and where students can receive financial aid.

"We were expecting about a third to be returned," Klahn said. "It's a fairly complex instrument (the survey) and it's fairly time consuming."

The final version of the survey will not be as long as the original preliminary trial version, he said.

"I will evaluate the instrument (survey) itself," Klahn said. "A lot of the questions are redundant, and we will eliminate them.

"(The revised version) will be a much narrower, much briefer instrument," he said.

Klahn chose the study because it was readily available and needed to be tested.

"I was looking for an instrument (survey) to use ... and when the word got out I was doing it, they (the University Committee on Academic Advising) said 'we've got one here that isn't quite developed. Let's see if you can help us out, and we'll help you out,'" Klahn said.

The results of Klahn's study will be forwarded to the Academic Assistance Center and the Faculty and Evaluation Center.

"This study is not a threat to any faculty or to any of the advisers because ... advisers are not named and students are not named in any way shape or form on this study," Klahn said. "It's completely confidential information."

New ASK constitution approved by board

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

Associated Students of Kansas may be operating under a new constitution by as early as next fall.

The ASK Board of Directors approved Thursday a draft of a new constitution which was proposed by the ASK Policy Council.

The draft, in order to go into effect, must be approved by the student senate of each of the Kansas Board of Regents schools. Because K-State and The Wichita State University are the only schools with senates in session, the earliest the new constitution could be adopted is this fall when the other schools' senates go into session.

Troy Lubbers, ASK board chairman and student body president, said the biggest change that would occur if the draft is approved would be in the way ASK makes policy.

Under the proposed change, policy would be made by the ASK Policy Council instead of by legislative assemblies. Legislative assemblies are one day events which occur four times a year to decide policy. Each school is granted one delegate per 1,000 students enrolled.

Lubbers said that when ASK was formed in 1973 the organization was geared toward mass participation and therefore ASK's policies were formed in the large legislative assemblies.

"Students are involved in more technical, fiscal issues," Lubbers said. "One day isn't enough time to decide a position on all of the issues we face. A small group that meets more often would be more effective, due to the complexity of issues."

Lubbers said there has already been a gradual shift in the purpose of the legislative assemblies.

"The legislative assemblies have become more instructional," Lubbers said. "We're trying to make the students more aware, informed and involved through the legislative assemblies."

Lubbers said the Policy Council, which consists of five or six members from each school, makes actual policy.

11-year-old killed in house explosion

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The father of an 11-year-old girl killed in an explosion early Monday said he had no idea why anyone would bomb his house.

A homemade pipe bomb exploded on the front porch of the Randall Green family's rented house, killing his 11-year-old daughter, Linda, said Donald Ash, police media officer. A relative, Harvey Comstock, who lived with the family, was critically injured.

"I don't drink. I don't take drugs and we don't run in any wild circles," Green said. "We're a family-oriented family."

Green said his family had lived in the house only a short time, and he speculated that the target of the bombing may have been a previous resident.

Linda Green died of chest wounds at University of Kansas Medical Center less than an hour after the blast. Comstock, 44, a cousin of the Greens, was listed in critical condition in the center's intensive care unit after doctors amputated his legs, said Nancy Miller, a hospital spokeswoman. He also suffered multiple shrapnel wounds to the arms, neck and head.

'Cats nip Jayhawks, play Creighton today

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

After sweeping the Kansas Jayhawks in a four-game series which ended Monday, K-State's baseball team will try to even the score with the Creighton Bluejays tonight in a 7 p.m. contest at Frank Myers Field.

The Bluejays defeated the 'Cats earlier this season, 11-3, in Omaha, Neb. However, Wildcat coach Mike Clark expects his team to play much better this time around.

"We're just going to try to play solid ball like we did this past weekend. Creighton has a good ballclub and they're leading the Missouri Valley (Conference) right now," Clark said. "It should be a really good matchup."

Creighton, Clark said, will be a tough non-conference opponent for the 'Cats before they resume Big Eight Conference play against the Missouri Tigers on Friday in Manhattan.

"We're real encouraged with the good competition (today), then a couple of days of practice before the big series with Missouri," Clark said. "We can't overlook Creighton. They're a top 25 ballclub and just swept Indiana State last weekend."

Jeff Peterson will start on the mound for K-State, while designated hitter Bill Barnard will fill in for injured first baseman David Chadd, who is out with a pulled hamstring.

K-State completed its first ever four-game series sweep, Monday, defeating the Kansas Jayhawks, 10-9, in Lawrence.

"It's a milestone for our program," Clark said. "I didn't know anything about (posting the first-ever sweep) until (Monday), but I'm very happy. We can pat ourselves on the back for about five minutes, then we'll have to start thinking ahead."

Monday's game actually started Sunday, but was suspended in the eighth inning due to rain.

KU had the tying run, Rocky Helm, at third in the bottom of the ninth after he had doubled. However, shortstop Pete Simmerson popped out to second baseman Sean Collins to end the game and seal K-State's win.

In the opening game of the series Friday, the 'Cats won 12-7. In Saturday's double-header, K-State posted wins of 22-14 and 23-2.

"Our offense just dominated the whole series," Clark said. "Our pitchers threw well in spots, but for the most part the hitters just said 'hey, let's go out and win this thing' and they went out and did it."

Clark said resuming the game Monday posed problems in the 'Cats' rhythm.

"It was a different situation," Clark said. "Offensively, we like to look at the opposing pitcher through the first couple innings to get a feel for things. In a situation where you're only playing two innings that's a little difficult to do."

K-State jumped out to a 10-4 lead after four innings, the bulk of which came on a fourth-inning grand slam home run by left fielder Reese Beers, his first home run of the year. It was K-State's fourth grand slam of the weekend.

"It seemed like everytime we turned around, they were hitting a grand slam," said Jayhawk coach Dave Bingham.

Sean Collins also had a good game for K-State in the segmented game, getting three hits in five attempts. In 20 plate appearances over the weekend, Collins reached base 15 times.

Monday's pitching victory went to starter Jim Haller, 2-4, who lasted five innings, surrendering eight hits and four walks, while striking out three. Jim McClellan and Bill Schafer both pitched in relief for the Wildcats, with Schafer notching his second save of the season.

Schafer was pitching when the rains came on Sunday, then returned to the mound to nail things down on Monday. He allowed just one hit and one walk in 3⅓ innings. The junior right-hander struck out three.

"Bill has been just excellent in relief," Clark said. "We were keeping a close eye on him (Monday) for any signs of fatigue, but he threw well."

The losing hurler was Jayhawk starter Craig Houfek, 0-1.

K-State is now 25-13 on the season and 5-7 in Big Eight play. The 25-win total is the eighth best in school history.

Kevin Ramsey, senior in physical education and K-State baseball trainer, takes a break during practice. Despite his recent knee injury and the loss of several fingers when he was seven years old, Ramsey has proven his ability to the players.

Trainer model of perseverance

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

Just call him a model of perseverance. Kevin Ramsey, a senior in physical education, learned at an early age what it means to face and overcome a handicap.

To most 7-year-olds, the world is a great place to explore. When he was that age, Ramsey was just as curious as any child.

He grabbed a cable which was attached to a pulley at a grain elevator in Concordia, Kan. As a result of that action, he lost all of the middle finger, the ring finger and the little finger on his left hand, part of that hand's index finger, and part of his index finger on his right hand.

The impact of losing the fingers was hard to deal with at first.

"It was hard getting back into school. I worried about what the other kids might say at first. It really bothered me for a while," he said.

The same fear manifested itself again early this baseball season, when he began his duties as a trainer for K-State's baseball team.

"The guys on the team kidded me a little bit at first," he said. "But then it started getting old, and they saw that I could do the job, and it stopped."

Ramsey has been a trainer for various sports, but baseball is probably his favorite, he said.

"(Baseball)'s played during a nice time of the year," he said. "And the injuries that we have to deal with are much different. In baseball we have to deal with overused and tired muscles, whereas in football you have to deal with serious injuries almost every day."

In the years since his accident, Ramsey got over his injury mentally. But choosing a career in sports medicine meant being adept with his hands. This is something Ramsey is still practicing.

"I don't really look at (the injury) as being a handicap," he said. "Some people look at me and think that I can't do the job. But they don't know what I have to do. It's pretty easy, though."

Despite the fact some people think Ramsey can't tape or treat athletic injuries, he is confident in his craft, the roots of which go back to his high school days.

He was a trainer at Concordia High School and at Cloud County Community College, where he worked with the men's basketball team. After he graduated from Cloud in

Women leading; men in second place

Golfers in upper ranks of tourneys

By The Collegian Staff

After the first day of competition in the K-State/Pepsi Classic, the K-State women's golf squad holds a nine stroke lead.

The two-day event continues today starting at 8 a.m. at the Manhattan Country Club, a par 73, 5,850-yard course.

The men's team holds the second spot in the Wichita State Invitational going into today's final round of play.

K-State women golfers, Jill Zientara and Chris Adams led the field with rounds of 86 and 87, respectively. As a team, K-State finished the first round of play with a score of 362. Southwest Missouri State compiled a team score of 371.

Other scorers for K-State were Keli Blake with a 91, Beth Holmberg, 98, and Cory Harlow, 103. Lisa Lugar shot a 109, but it did not count towards the team's total.

The event was originally scheduled as a four-team tournament, but only two teams decided to play. Kansas cancelled for unknown reasons and the University of Missouri-Kansas City decided not to play when it wasn't able to bring a complete squad.

"I think it was a letdown for our players when they learned that Kansas was not coming," K-State coach Rob Sedorcek said. "We were looking forward to going head-to-head with them. Regardless, our team score should have been about 20 shots lower today."

In the men's competition in Wichita, K-State recorded 18-hole rounds of 305 and 296 and rest with a 601 after 36 holes of play.

K-State is second among the 10-team field playing at the par 72, 6,945-yard Willowbend Golf Course in Wichita. K-State will be looking to record it's fourth tournament win in as many outings when play resumes at 9 a.m. today.

Three K-State golfers hold the the second, third and fourth individual marks.

K-State golfer Jeff Sedorcek leads the team with a 146 and ranks second in the individual standings. Follow-

Richmond invited to Olympic Trials

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State guard-forward Mitch Richmond was one of 93 players invited Monday to next month's Olympic Trials.

"I'm looking forward to going there," Richmond said. "I was waiting to hear this."

Richmond joins two-time All-American Danny Manning of national champion Kansas and four Oklahoma players — Mookie Blaylock, Stacey King, Dave Sieger and Harvey Grant — in representing the Big Eight Conference at the trials.

Richmond, who has been working out regularly since K-State ended its season with a loss to Kansas in the finals of the NCAA Midwest Regional March 27, said it will be difficult to make the team.

"Who can tell (who will make it)?" he said. "It's a slim chance."

Four players were also invited from Final Four team Arizona, while seven schools had three players extended opportunities to make the U.S. team that will play under Georgetown Coach John Thompson in the Seoul Games which begin on Sept. 17.

The trials will be begin May 18

Humphrey signs with Wildcats

LaKeith Humphrey, a 6-1 guard from Barton County Community College in Great Bend, has signed a natinal letter-of-intent to attend K-State, Wildcat basketball coach Lon Kruger announced Monday.

"LaKeith is a fine all-around player," said Kruger. "He makes very sound decisions with the ball and just does a number of good things. We're very pleased to have him coming to K-State."

Humphrey is the third signee for Kansas State for the 1988-89 season. In addition, Reggie Britt and Jeff Malham inked during the early-signing period last November. Britt is a 6-6 forward from Coffeyville Community College and Malham is a 6-6 forward from Broken Arrow (Okla.) High School.

Netters split weekend duals

K-State's women's tennis team was dominated by the Colorado Buffaloes in a Big Eight Conference contest Sunday, losing to the Buffaloes, 9-0.

With the loss, K-State's dual match record fell to 7-8 on the season and 1-4 in conference action. The Wildcats beat Colorado College Saturday, 9-0, in their first dual of the weekend their membership to other Schliebe health clubs when they move away from Manhattan, said Surah Richman, owner of the Schliebe Workout Center.

K-State's next action will be Saturday when they entertain the Nebraska Cornhuskers. Play is set to begin at 1 p.m. at the Washburn Complex Tennis Courts.

"We believe in the pay-as-you-play option of paying," Richman said. "Most of our members are sold on the (club). They know the products (we offer) and sign right up."

The majority of club members prefer to pay in installments, she said.

"They really can't afford to do the payment in full," Richman said.

Deana Dipman, manager of The Ladies Club, was also against lifetime memberships but in favor of one-year memberships.

"(Clients) tend to be a little more committed (to one-year memberships)," she said. "But lifetime memberships are a bad idea — you can't guarantee the club will always be there."

costs for equipment as well as continuing costs for labor, supplies, equipment replacement and service costs, she said.

"Costs are offset by people who join the credit union because it has comprehensive services and bring with them their loan and savings needs and their checking balances," Crenshaw said.

A two-month pilot program will be implemented using the accounts of the board of directors and credit union employees to get "all the bugs worked out" before August, she said.

In recognition of the limited facilities available to the credit union, several enhancement options are being considered by the board of directors, including direct deposit, cash cards, access to the credit union by an outside entrance or teller window, and night deposit.

"These are immediate options being considered, and one or all of them will be implemented by Aug. 1," Crenshaw said.

Mann said no banking laws had to be overcome to initiate the Expandachek program.

Slattery said although it is important for the United States to project an image of unity to the Middle East in order to divert aggression against the United States, there has been a lot of skepticism and concern about the Reagan administration's policy of using U.S. warships as escorts for reflagged Kuwaiti oil tankers traveling through the Gulf and the Strait of Hormuz.

Europe never invited the United States to embark on the policy, he said. The United States undertook this policy out of fear that if it did not, the Soviet Union would.

"Looking back, that is a poor reason to initiate a policy," Slattery said.

Michael Suleiman, professor of political science, said there are two main points of view concerning U.S. policy toward Iran.

The first advocates isolating Iran in order to halt potential danger to U.S. interests posed by militant Islamic factions within Iran.

The second considers Iran an important part of keeping the Soviet Union out of the Persian Gulf. This policy advocates dealing with pragmatic factions that are willing to talk with the United States.

Suleiman described pragmatic factions as those groups of Iranians, found in all sectors of Iranian politics, associated with the Iran-Contra affair.

"They were called 'moderates,' but 'pragmatic' is a more realistic term," he said.

Suleiman said although the Reagan administration has tried to utilize both policies, the incidents in the Gulf Monday show that the United States is taking a tough stand against Iran.

"Perhaps they are trying to force the militants to be realistic with the United States and its friends, such as Kuwait and Iraq," he said.

Suleiman said whether Iran will retaliate against the United States is entirely up to the Ayatollah Khomeini, who Suleiman said is in a unique position.

"Khomeini allows a great deal of political diversity to exist within Iran, so long as they all view the government as Islamic," he said. "Any action taken must have his approval. If he thinks they must fight a big power, they will fight a big power."

Furthermore, Suleiman said Khomeini will not hesitate to use differences between the United States and the Soviet Union to Iran's advantage.

Should more U.S. military incidents occur against Iran, Slattery said the United States could become more deeply involved in an "incredible quagmire" and should avoid it at all costs.

Calling the situation in the Middle East "enormously complex, volatile and violent," Slattery said he is not convinced U.S. and European policymakers "have the stomach to pursue policies that other countries in the Middle East pursue.

"I don't think we understand what a holy war is all about. We must proceed with caution," he said.

Because the Iran-Iraq war is "a no-win situation for the U.S.," Slattery said the United States must avoid a deep military involvement in that situation.

"Our objective is to keep the Persian Gulf open and stay out of picking sides," he said.

Slattery mediates train discussion

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

Area grain shippers had the opportunity to voice their concerns on the increasing hopper car shortage in Kansas with representatives from Union Pacific Railroad during a meeting conducted Monday in the Union.

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., acted as mediator for the two groups, allowing each side to ask questions and make suggestions to solve the problem.

Ted Michon, representative for Union Pacific Railroad, said Union Pacific has initiated three different programs to deal with different types of shipping needs in the hope of alleviating some of the shortage problems.

These programs are designed to satisfy orders of less than five cars or an order for an entire train, he said. Maintaining the quality of the railroad shipping infrastructure, Michon said, is Union Pacific's first priority.

Most shippers reported a 30- to 40-car shortage with about a one-month delay on all orders. Several shippers reported they had cancelled all orders for hopper cars and said they were relying entirely on independent trucking companies to move their grain.

Staff/Steve Wolgast

Ted Michon, center, representing Union Pacific Railroad, answers a question as U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., left, and John Temple, also from Union Pacific, listen Monday in the Big Eight Room of the Union.

Union Pacific Railroad has been avoiding the problem of increasing its current number of hopper cars because of the high cost of new rail cars and locomotives, Michon said.

New locomotives cost more than $1 million, while covered hopper cars have nearly doubled in price to $45,000 per unit, he said.

Michon said despite the high cost of new rail cars, Union Pacific Railroad has made plans to "purchase 1,000 cars as soon as possible, and increase (the number of hopper cars) by 2,000 in the next two to three years."

Fred Nowak, general manager of the Farmers Union Co-op in Sharon Springs, said the hopper car shortage has cost him more than $20,000 in contract penalties and late charges, and he was forced to look to other methods of transferring his grain to buyers.

recommendation."

Even though Riley County commissioners don't always follow the board's recommendations, Weisenburger said, "I don't see that the planning commission should be a party to any of that at all.

"It doesn't match up with the FEMA regulations and is not consistent with our other decisions," he said.

Board member Graham Rose said he was in favor of rezoning because the tract was already surrounded by heavy industry zones and because the ground has little use otherwise.

"We have a small tract of land that is virtually unusable," he said.

Weisenburger said the argument was a poor one.

"I just really don't understand what the issue of two tracts of land has to do with protecting our health and welfare, whether it's a 1-acre site or a 100-acre site," he said.

Board members Helen Cooper and Eleanor Brent sided with Rose, saying the small size of the tract made a difference. Brent, however, said she did not want the board's decision to "send a signal about this entire area becoming an industrial area."

The rezoning recommendation passed 3-1 against Weisenburger's objections.

"I think this is not only stupid, but arbitrarily capricious, and worse, morally indefensible," Weisenberger said.

In a related matter, board members unanimously denied a request by Michael Oppy, owner of A-1 Auto Parts Inc., to rezone from an agricultural district to heavy industry. Oppy's business is located north of the Guliford residence along the Kansas River.

Wedel recommended denial of the request because the majority of the tract is in the floodway of the Kansas River. He said for now, the company is grandfathered into the area and can continue to operate.

Oppy appealed to the board, saying county commissioners issued him a permit to put a building on the site in 1984 and failed to tell him it was in a floodway.

"Would I have spent $30,000 on a building if I'd have known it was in a floodway?" he said. "I think the county has made a mistake here, and I don't think I should have to suffer."

Rose said he objected because future industrial development could constitute a health hazard.

The request was denied 4-0.

at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo. Between 30 and 40 players will be named for the final two days of trials which will include a doubleheader at McNichols Arena in Denver on May 22.

On May 24, approximately 20 players will be invited to continue training at Georgetown University in mid-July.

The final team of 12 players will be determined before Sept. 2.

Manning and Delray Brooks were the only high school players invited to the 1984 Trials. Alonzo Mourning of Indian River (Va.) H.S. was the only high school player invited this time. Mourning, a 6-foot-10 center, has signed to attend Georgetown.

ing Sedorcek closely is Troy Keller with a 147. Keller is third in the individual standings and teammate Chris Gomez is fourth with a 149. John Shields has 159 and Todd Fowler has a 162.

"From the scores, it appears that Jeff may have come out of his shell a little bit," Sedorcek said. "Troy and Chris are continuing to play consistently. Second place is a good spot for us at this point.

"The 296 score is our best round for the team this spring," he added.

1984, Ramsey sat out of school for a couple of years to work and support his family.

He then got the itch to return to school and the training table. He decided to come to K-State, and with the help of Dennis Erkenbrack, the Cloud County men's basketball coach and athletic director, was able to work as a football trainer.

"(Dennis) made some contacts with some of the people that he knew here, and I started as a trainer in football when I got here," Ramsey said.

Moslem hijackers release hostages from Kuwaiti jet

By The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — Moslem hijackers today freed their hostages on a Kuwaiti jet after saying that Algeria had offered a solution to the 15-day ordeal in which two people were killed and dozens terrorized.

Algeria's Interior Minister, Hedi Khediri, said earlier: "A solution settling all the issues of the hijacking has just been reached." An estimated 35 hostages had been on the plane.

He refused to give any details of the agreement.

Asked by reporters clamoring on the steps of the Algiers airport VIP lounge what would become of the hijackers, he replied only: "That is a question which regards Algeria."

Two women wearing black veils, distant cousins of the emir of Kuwait, were the first off the plane. They entered a waiting white bus.

They were then driven to the airport VIP lounge, and waved to a crowd of journalists at the edge of the tarmac.

Interior Minister Hedi Khediri, announcing the liberation, said the blue and white Boeing 747 would be returned to Kuwait.

In a statement issued in Arabic at 4 a.m. today (11 p.m. EDT Tuesday), the gunmen thanked Algeria for its help "in the case of the brothers in Kuwait and their help in other humanitarian and Moslem causes."

The statement continued: "We declare to the Moslem people and people who seek freedom that today, on the third day of Ramadan, we will end the Kuwaiti airplane operation, giving our best regards to the Kuwaiti people."

Ramadan, the Moslem holy month, started in Algeria on Monday.

The gunmen had demanded that Kuwait release 17 pro-Iranian terrorists convicted of the 1983 bombings of the U.S. and French embassies.

Algerian mediators continued to shuttle between the plane and a high-level Kuwaiti delegation on Tuesday.

A negotiator was seen entering the aircraft three times Tuesday, and a former Algerian prime minister, Mohamed Abdel Ghani, was seen at the foot of the gangway in intense discussion with one mediator.

Algerian authorities had radioed the cockpit to say a "very important person wants to see you before you make your declaration." It was not clear whether the former Algerian official was the person.

Dukakis wins in N.Y.

Jackson runs distant second

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Michael Dukakis swept to a crushing victory over Jesse Jackson in the New York primary Tuesday night and seized control over the turbulent race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"I love New York," the Massachusetts governor crooned in a victory statement prepared for a hotel rally in midtown Manhattan. "Friends, if we can make it here we can make it anywhere."

Sen. Albert Gore Jr. finished a weak third and seemed likely to quit the race on Thursday. He congratulated Dukakis and said the Democratic party was "going to be unified" for the fall campaign.

Vice President George Bush won the Republican primary, with no serious opposition in New York or elsewhere. He told reporters he thought Dukakis was a "good bet" to go on and capture the Democratic nomination and said he was eager to join the battle with whatever opponent the Democrats gave him.

With 76 percent of the precincts reporting, the Democratic vote looked this way:

Dukakis had 671,494 or 53 percent.

Jackson had 411,230 or 33 percent.

Gore had 135,454 or 11 percent.

"I think we have a nominee," said Lynn Cutler, deputy chair of the Democratic National Committee. She said Dukakis now "has to be very careful not to look as though it's a done deal ... There is a tendency in the Democratic Party to slap the hand of the front-runner."

A Gore withdrawal would leave Dukakis the only white candidate left in the race against Jackson — a match-up that seems virtually certain to deliver a string of primary victories to the Massachusetts governor in the six final weeks of the campaign season. Pennsylvania votes next Tuesday and Ohio and Indiana the Tuesday after.

New York offered Jackson an unusually high percentage of black voters that won't be available to him in these upcoming states.

New York was the biggest single-state primary night so far this year, offering 255 delegates. Victory brought Dukakis' national total to half the 2,082 needed to clinch nomination and his aides expressed confidence that they could rally the hundreds of uncommitted party officials who will attend the convention to his side.

Dukakis led for 154 New York delegates and brought his national delegate total to 1,034. Jackson led for 84 to bring his total to 829.

New York offered 96 Republican delegates for vice president Bush, steadily closing in on the 1,139 needed to secure his nomination at the Republican National Convention in August.

Tennessee Gov. Ned McWherter, a key Gore supporter, said he advised the senator to "gracefully get out" of the race and Gore seemed ready to do just that. He congratulated Dukakis on a "super Tuesday" and said: "New York is a real marathon and he beat

Police find victims on Ft. Riley land after 2-hour search

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

A two-hour search on Fort Riley property ended early Tuesday when police found two men who had been injured in a car accident hours earlier.

The search involved the Riley County Police Department, several Riley County Emergency Medical Service vehicles, Fort Riley Military Police and a Fort Riley MAST helicopter.

The accident occurred between 9:30 p.m. and 10 p.m. on a tank training trail three miles west of Keats, said Mark Meseke, Fort Riley media relations officer. Three Fort Riley soldiers were riding in a 1988 Ford Escort and had apparently become lost when the car went off the right side of the trail, rolled over and landed on its top, he said.

Injured in the accident were Specialist 4 Michael B. Crocker, 20; Specialist 4 James Stoklosa, 19; and Private Michael Collings, 17. Crocker, owner of the car, and Collings were taken to Irwin Army Community Hospital, where they were in stable condition undergoing observation Tuesday afternoon, Meseke said. Stoklosa was taken to Stormont Vail in Topeka for a CAT scan.

Meseke said Stoklosa had apparently been riding in the back seat of the car and was not wearing a safety belt when the accident occurred. Crocker and Collings were wearing safety belts, he said.

"The car was in pretty bad shape," he said.

After the accident, Crocker walked about three miles to a farmhouse near Keats and notified authorities.

"Because he was lost, he didn't know where the wreck had occurred," Meseke said, "so it was difficult to locate them."

Meseke said police were not certain who was driving the car or

Gulf 'ghostly' after battles

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — A French warship spotted three mines and Iranian speedboats raided two tankers Tuesday, the day after battles in the southern Persian Gulf in which Iran fired missiles from shore at U.S. Navy vessels.

A marine executive said the gulf appeared "ghostly" from lack of shipping. He and others said commercial vessels were avoiding the waterway, where Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980 and the U.S. Navy sank or damaged six Iranian vessels Monday.

They also said the United States had suspended escorts of Kuwaiti oil tankers temporarily, but Defense Department spokesman Dan Howard denied it. The United States gave American flags and registration to 11 Kuwaiti tankers last year and the Navy escorts them through the gulf.

President Reagan said things were quieter in the gulf Tuesday and "we hope it continues that way."

Iran claimed its speedboats in the southern gulf sank an "American naval logistical ship," killing its crew, an hour after Navy ships destroyed two Iranian oil platforms Monday.

The official Islamic Republic News Agency headlined the dispatch "Yankees Go Down To Watery Grave As Revolutionary Guards Sink U.S. Ship," but it contained no details.

At the Defense Department in Washington, Howard said of the claim: "No report has reached us from our forces in the Gulf of any hostile acts (against them) today."

After the confrontation Monday, the Pentagon said there were no confirmed U.S. casualties but a search was being conducted for a missing AH-1 helicopter with two crewmen aboard. Iran claimed to have shot it down.

At the United Nations in New York, Iran lodged a formal complaint Tuesday about attacks by the "warmonger" United States. Washington responded that its actions had been "necessary and proportionate."

IRNA also said an American attack Monday on the patrol boat Joshan killed 15 crew members and injured 29.

In Monday's operations, U.S. Navy forces destroyed two offshore Iranian oil platforms in the southern Gulf, then sank the Joshan, disabled two frigates and sank or damaged three attack boats.

Iran attacked neutral commercial ships after the raid on the platform, which were in retaliation for a mine that damaged the frigate USS Samuel B. Roberts last week and wounded 10 crewmen.

Tehran radio said Tuesday the Swiss ambassador, who represents American interests in Iran, was summoned to the Foreign Ministry and "given a written warning in regard to America's aggressive attacks." It said the note "emphasized that Iran will retaliate."

Shipping executives, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the French warship spotted three mines in an area of the central gulf previously believed mine-free. No details were available.

Iranians threaten retaliatory actions

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A pro-Iranian group claiming to hold two American hostages said early today there would be "retaliations and retaliations" for the U.S. military action in the Persian Gulf.

The Revolutionary Justice Organization made the threat in a handwritten statement in Arabic delivered after midnight to the independent daily newspaper Al-Nahar in Beirut. Included with the statement was a photograph of Joseph James Cicippio, whom it claims to hold.

The group said it would punish "American aggressions in the gulf."

The statement also cautioned Algeria against any violation or deception in its dealings with the Moslem hijackers of a Kuwaiti plane seized on April 5. The plane is in Algiers.

Cicippio, 57, of Valley Forge, Pa., was acting comptroller of the American University of Beirut. He was kidnapped in the Lebanese capital on Sept. 12, 1986.

Man survives 14-story plunge

NEW YORK — A man plunged Tuesday from the Federal Reserve Bank in lower Manhattan — possibly from the 14th floor — and survived, police said.

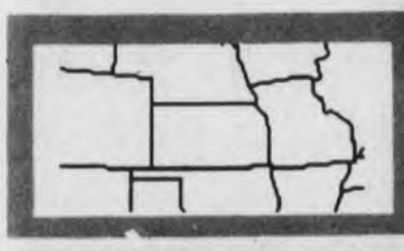
The man, identified as Harold Dlugatch, 25, of Summit, N.J., told police he had been pushed, police spokesman Detective Joseph McConville said.

He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where his condition was being evaluated.

McConville said the man landed on a van parked in front of the 14-story bank.

Dlugatch worked in the bank's statistics department.

Math books have new concept



WEED, Calif. — A former English teacher is getting rave reviews for mathematics textbooks with odd titles like "Mathematics Through Sports" and "Mathematics Through Home Management."

Gary Ellyson, who also used to be a coach, has written four textbooks, and a fifth is on the way. So far, he has sold more than 1,600 books to a broad spectrum of educational institutions.

The soon-to-be released "Mathematics Through Sports" reads like a series of short stories, interrupted with sets of math problems.

"People ask why something like this has never been done before," said Ellyson. "I tell them, 'Because it's a heck of a lot of work.'"

Ellyson, 70, retired eight years ago from his post as superintendent of the Weed Union School District, about 240 miles north of San Francisco, and began writing.

Mail discovered in dumpster

WICHITA, Kan. — The U.S. Postal Service is investigating the discovery of about 5,000 pieces of mail in two dumpsters, postal inspector Bill Stabile said Tuesday.

About 1,000 pieces of mail were found late Monday night in a dumpster in west Wichita, Stabile said. Between 2,000 and 4,000 pieces were found Tuesday in a downtown dumpster, he said.

Stabile said it looked like most of the mail contained checks, and most of it was from the Boeing Co. and Kansas Gas & Electric.

Stabile speculated the mail came from a pre-sorting company that sorts mail by zip codes for businesses before sending it to the post office.

Grain store explosion injures 3

PITTSBURG, Kan. — An explosion and fire at a grain store injured three people Tuesday, including an employee who was in critical condition, authorities said.

Sgt. Kenneth Orender of the Pittsburg Police Department said the explosion occurred inside Grimaldi's Cash Feed & Grain Co. about 2:40 p.m. He said the building was gutted by the fire, which took more than an hour to control.

The Pittsburg City Hall and a nearby bakery were evacuated during the height of the blaze, Orender said.

George Scholes, 64, of Pittsburg, suffered second- and third-degree burns, and was flown to the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., police said.

Two other employees were treated in Pittsburg for first- and second-degree burns and were later released.

The cause of the fire was still under investigation.

Explosion's only witness dies

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The death of the only known witness to a bomb explosion that also killed an 11-year-old girl put up a roadblock in the investigation, police said Tuesday.

"There's nobody else who saw anything or who's come forward or we've been able to locate," said Donald Ash, police media officer. "We don't have anything that would point us toward any suspect except (Harvey) Comstock."

Comstock, 44, died Tuesday morning at the University of Kansas Medical Center, where his legs were amputated after the explosion on the porch of a house Monday. The blast also killed his cousin, Linda Green, who was inside.

Police speculated that Comstock was making the bomb or disassembling it when it exploded as he sat on the top step of the porch. His injuries indicated the bomb was one step below him when it detonated, police said. There are no other suspects in the incident, Ash said.

A spokesman for the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms confirmed Tuesday that the bomb was a homemade pipe bomb.

Investigators were trying to learn why Linda apparently was awake at 2:40 a.m., when the bomb exploded. She was sitting up in bed or standing near the front of the house when the bomb exploded, police said.

An autopsy showed Linda was killed by a piece of shrapnel that pierced her heart. An autopsy was planned on Comstock.

Family members have said they think someone threw the bomb onto the porch.

Moose picks Kansas as home

AGRA, Kan. — A young moose that spent much of late winter traveling through South Dakota and Nebraska into Kansas seems to have chosen the Sunflower State as its new home, park officials say.

Bill Hlavachick, a department and species manager of the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, said Monday that he cannot remember other moose sightings in Kansas. The animals live off of willows, bark and water plants and usually are found in the northern states, he said.

This male moose, believed to be a yearling, first appeared in Phillips County in north central Kansas in February, and has been moving back and forth between that area and central Kansas since then, Hlavachick said.

It can usually be found along a creek northwest of Agra on land belonging to Wayne and Virgina Capps, Mrs. Capps said.

"We call him ours," she said. "He isn't, of course. But that's how we refer to him."

MOE compromise made

Proposal to fund 83 percent of plan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The executive director of the State Board of Regents said Tuesday a committee's recommendation to fund 83 percent of the Margin of Excellence plan shows a strong commitment by the Legislature to improve state universities.

"My sense is there's general satisfaction among the regents and the campuses over this strong show of support," said Stanley Koplik, the executive director.

Meanwhile, the chairman of the House-Senate negotiating committee, Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Lenexa, said the compromise was the best legislators could reach.

Earlier in the session, the Senate approved funding for the entire Margin plan, but the House approved only the salary increases.

"I think it's the best we can do," Bogina said. "I would hope it passes."

The compromise must be approved by the House, the Senate and Gov. Mike Hayden before it becomes law.

On Saturday, the committee recommended funding 83 percent of the money requested by the regents for faculty salary increases and improvements in academic programs.

That amounts to $5.3 million in extra money for salaries and $3.8 million for academic programs, said Ray Hauke, a budget analyst for the regents. The regents had requested $6.3 million for salaries and $4.5 million for other improvements.

The extra money will increase faculty salaries next year by 7.5 percent and allow universities to improve things such as libraries, research equipment and student services.

Under the compromise, all faculty, including researchers and library workers, would receive the salary increases. Hayden recommended that only faculty who teach students receive the salary increases.

Koplik said the conference committee also recommended the entire base budget requested by the regents for next fiscal year. That means the committee recommended 91 percent of the total regents request, he said.

"I think by any stretch of the imagination 91 percent is a very strong statement by the conference committee," Koplik said.

K-Staters take first place in agri-marketing contest

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

For the first time since 1983, K-State's student chapter of the National Agri-Marketing Association will be bringing home the top prize from the National Students' Agri-Marketing Competition in Reno, Nev.

The team won first place with its presentation of a marketing plan for a soybean herbicide that controls the sickel-pod, a weed predominantly found in the southeastern United States.

John Riley, assistant director of ag resident instruction and team adviser, said the team was well-prepared.

"The students have done a lot of background research ... talking to soybean farmers and chemical companies," Riley said, adding that another key factor in winning was the team's "very realistic marketing plan."

Some of the ideas the team developed could be used by chemical companies, Riley said.

"Biological weed control is 'in' right now," said Wally Brockhoff, senior in agricultural economics and a four-year member of the team.

According to Brockhoff, the competition was intense, but the team's attitude helped the situation.

"We came into it not expecting to win," he said. "We knew we'd be (in the finals). ...We didn't know we had won."

Riley said the team's presentation was only a portion of the plan. A large part of the judging was based on content. "We (K-State) had a solid presentation with major content," he said.

According to Riley, the presentations made at the conference have caused convention participants to take notice of the students' abilities. "They realize the students making these presentations might be after their jobs tomorrow," he said. The K—State team will make it's presentation to the entire convention today. Riley said the team is still under enormous pressure because many of the companies attending the convention are bringing some of their clients to hear the presentation.

K-State's team is comprised of eight speakers and two audio-visual aid operators. The competing teams gave their presentations Monday morning before a three-member panel of representatives from the advertising, marketing and public relations fields. There were fifteen judges overall for the competition.

California State-Fresno placed second and Michigan State finished third. The 25-team competition was divided into five heats comprised of five teams each.

K-State will also bring home several other honors from the convention. The student chapter, one of seven chapters recognized, received honorable mention for outstanding excellence in a student chapter.

Horst Leipold, professor of pathology, was given one of three national awards for agricultural excellence for his work in the genetics field.

The K-State student chapter was also recognized for its outstanding careers chairman.

K-State won the first round competing against Central Missouri State, Colorado State University, the University of Illinois and Texas A & M. In the final round, K-State emerged as the winner against Michigan State, Iowa State University, the University of Minnesota-St. Paul and California State-Fresno.

Costa Rican blast injures 6

2 Americans hospitalized

By The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — A fragmentation grenade blew up outside the American-Costa Rican Cultural Center Tuesday, wounding two Americans and four other people, Costa Rican authorities said.

Red Cross officials identified the Americans as Alice Feister, a professor at the Cultural Center from the Washington, D.C. area, and Shelly Bartain, a student from California.

Feister was seriously wounded, but "she's expected to pull through," said U.S. Embassy spokesman Mark Krischick.

Krischick said earlier Tuesday that the explosion was believed caused by a malfunctioning power line transformer.

A preliminary report prepared by the Intelligence and Security Directorate said the explosion was caused by a fragmentation grenade. Three cars were damaged, the report said.

Hernan Garron, the public security minister, told The Associated Press officials had no suspects in the incident. He called the explosion "a terrorist act."

Krischick said Feister suffered a severe artery wound and was operated on immediately at Calderon Guardia Hospital. Feister was reported in fair condition.

Bartain suffered head and knee lacerations but was said to be in good condition. She was expected to return to the United States today, a doctor at the hospital said.

Krischick said Tuesday evening that U.S. officials had been unable to determine that the explosion was caused by a grenade. However, he noted Costa Rican officials "were collecting evidence all day."

"We haven't had the opportunity to review the evidence," Krischick said. "We will continue to review the situation."

The spokesman, contacted by telephone, said the explosion occurred shortly after 8 a.m. (6 a.m.) about 50 yards south of the cultural center building in the eastern Los Yoses district. The structure was not damaged, he said.

President Oscar Arias visited the injured in the hospital and later condemned the incident. "This country, which is a haven of peace, one day could turn into a Costa Rica invaded by terrorism and violence if we don't adopt energetic measures to prevent it."

The explosion follows an attack on the U.S. Consulate in Honduras April 7 by students enraged by the forced extradition of a suspected drug dealer.

Fall tuition increase would benefit K-State

It seems like everything costs more these days — food, cars, beer and now tuition.

Next fall, students will be paying more in tuition than they have paid previously. Resident undergraduate students will be paying $550 a semester, and non-residents will be paying $1,765 a semester. Graduate students' tuition will increase to $670 for residents and $1,885 for non-residents.

But the price increases do not necessarily stop there. The Kansas Board of Regents is considering a proposal to raise tuition even higher for the fall of 1989.

Under the current recommendation, tuition would be raised an additional 5 percent. This proposal will be voted on at the regents' May meeting.

What this increase means is that in 1989 tuition for undergraduate residents would be $578, and for non-residents it would be $1,977. Resident graduate students would have to pay $728, and non-resident graduate students would pay $2,127.

It is easy to complain and attack the regents for being insensitive, money-hungry bureaucrats. But, in reality, these increases are needed and students should be willing to meet these demands.

The increases are necessary to keep up with the rising cost of living. If everything else is increasing in price, tuition should increase as well just to maintain a break-even level.

But more importantly, this tuition increase furthers the Margin of Excellence proposal, which most sensible people agree is desperately needed to bring regents institutions up to par. If students want the benefits that are to come from this proposal, they need to be willing to put out a little themselves.

And overall, a $43 dollar increase in two years for resident undergraduates isn't that much to pay for the increase in quality of education at this University.

Even parking concerns fail to raise interest

When next fall rolls around and students find themselves with higher parking fees and no more parking spaces, they shouldn't say they weren't warned.

Because they were.

Last Friday was the time for any and all complainers to give their thoughts, opinions and ideas concerning decisions about on-campus parking for next year and the future. From the number of complainants, the participants in the meeting should have filled Ahearn Field House.

However, it was far less crowded. Out of more than 18,000 students, fewer than a half dozen were there; out of more than 2,100 classified and state employees, about the same number showed up; and of the more than 2,500 faculty and administrative employees, fewer than 10 people voiced their opinions.

If everyone is lucky, the panel members — John Lambert, director of public safety; John DeVore, Council on Police, Traffic and Parking chairman; and K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom — will not take the lack of participants as a sign of a lack of concern.

Parking is a real problem on this campus. It is hoped that the panelists came away with a sense of how the proposed changes will affect everyone, even those who did not attend the meeting.

New fees discussed at the meeting were the increases in student and faculty/staff permit fees to $30 and $50 per year, respectively, and reserved stalls for state vehicles going from no fee to $150 for 10-hour reserved stalls, and $225 for 24-hour reserved stalls. Also, tickets for basic offenses will go from $8 to $10.

While last Friday's meeting was the time to make any comments about these proposals, there is another chance to be heard before a final draft is passed by the Council on Police Traffic and Parking. Its next meeting is at 3 p.m. Friday in Union 203.

It is open to the public, and it will probably be the last chance K-Staters will have to comment on what they pay for a chance to go hunting.

Nebraska legislators deserve 'A' for effort

Members of Nebraska's Legislature tried something recently that could be more expected of Oklahoma's.

They proposed a bill that would allow the University of Nebraska to pay its football players. And the university encouraged the idea.

The idea may have been illegal and against everything the NCAA stands for, but it's still a good one, right? Hardly.

But the legislators tried anyway. They reasoned that the NCAA rules were unfair and therefore deserved to be changed.

So their tactic was basic: Make a stand, right or wrong, then figure out the how the policy would work later.

The legislators proposing the bill seemed to think all they had to was pass it and the NCAA would suddenly do an about-face and see that the rules were wrong.

At least the majority of the legislators realized that college players are not professionals and should not be treated as such.

Input needed in Van Zile renovation

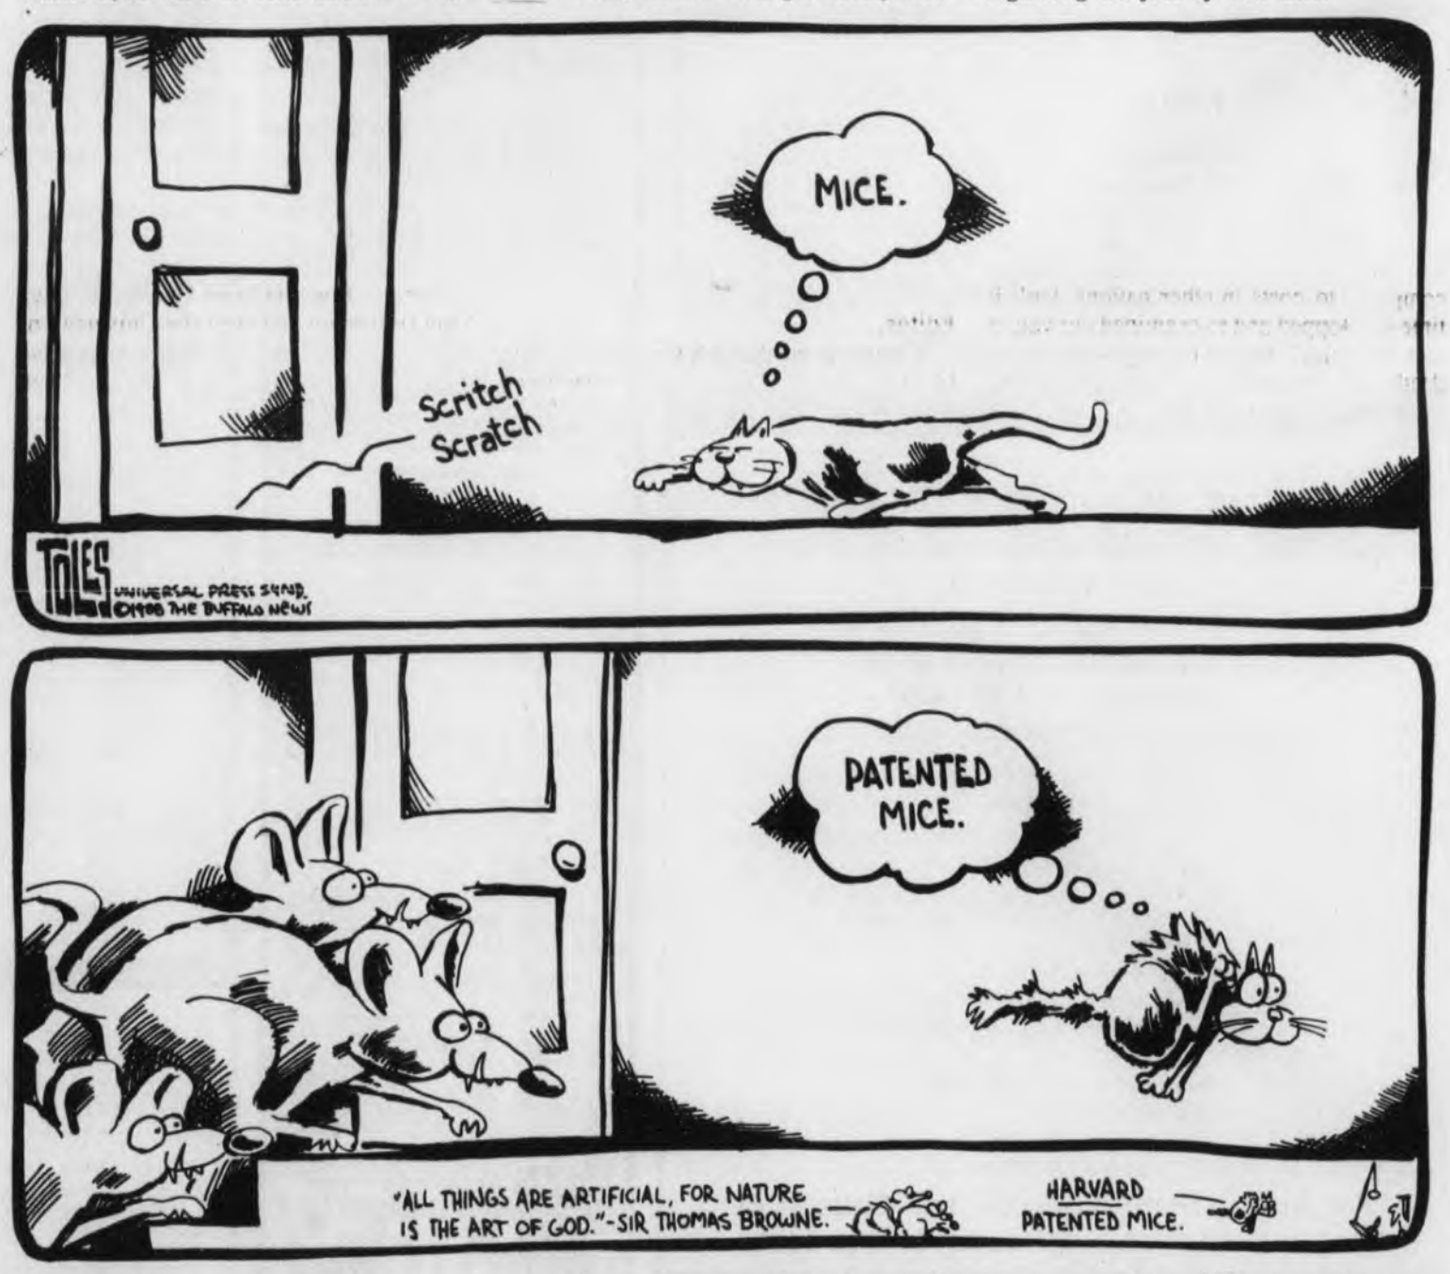
Plans are being made to renovate Van Zile Hall — still. Since the oldest residence hall on campus was closed in the fall of 1984 due to rising operating costs and declining enrollment, the Department of Housing as well as the University have developed a variety of tentative plans for renovating the 62-year-old structure. But regardless how definite any of the "blueprints" seemed at the time of their creation, none of them survived past the developmental stages.

The Department of Housing originally decided to close Van Zile with the intention that it would re-open one year later after being renovated at an approximate cost of $800,000. But the plans changed as the estimated renovation costs increased, and through the following months and years, Housing and the University administration offered a succession of proposals for the fate of the building, including using the hall for the Department of Continuing Education, using it for a consolidated computing and data processing center, using it for a combination of options and, at least temporarily, using it for nothing at all.

Each plan had its moment in the spotlight, some more than once, but so far the last option on this list has been the only victor in this seemingly passive struggle for use of the hall.

And so Van Zile sits empty, at least for now — but maybe not for long. Because of a forecast of increased enrollment, the administration is once again planning to renovate Van Zile as a residence hall, and once again the plans are far from being definite. The size of the rooms, the arrangement and number of facilities, the date the renovation will begin and even an accurate estimate of cost are factors that are still in the process of being determined. However, at least one thing has been tentatively planned: that the funding will come from increasing residence hall fees.

Because relatively little concerning this issue is concrete, these latest plans could be viewed, with good reason, as just another "farce." But at the same time, these most recent developments have created an ideal opportunity for students to take a greater interest in the fate of Van Zile — before decisions are made that won't ultimately be in the best interest of students and could generate a great deal of after-the-fact controversy.



Does the University really need more housing? Will it in the future? Could students, as well as faculty, be better served if the hall were used for other purposes? And finally, should students living in the other residence halls bear the financial burden of funding the renovation of a hall in which they don't even live?

Just because the plans are, for now, to make Van Zile a residence hall, the door has not been entirely shut on other possibilities. Other ideas, besides those previously mentioned, that have been "tossed around" at one time or another include transforming the hall into an art museum, an "annex" to Holton Hall to house Student Services, or even a north-side union. Whether the administration would ever seriously consider any of these suggestions is questionable, but such ideas serve to demonstrate that there are a variety of potential uses for the vacant hall. While such options aren't necessarily limitless, they do exist.

And this issue is one that also involves historical value. K-State students demonstrated their commitment to this campus and its buildings more than a decade ago when they initiated a successful campaign to save Nichols Hall. Although Van Zile stands empty under entirely different circumstances than did Nichols, it too is a historical building that is worthy and deserving of student attention.

Numerous ideas concerning what is to become of Van Zile have come and gone, and almost four years after its closing, it remains empty. But although the possibility exists that renovation plans will again fall short of expectations, something will no doubt be done with the hall eventually. Maybe Van Zile should be a residence hall, maybe not. But we have waited this long, so let's make sure we get what we really want from the Van Zile renovation project.

Tiffany Engelkemier, freshman in political science; Anita Krug, freshman in business; Jacinda Zimmerman, sophomore in business; and Ira Bolden, sophomore in electrical engineering, are Student Senate interns. They and other interns will be conducting a survey this week to collect students' input regarding the fate of Van Zile.

ASK exists to help Kansas students

Commentary

SCOTT KING
Guest Columnist

Hey, you! Yes, you. Since you are a K-State student, you should be reading this column. Now I know these columns aren't as fun as a trip to Disney World or as exciting as a Porsche for Christmas, and I certainly don't plan a career in journalism, but I think this is a topic that everyone should read about. I am talking about an organization called ASK.

This acronym stands for the Associated Students of Kansas. How many of you realize that you are automatically a member of ASK just by paying fees at the beginning of every semester? I see a few heads nodding, but mostly I see students shaking their heads and saying "What the heck is ASK?" Well, this column is going to focus on the task of educating the student body on the merits of ASK and how to become involved.

One program in which ASK has been actively involved is the Kansas Career Work Study Program. This is a program in which students apply through the financial aid office at their university, then get matched — according to their field of interest — with area businesses. Through state funding, the University contributes half and the participating businesses contribute the other half of the stipend.

ASK played a significant role in the passage of this bill by helping author it, giving testimonials at the sub-committee hearings and lobbying heavily for it as it went through the House and Senate. ASK is continually seeking more money each year for the program as the program benefits more and more students each year.

A second program in which ASK played a major role is the Kansas State Scholarship Program. This program is for those students who are designated State of Kansas Scholars. This stipend encourages those students to stay in the state to attend college since it can only be awarded if the student stays in Kansas to attend college. ASK co-authored a bill to increase the stipend from $500 to $1,000. This bill passed and ASK was given a large share of the credit.

OK, most of you are nodding your heads in agreement that ASK is a beneficial group, but I still see a few skeptics, most of whom are graduate students wondering what ASK can do for them. That is perfectly understandable, but I think I can show you a program that has helped, and will continue to help, grad students. This is the ever-popular grad fee waiver for those of you who are graduate teaching assistants.

In the beginning, this started out as a program which would waive 50 percent of a GTA's fees. ASK backed this as a viable way to attract and keep good graduate students at our universities. ASK, however, wanted to see this pushed a little further, so it lobbied for an increase of the waiver to 75 percent (which passed) and now it is pushing for a 100 percent waiver, which has a good chance of passing.

Now that I have told you a little bit about the group, I would like to get to my main emphasis — getting students involved in ASK. Some people have gripes about ASK policies, and others just don't know how to get involved. ASK was put down in a column a few weeks ago by Chris Kippes. He stated that ASK was costly and powerless. Why is this so? It is because of people like you, Mr. Kippes, who don't take a few minutes of their time to give me a call and find out what it takes to get involved in ASK.

My office phone number is 532-7290. If I'm not there, leave your name and number and I'll get back to you.

Scott King, junior in political science, is campus director of ASK.

Opinion

Finally, Reagan asks Congress before acting

It was good of President Reagan to consult with leaders of Congress before making the "measured response" Monday of committing an act of war against Iran.

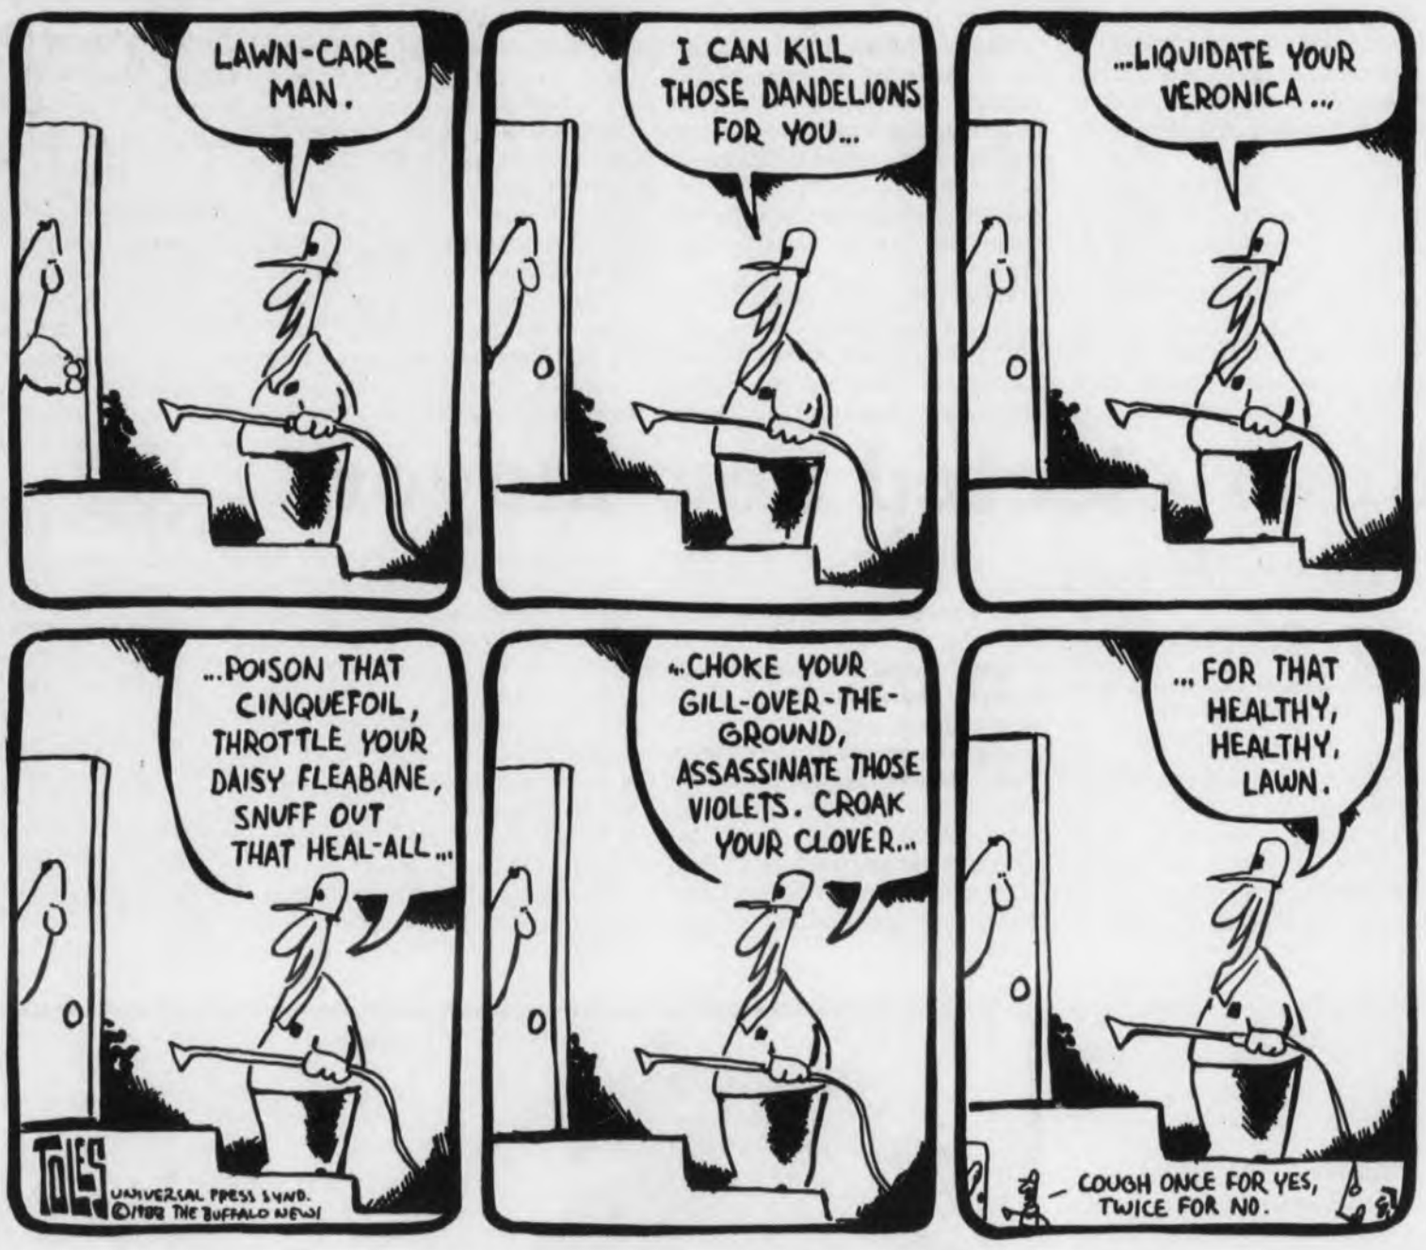
Certainly the destruction of Iranian military installations — two oil platforms which served as supply and radar bases supporting Iranian patrol boats operating in the Persian Gulf — by U.S. Navy warships constitutes an act of war.

Reagan and Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci said the attack was a "measured response" intended to show the Ayatollah Khomeini's regime that it could not engage in "irresponsible" behavior without being punished.

Iran was punished for placing mines in the Gulf. One of those mines damaged and nearly sank the USS Samuel B. Roberts last week.

Congressmen and senators expressed support of the Reagan administration's decision to take punitive action against Iran.

And congressional leaders like Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., and Speaker of the House Jim Wright, D-Texas, complimented Reagan for briefing them Sunday, before the attack took place, about the intended hostilities.



Such a pre-attack briefing for legislators is quite a departure from the past for Reagan.

In 1986, when the United States bombed Libya to punish Muammar el-Quaddafi, congressional leaders were not informed until after the attack because, the administration said, word of the attack might leak.

Of course, such concern did not apply to France and Great Britain. Details of the mission were given to both countries prior to the launch of the assault.

And Congress, like the rest of the nation, was surprised at the news of the Grenada invasion. Again, neither the Congress nor its leaders were informed of the invasion because word might leak.

Perhaps the briefing of congressional leaders prior to the attack shows that Reagan and his assistants have developed a new respect for the judgment of the American people. After all, the people chose the members of Congress to represent them in the first place.

Obscene report

Editor,

The month of March saw a week set aside where agriculture was feted all across our state. Unfortunately, much of the emphasis was on the cheapness of food in America, compared to costs in other nations. Isn't it time we stopped and re-examined our values and priorities? We're buying weapons of death and destruction at cost-plus prices, while food — which is life — is valued at surplus prices.

There's something wrong in a nation where thousands of city people are homeless, while our cheap food policy mandates that tens of thousands of rural homes now stand empty. Let's look at the values of our own state Board of Agriculture.

The Board submitted a report to the governor and Legislature on the future of Kansas agriculture. One of its recommendations was to "increase access to opportunities to supplement farm income so that the farmer or spouse can work off the farm to generate the needed income flow to maintain the farm and pay living expenses."

Is there any other occupation in this nation whose elected, appointed or hired representatives would have the audacity to suggest that you or your spouse maintain a second job to pay living expenses? Would Kansas teachers clap and cheer if the National Education Association suggested to the Legislature that they didn't want higher salaries — just the opportunity for their spouses to pump gas at night or work in a canning factory?

This report is an obscenity and should be banned like any other pornography. The question for me is not whether the Board of Agriculture should become involved politically, but rather are its members intellectually competent to be involved in anything agriculture-related?

If this is indicative of the Board's priorities and values, I'd suggest its members resign. Future Kansas family farmers deserve better.

Calvin safety

Editor,

It seems to me that this University should be concerned about the safety of its students. A lack of fire alarms in Calvin Hall indicates otherwise.

By not having fire alarms, Calvin is breaking the Fire Life Safety Code for Manhattan city buildings. Because the building is located on campus, the Manhattan Fire Department does not have jurisdiction over Calvin. The state inspects University buildings and Calvin is not required by the state code to have fire alarms. Because the building is on campus, does it make it less likely to burn?

Something needs to be done now to help ensure the safety of hundreds of students who use Calvin. The installation of smoke detectors is a simple solution. It would be cost efficient to put smoke detectors throughout Calvin. In the long run, smoke detectors could help save lives.

Meal plan

Editor,

K-State food service has recently been recognized as No. 1 in the nation for menu planning. It is too bad the meal plan itself could not receive such recognition. Currently, every student living in a residence hall pays the same price for room and board, whether or not they choose to eat every meal served.

K-State does not offer its students any alternative meal plans; rather it requires all residents living in the residence halls to buy a 20-meal plan. Not everyone eats three meals a day. In fact, many students never eat breakfast. Students' costs could be cut if they did not have to pay for those meals which they did not eat.

Many other colleges such as Wichita State University, Emporia State University, Iowa State University and even the University of Oklahoma offer their students alternative plans. Their students can choose from options such as a 20-, 15-, 13- or 10-meal plan, which includes choices of no breakfasts, no weekend meals, or both.

K-State students are not offered any choices and many are paying for more than they are consuming. You would not pay a restaurant for a meal it did not serve you, yet that is exactly what many students at K-State do every day simply because they have no choice. Students should not have to pay for more than they receive.

Ensure separation

Editor,

If a holiday for Easter is inappropriate, perhaps K-State should cancel Christmas vacation as well; that would ensure separation of church and state as Phil Schlee suggested is necessary in Thursday's Collegian.

Actually, it is my perception that Easter and Christmas holidays have not been a statement about religion. In the past, universities have attempted to be supportive of families, providing vacations at times in the year that were important to families for economic or social reasons. I assume that spring break used to allow time for students to help with spring planting, an economic concern for families, for example.

Since it was customary for the majority of families, at least in the past, to eat meals together on important occasions, the University made allowance for such social needs, selecting vacation dates that met the needs of the largest number of individuals (since it would be impractical to have as vacation days every possible occasion for which families might want to gather).

In the case of Christmas vacation, it happened in most cases to meet the needs of those who celebrate Jewish and Christian rituals at that time and those who simply enjoy the commercial aspects of the time. I don't think the intention was to rate Jewish or Christian religions as better than others! Likewise, on Easter Monday, I assume the logic was that many families would be meeting for an Easter dinner (religious or otherwise) and they wanted to feel free to do so without having to send students back to K-State late at night in order to make Monday classes.

I don't think the goal was to promote Christ. If a majority of the citizens of Kansas were Jewish, then it would be logical to address the needs of the majority and provide for a Passover holiday, not to honor Moses but to accommodate the social needs of the largest number of families.

My point is this: Select those holidays that benefit families economically or socially the most, regardless of the background for those holidays.

Dreadful killer

Editor,

AIDS education is now a law in the state of Kansas. Students from kindergarten to seniors in high school will be educated. Why stop there?

Students at K-State need to know about this dreadful killer that stalks our campus. The volunteer student educators are doing a great job, but even their efforts reach only approximately 6 percent of the students here at K-State. Something needs to be done. After all, education is our best defense against this disease.

Rights vs. politics

Editor,

Recent letters have objected to funding the K-State chapter of Amnesty International for the reasons that: One, Amnesty is a political organization; and two, it does not involve students. Neither statement is correct.

The first argument stems from Bernie Giefer's false assertion that Amnesty is a political organization. Whatever Mr. Giefer's perception of Amnesty's aims, the by-laws of the organization explicitly state that it is non-political. To consider it otherwise comes close to Orwellian doublespeak, where Amnesty becomes a political organization in order to justify the personal arguments and viewpoints of Mr. Giefer.

The second statement is also false. Each month, K-State students are present at Amnesty meetings. Once or twice each month, Amnesty has a table in the Union from which it disseminates information about human rights to students. Most importantly, every month students write letters to foreign governments in an effort to counteract human rights abuses abroad.

We are fortunate to live in a country where we enjoy free speech (witness this debate), where we are free to worship as we wish, where we do not suffer discrimination on the basis of ethnic origin. These are basic human rights.

However, there are many countries where people do not benefit from such fundamental privileges. Countries where people are imprisoned because of things they say, because of the God they worship or because they belong to the "wrong" ethnic group. In these countries, human rights have become linked to the political system and human rights have become political rights.

That is exactly what Amnesty is trying to change, to ensure that no one — not even Bernie Giefer — will confuse human rights with politics.

Proven laws

Editor,

This letter is in response to Rizwan Mithani's commentary in the April 8 Collegian, "Debating God's existence."

I realize that you have every right to express your opinion concerning the existence of God. However, I do not believe that you have the right to discuss evolution because it is obvious you know nothing about it. In order to understand evolution, one must have some knowledge of the basic laws of genetics, heredity and natural selection. All of these have been extensively studied for many years and, in the opinion of many of us "so-called scientists," they have been proven. The evidence for evolution is all around us. Open your eyes!

As to your reference to the thermodynamics law that states that all natural processes proceed toward a state of disorder, this law holds true in a system that does not exchange energy with its surroundings. However, I believe the sun produces an adequate amount of energy to provide for the natural order and life on earth. Plants harvest energy from the sun and in turn provide energy for animals, including humans.

Or are you so far above the rest of us that you don't eat? I suggest that you open and read a biology or chemistry book before you spout off about how little scientists know. Scientists are people who care about the world we live in and search for answers in order to improve the quality of life for everyone. I wonder if your God would rather have people who sit by passively waiting for the world to end. Mine wouldn't!!

Protests over King holiday representative of campus racism

Editor,

I'm still noticing a lot of people complaining about not getting a day off for Easter and blaming it on Martin Luther King Jr. I've also heard a lot of racial comments that, if you remove the slang, state that a "black" person does not deserve a national holiday.

I've done some research on racism at K-State and have found that it exists, and this is only one of the ways in which it does exist. The problem is that no one wants to admit that things such as these are racist. Here's another example:

How many times have you heard the "Buckwheat" chants at Ahearn Field House and wondered if they were intended to be racist? It's obvious that they were, after all, never directed toward a white student. Public comments such as these make prospective students think twice about attending a school that has fun at the expense of others.

Have you ever wondered why there are only 530 black students enrolled at K-State? Let me ask you this: Would you attend school here if you were black? I'm not a black person, but I don't have to be to see racial slurs and discrimination. I would like to see the enrollment of black students increase at K-State, but how can it when there are so many public displays of bad attitudes toward them?

They don't have to be a minority because of their number as well as their race. We need to direct ourselves away from past racial attitudes and toward a healthier state of equality.

Safety high priority for laboratory facility

Completion of new building set for fall 1988

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

Despite some minor setbacks, the new Chemistry/Biochemistry Building will be ready for students when they return in the fall.

Joseph Paukstelis, professor of chemistry and chairman of the building committee for the new facility, said inspections are being conducted before finishing work is done to the interior.

"The date (for the opening) has been slipping a little, but they have begun the various inspections of the building," Paukstelis said. "They found some small, tiny problems. But some of the problems are hard to get at already, so the contractor is in the process of taking care of them. That means the projected date, June 1, is probably not going to be met."

Paukstelis said the latest date for completion is Aug. 1 in order to have the building ready for the start of the semester later that month.

Most of the space in the new building is dedicated to research and teaching laboratories, with some office space for faculty and graduate students doing research, Paukstelis said. About 62 percent of the lab space will be used for chemistry and about 38 percent will be for biochemistry.

When plans were drawn for an addition to the chemistry and biochemistry departments, it was decided modern lab space was the highest priority, due mainly to inadequate ventilation in Willard Hall. Paukstelis said safety was the main concern when designing the new labs.

"(Safety) was the overriding criteria," Paukstelis said. "In terms of everything, safety was put above all else."

The high priority given to safety sometimes came at the expense of floor space or added cost, but Paukstelis said the planners were willing to accept that.

Paukstelis said the architecture of the building was also a high priority.

"One of the charges given to the architect was try to blend the building in," Paukstelis said.

Initially there were some opponents to this plan, but now that the stone work is done, Paukstelis said he is very pleased with the building's appearance.

"(Safety) was the overriding criteria. In terms of everything, safety was put above all else."
—Joseph Paukstelis, professor of chemistry

While Paukstelis is happy that a new facility is being built, he said the structure represents only about 45 percent of the department's need as submitted to the Kansas Board of Regents. The second phase of the building, which would be located south of the first phase, would contain classrooms and an expanded library. Paukstelis is not optimistic about seeing the second phase become a reality any time soon.

"Six months ago, I would have said it's on the current five-year plan, but more recently I have been told that it may have been slipping on the priority list, which would be a shame because of the unsafe conditions still in (Willard)," Paukstelis said.

A study has also been done on the possibility of renovating Willard Hall. The proposed renovation includes a new library to be built above ground across Mid Campus Drive, connecting Willard and King halls. Paukstelis said the study found the cost of the renovation would be about 80 percent to 90 percent of that of a new building. Renovation would also disrupt activities in Willard.

"Because of the cost, (renovation) certainly would not be my best choice," Paukstelis said.

Paukstelis said money has been a problem with the first phase as well.

"The budget was split ... and it was split 'well, you are building 45 percent of the space, you ought to get 45 percent of the money.' The problem was, laboratories cost more than classrooms, so we were a little bit short," Paukstelis said.

Paukstelis said there has been some talk of renaming the building, but for now it will be simply called the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building.

Fiser elected new mayor

Duties defined as ceremonial

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

The city of Manhattan now has a new mayor.

City Commissioner Dave Fiser was elected Tuesday to succeed Gene Klingler. Klingler has served as mayor since April of 1987.

"I'm looking forward to another good year," Fiser said. He also thanked Klingler for leading Manhattan the past year.

Fiser said he was happy to be elected to the office, but said his duties as mayor are mostly ceremonial.

"Being mayor is just like being one of the commissioners, except for the added duty of attending ceremonies," he said.

The Commission also presented Klingler with a plaque and a gold-plated gavel for his service to the city.

Commissioner Kent Glasscock was elected mayor pro-tem. Both Glasscock and Fiser will serve in office until the second regular meeting in April 1989.

After the election, commissioners approved the first readings of six neighborhood zoning ordinances. These ordinances proposed rezoning residential areas southwest of Platt Street to Sunset Avenue from three-family districts to four-family districts and the area south of College Heights to the east side of Sunset from a three-family district to a two-family district.

Readings were also approved to rezone the area east of Sunset to Anderson Avenue and north to 17th Street from two-family districts to four-family districts.

The areas south of Fairchild Avenue between 14th and 17th streets were also approved to be rezoned from three-family to four-family districts.

All the readings passed the Commission with a 5-0 vote.

The zoning ordinances will be up for final approval at the next meeting in May.

Speaker to focus on child care

By The Collegian Staff

The need for child care and the political and economical factors involved in obtaining it will be the focus of "Child Care Crisis: Issue of the '80s" at 7 p.m. today in Justin 109.

The forum, sponsored by the Department of Human Development and Family Studies, will feature Beverly Schmalzried, director of social services for the U.S. Air Force.

The costs involved to society for supporting or refusing to provide quality child care will also be addressed.

Schmalzried will discuss "Military Families, Youth and Children," at 3 p.m. Thursday in Justin 109. This lecture will include the realities that are faced when one or both parents are in the military service.

"Dr. Schmalzried's appearance on campus comes at a particularly appropriate time," said John Murray, head of the Department of Human Development and Family Studies. "The week before she arrives has been designated as the National Week of the Young Child."

Schmalzried received a bachelor's degree from Fort Hays State University and a master's degree from K-State in family and child development. She received a doctorate from Florida State University.

As "the lusty month of May" approaches, and grocery stores' produce sections begin to glow with peaches, shine with rich, dark sensuous plums and overflow with the round, fullness of the grapes and cherries, the fruit season officially begins.

The fruit season usually begins about the middle of May and fresh fruit can be bought until the end of August or early September.

Dave Moran, produce manager at the Dillons Food Store in Westloop, said that fruit has been selling well.

While it isn't officially the fruit season, Dillons is already packed with strawberries, green grapes from Chile, watermelons from Mexico, and many other fruits.

The task of the shopper is choosing the most delectable fruits and knowing when they are ripe.

This is done in many different ways.

While strolling through the produce section some shoppers prefer to gently fondle the many different fruits, while some just enjoy the aromatic perfume that melons secrete when they are ripe.

"It's hard to explain," Moran said. "I go by feel. You want it to just barely give. You don't want it too soft. If it's too soft then it's too ripe," he said.

Dillons has several different kinds of melons now and will continue to receive more throughout the summer months.

Melons, except watermelons, are classified in three ways.

The true cantaloupe, grown almost exclusively in Europe, is oblong in shape and has a very green, netted rind.

The second is the muskmelon — what people in the United States call the cantaloupe — which is rather yellowish-colored and round.

The last group is the winter melons that include the casaba, Spanish and honeydew melons.

Cantaloupes usually will turn a yellowish color when they are ripe. Some people, though, prefer to look at the netting.

"If it's an even net, it's usually a better melon," Moran said.

The honeydew is probably the most difficult melon to tell if it is ripe or not, he said. One way to tell is — for some reason — the honeydew will become sticky when it is ripe.

There is really no truly safe way to tell if a watermelon is ripe until a person cuts into it, Moran said.

One way some people decide if a watermelon is ripe or not, is to thump it. If the watermelon is immature it will make a sharp metallic sound when thumped, while a mature, ripe melon will have a dull, muffled sound.

Other fruit fondlers like to imbed their fingernails into the watermelons, scraping at the skin of the watermelon to determine it's ripeness.

All melons, including the watermelon, are very nutritious and good for body processes.

Cantaloupes and watermelons have a higher specific nutritional content than do the lighter fleshed winter melons, but all melons are suited for dieting and cool refreshment.

Most melons, except watermelons, will give off an odor to tell people when they are ripe. If a shopper has to pick them up to get a sniff, then they're not ready yet.

The preparation and appearance of a fruit when served is as important as determining its freshness.

When a light colored fruit — like the banana, peach or apple — is to be sliced and served, a good way to preserve their quality of appearance is to sprinkle ascorbic acid over them. This will maintain the appearance and quality of the fruit longer.

Fresh citrus fruit is excellent for good health and also gives people energy as well as a refreshing break.

Exposure to warm air will cause most citrus fruit to dry and the sugar in the fruit to ferment. For this reason it is best to keep citrus fruit refrigerated.

Black and red grapes are not available yet this year, Moran said. But in two or three weeks when the California grapes are ready, people will be able to purchase them.

To prevent grapes from shriveling and becoming soft, eat from little bunches off of the main stem. Picking grapes off one at a time will cause the stem end to bleed. Half-eaten bunches of grapes will lose their sparkling appearance and will not last as long.

Grapes, besides being an excellent food source, also help to maintain good kidney functions.

Like grapes, strawberries tend to bruise fairly easily and should not be washed until they are ready to be used.

To determine the freshness of other fruits like peaches and nectarines the firmness or softness will tell when they are ripe.

Strawberry Frost

¾ cup fresh strawberries (whole or frozen)
1 cup orange juice
2 tablespoons sugar
9 ice cubes

Combine strawberries, orange juice, sugar and ice in a blender and process one-minute, or until smooth. Makes one serving.

Fruit Pizza

2 packages Pillsbury frozen sugar cookie dough
2 packages strawberry cream cheese
2 packages cream cheese
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Assorted fruits (peaches, apples, strawberries, banana, papaya or whatever desired)
4 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons powder sugar

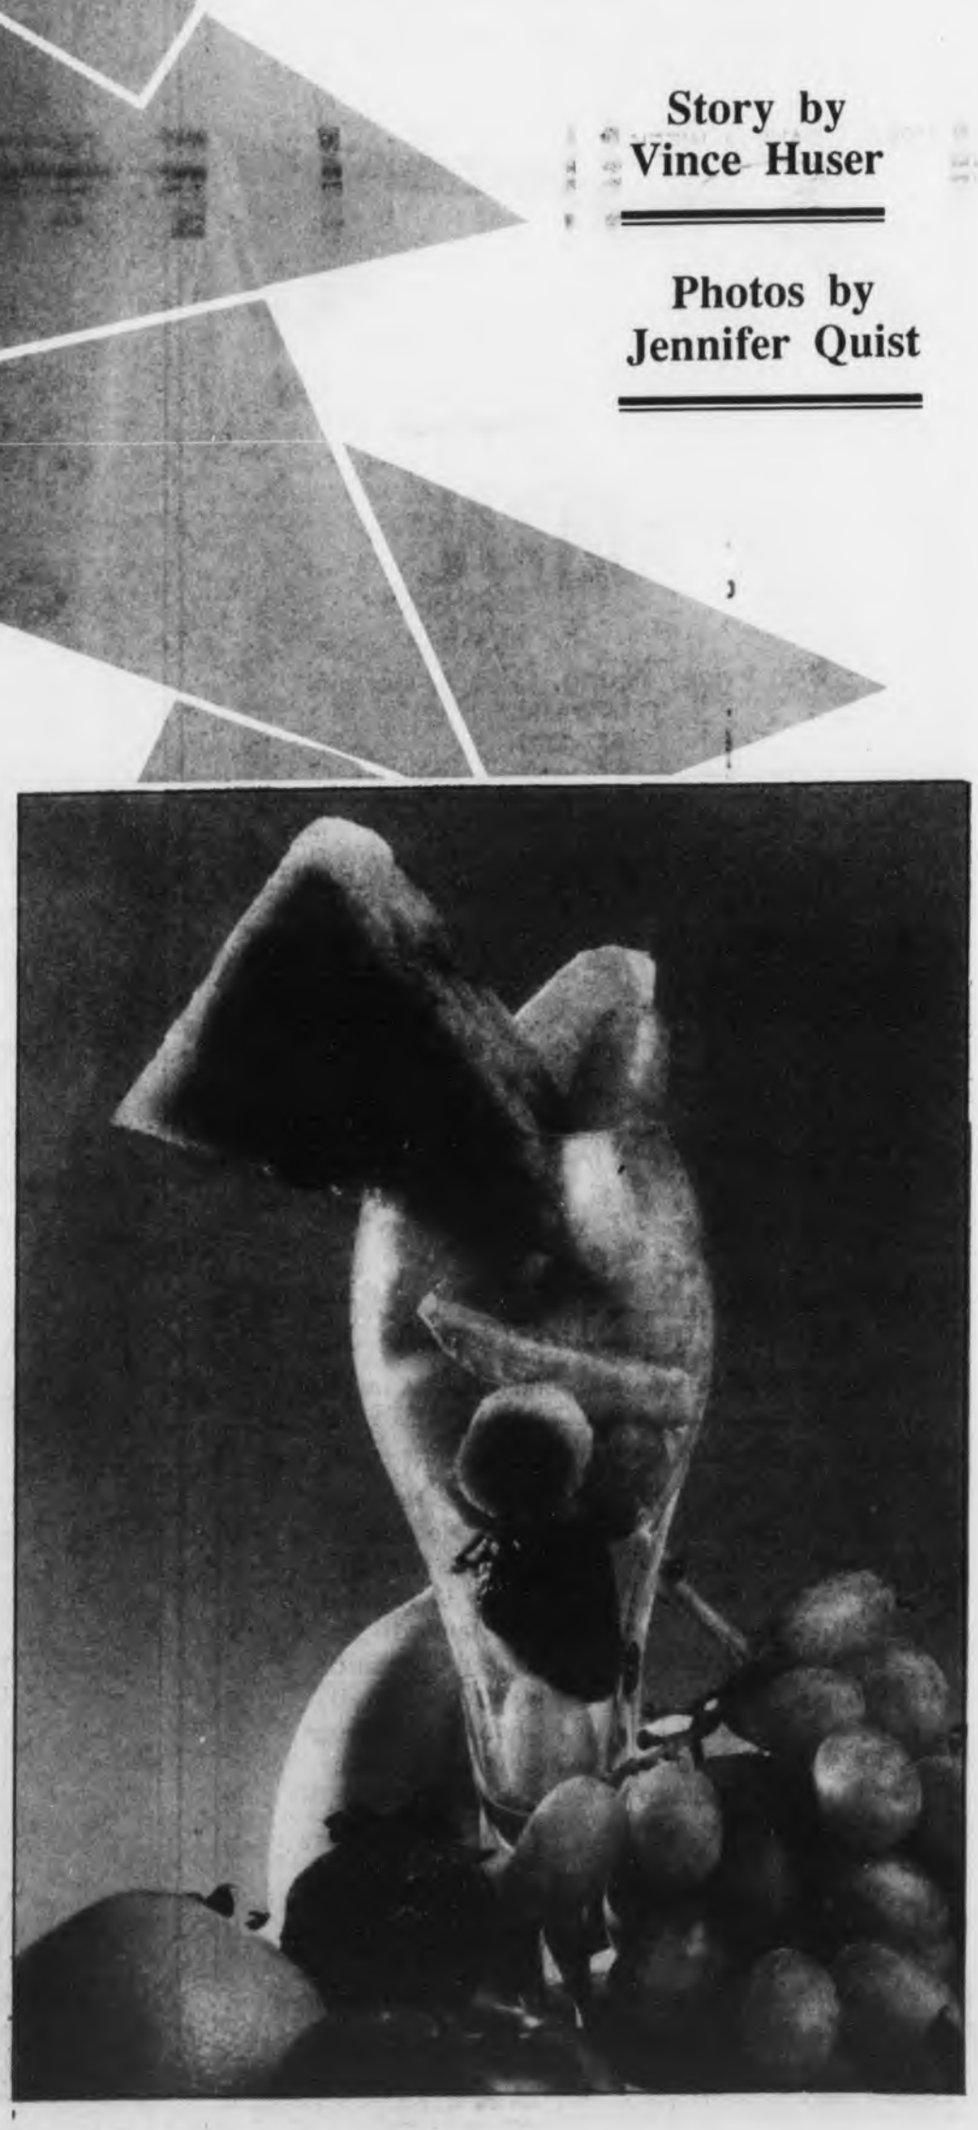
Spread cookie dough on cookie sheet, bake at 425 degrees until slightly brown on top.

Cut up fruit and mix with 2 tablespoons sugar and lemon juice

Add the remaining sugar to the cream cheeses and mix well then spread over cooled cookie crust. Place assorted fruit on top and sprinkle with powder sugar.

Watermelon Bowl

Watermelon, honeydew melon balls, banana chunks, peach slices, strawberries, grapes, blueberries and cantaloupe balls



Almost any fresh fruit is at home in this melon bowl, and variety makes a colorful salad. Select a watermelon to suit the number of guests. Cut off the top one-third of melon. Scoop out melon balls, leaving a two inch shell. Cut edge of melon in a zig-zag design. Combine melon balls and remaining fruit; toss lightly. Spoon fruit mixture into shell.

Coconut Delight

Remove top of coconut. This should produce a hole one-inch in diameter. Drain and reserve the milk, adding it to that of a second coconut. Pour into hollow coconut shell.

Add one large jigger of light rum, 3 teaspoons apricot liqueur or Cointreau and 3 teaspoons coconut cream.

Add ¼ cup crushed ice, shake, insert straws and serve.

Dietetics fields undergo changes

By Jeff Stead
Collegian Reporter

Marketing, dietetics, and hotel and restaurant management industries have a great deal in common and must support each other, said Darlene Dougherty, management consultant and lecturer at San Jose State University.

Dougherty told the audience at Tuesday's 14th annual Grace M. Shugart lecture in Forum Hall that the areas are closely tied.

"We each have an expertise that we bring, but we all have a common thread that goes through and connects us all together. That common thread is food," Dougherty said.

Dougherty defined marketing as knowing customers' needs and turning those needs into wants. However, the thing people in dietetics do the least is study their customers' needs, she said.

"We need to look and see what happens to customers. We have to use each of these components in order to truly market anything," Dougherty said.

Customers' nature has changed over the years and until those changes are realized, she said, the need created by the changes will not be met.

As hospitals have closed and positions have been eliminated, the environment in the health care setting has changed drastically, Dougherty said. Dietetics students have been driven to look for employment outside of the field of health care and hospitals have been forced to look for new sources of revenue.

This has resulted in a great deal of incorporation of hospitality and restaurant industry into dietetics, she said.

Some hospitals have opened restaurants to bring customers in from the community and other hospitals have started providing room service which delivers food at times other than at scheduled meal times, Dougherty said.

Market research shows nutrition sales as another leading opportunity for dietitians.

"We need to remember that no longer are nutrients and dietetics just applicable to the horizontal patient. All of us buy, need, use and look at and consider nutrients," Dougherty said.

Manufacturers know that in order to sell their products, they must have nutrition information because the public is becoming much more aware of nutritional values, she said. High fiber, low sodium, fat and cholesteral are tools now being used to sell food products.

Hotels are working on improving menu choices by making the choices more nutritious. Some, Dougherty said, are providing nutrition information on the menu.

Fast-food restaurants have also started to remind people to eat more nutritious foods and encourage them to eat breakfast, Dougherty said.

"I don't see how we can exist if we don't have the expertise from hospitality, from the restaurants, food science and the nutrition and dietetics majors. They must support each other to make sure the health and nutritional status of the population is being met. (And to ensure) that it is being met at what the public needs by our providing exciting ways for them through marketing," Dougherty said.

Panelists discuss occupations

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Wearing a purple baseball cap emblazoned with "K-State Wildcats," Darlene Dougherty, president-elect of the American Dietetic Association, moderated a seminar and panel discussion of food service industry leaders Tuesday afternoon in Union Forum Hall.

The discussion included individuals representing various fields within the food service industry.

The panelists included: James Markee, associate project manager with Cini-Little International Inc.; Caren Messina-Hirsch, president of Food Performance Inc.; John Pence, associate director of housing and head of residence hall food service at K-State; and Catharine Powers, nutritionist at the Culinary Institute of America.

Powers sees tremendous growth in the culinary field of the industry as well as an interest in food and eating.

"People are really hungry now for quality food and healthful food items," Powers said.

Powers also stressed the idea of blending nutrition with healthy foods.

"It's a very big and significant trend in the food service industry," she said.

The concept of taking risks in the industry appeared throughout the seminar.

"Opportunities are available for everyone if one wants to put forth the time," Pence said. "One can still take risks. I hope one feels comfortable and confident enough to take the extra challenge, and by taking a chance, hopefully succeed."

The panelists also discussed the many career opportunities in the industry. The food service industry provides many career opportunities, Messina-Hirsch said.

Since the industry is varied, "It's so challenging working with the different kinds of people," Messina-Hirsch said.

The panel also took questions from students in the audience.

Markee thought that a student entering the food service industry should get involved as soon as possible.

"I think somebody should get involved in the industry and find out early if this is really what they want for their career," Markee said. "I had preconceived notions (about the food service industry) before I graduated that were not the case, and it would have been better if I had more experience."

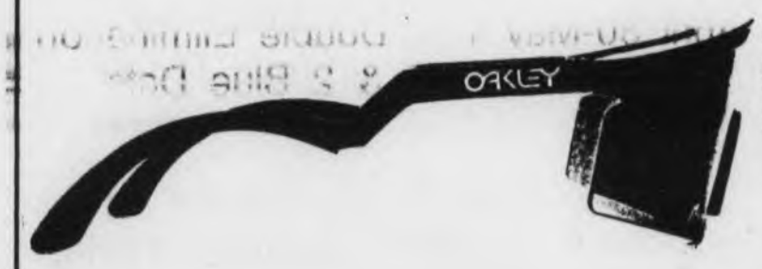
House approves 'dial-a-porn' telephone ban

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House on Tuesday approved a nationwide ban on "dial-a-porn" telephone pornography services despite arguments that the bill was unconstitutional.

The legislation, identical to an amendment approved earlier in the Senate, was included in an $8.3 billion education bill passed 397 to 1 after lawmakers handed Democratic leaders a defeat and rejected a less-sweeping anti-porn provision.

Final Senate action on the package was expected today.



"Some may question the constitutionality of this measure," said Rep. Ralph Hall, D-Texas. "But it is the most straightforward."

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, called the measure "extraordinarily shaky" on constitutional grounds.

Barry W. Lynn, legislative counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, said the ban "clearly intrudes on the privacy and the free-speech rights of adult Americans. This is a hopelessly inept way of dealing with the issue of children's access to dial-a-porn, which should be the only matter under consideration."

He predicted years of litigation.

Prepay tuition plan organized

Students can make early fee installments

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Beginning next month, students will have the opportunity to pay tuition and fees ahead of time, said Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance.

The prepayment plan is a way for students and parents to prepay tuition and fees over a period of time and have the full amount paid before actual enrollment, Viterna said.

The plan is an agreement between participating students and Academic Management Services Inc., of East Providence, R.I., a company that offers the prepayment plan to more than 1,000 colleges and universities.

Students will be dealing directly with the service and not K-State, Viterna said.

The plan consists of an eight-month payment schedule beginning May 1. The first four payments will pay the fall semester of tuition and fees. The next four payments, ending Dec. 1, will pay for the spring semester.

After a student makes the fourth and eighth payments, the service provides a check to the cashiers office at K-State for the full amount of tuition and fees, Viterna said.

In addition to tuition and fees, participants must pay a $45 charge for the prepayment plan, which also provides a life insurance policy for the amount of tuition and fees for the semester paid, he said.

Even though K-State does not operate the plan, the Office of Student Financial Assistance is informing students of its availability, Viterna said. Since it is prohibited for the University to give out names to the company in Rhode Island, the Office of Student Financial Assistance is sending out the letters, which will be mailed at the end of April.

Viterna said he doesn't know how many will use the service but hopes it will work for some students.

"It provides an avenue of payment that fits into an income-expense method (of payment) that's common for many families — monthly payments," he said.

According to Viterna, Academic Management Services approached K-State with the plan last year, but the student financial assistance office didn't see any possible way to offer the plan at the time, since all regents institutions require that all fees be paid before students begin classes, the plan offered wouldn't have worked, he said.

When Academic Management Services approached K-State with the current plan — which starts the payment schedule earlier — the financial aid office decided to give it a try, allowing K-State to receive the fees before the start of the semester, Viterna said.

The plan is in response to requests from both students and parents wanting a system of prepayment and an offer from the Academic Management Services, he said.

K-State is not able to accept payments of this sort, mainly because the University does not have the computer capabilities to handle a prepayment system, Viterna said. The company's service will make this possible.

However, he said the possibility exists of K-State having its own system of prepayment.

Israeli officials deport 8 Palestinians

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israel on Tuesday deported eight more Palestinians to Lebanon, including six involved in a stoning attack on a group of teenage Israeli hikers in a West Bank village, the army said.

Army officials said for the first time that the April 6 attack on the hikers had been planned in advance by some of those who were deported and alleged they belonged to an outlawed PLO youth group.

Also on Tuesday, Ezer Weizman, a Cabinet minister without portfolio, criticized the slaying of PLO military commander Khalil al-Wazir, warning it would backfire on Israel. The army censored a newspaper editorial that sought to criticize Israel's reported role in the killing.

In the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the army continued curfews on 17 refugee camps and towns in the West Bank and seven of eight refugee camps in the Gaza Strip to stem protests in the 4-month-old Palestinian uprising. Major cities also remained off limits to non-residents, including journalists.

Hospital officials said a 16-year-old Palestinian boy was shot and wounded during clashes in Gaza City.

The army reported relative calm elsewhere, although troops remained on alert for possible attacks.

Sorority membership up; out-of-house policies made

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

K-State sororities have experienced a boom in the number of new members during the last two years.

Barb Robel, director of greek affairs, said 150 women more entered the greek system this year compared to last year.

As a result, many members are finding that it will be impossible for them to live in-house because of the lack of space.

This increase, she said, can be attributed to increasing enrollment figures.

"Admission representatives have done a super job in selling the University and organized housing," Robel said.

The increased interest, she said, is an advantage for the system.

"More members can only help a sorority. Some changes, though, will have to be made," she said.

One of these changes is a departure from tradition.

In the past, Robel said, sophomores have usually moved into the house, but as more women are forced to live in residence halls and apartments, this tradition could fade out.

Nancy Chartrand, junior in journalism and mass communications and president of Alpha Chi Omega, said her house is one that is having to deal with overcrowding.

The number of rush members increased this year, she said.

Last year, Chartrand said her house had five members living out-of-house compared with about 20 this year. She said due to a commitment made to her sorority's pledge class, they would all be asked to live in the house next year.

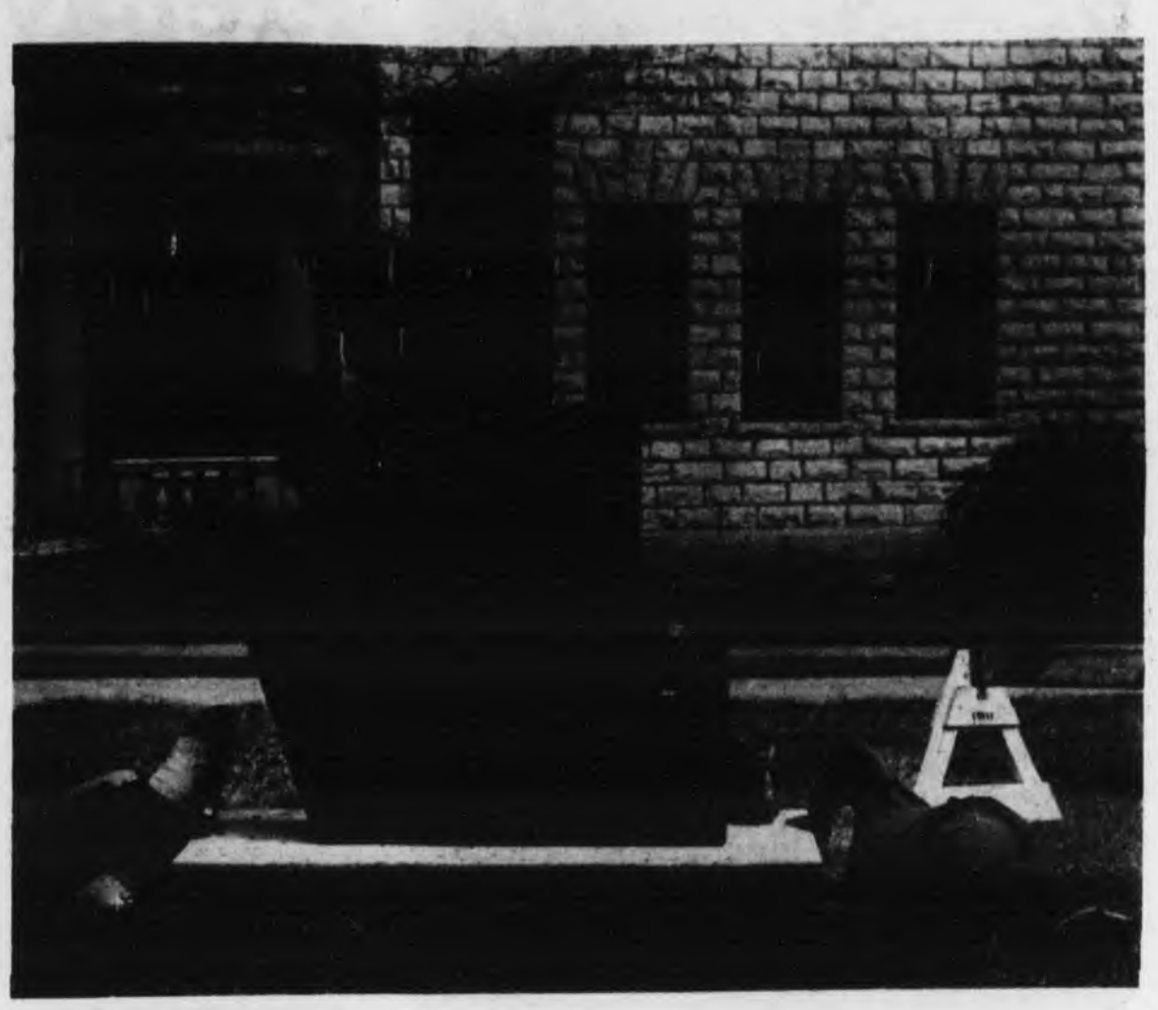
"We have a pin order based on GPA," Chartrand said. "We went back and forth between the juniors and seniors with the highest GPAs asking them if they would want to live in-house, until we had filled our available space."

This out-of-house policy ensures that a good mix of seniors, juniors and sophomores are present in the house, Chartrand said.

"We're trying to get those (women) that are living out of the house to get apartments close together, as well as increase our activities to get them over to the house," Chartrand said.

Cyd Kniffin, junior in marketing and president of Kappa Kappa Gamma, said she's trying to keep as many juniors and seniors in the house as possible.

"Priority points are awarded for the semester they were initiated and class standing," Kniffing said. "After that, we draw the names out of a hat to see who gets to live in house."



Kniffin said her house is going to wait to see if the trend will level off before taking any permanent measures.

Jennifer Leeds, junior in political science and president of Alpha Delta Pi, said members of her sorority have understood the problems the situation has created.

"They understand that we're going through a change. We really haven't had any problems," Leeds said.

Leeds said she's trying to make sure that those women who are living out of the house are kept informed of what the house is doing.

"We have an officer in charge of people living out-of-house and that person will keep them up-to-date."

Terrorist sentenced to 13 years

By The Associated Press

DUESSELDORF, West Germany — A court convicted Abbas Hamadi on Tuesday of abducting two West Germans as ransom for his brother, Mohammed, who is accused of hijacking a TWA jetliner.

Abbas Hamadi, 29, was sentenced to 13 years in prison after being found guilty on all charges of kidnapping, coercion and possession of explosives.

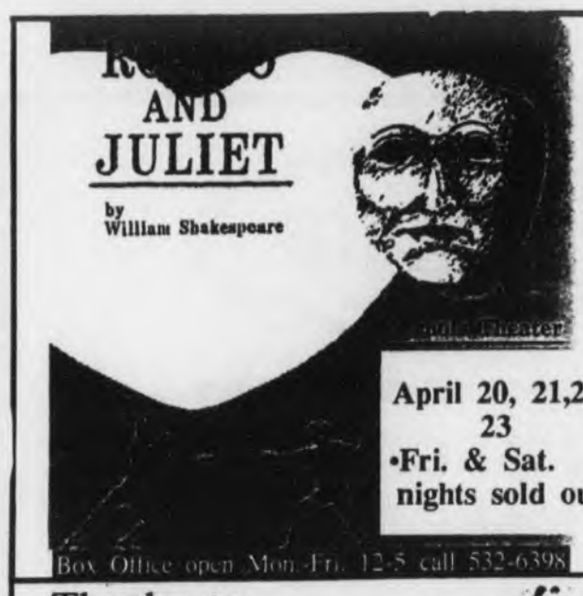
"It is totally reprehensible to rob two innocent people of their freedom and make them fear for their lives," Chief Judge Arend said in explaining the sentence he and his four colleagues meted out to Hamadi.

The 13-year term was 18 months longer than the prosecution requested. The maximum allowed was 15 years.

Hamadi, who is bearded and wore a sport coat and open-necked shirt, slumped into his chair after hearing the verdict and remained silent. More than 100 spectators, most of them reporters, were in the room.

Mohammed Hamadi was arrested at Frankfurt airport Jan. 13, 1987, and Abbas 13 days later, both with explosives in their possession. Mohammed Hamadi is accused in the June 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut in which a U.S. Navy diver was killed and 39 Americans were held hostage for 17 days.

Both Hamadis were living in West Germany at the time of their arrests. After Mohammed Hamadi was jailed, but while his brother was free, two West Germans were kidnapped in Beirut: Rudolf Cordes on Jan. 17 and Alfred Schmidt on Jan. 20.



Schmidt was released in September, but Cordes remains a hostage.

'Yuppie fiction' made into motion picture

'Mediocre' movie compared to novel

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

In 1984 Jay McInerny got his big break. "Bright Lights, Big City" was published by Vintage Contemporaries, one of the first publishing companies to market a line of "Yuppie Fiction." The book was a surprise success and sold almost a million copies in its first release. Four years after his initial success, McInerny's best-selling novel has been made into a major motion picture.

Movie Review

As a reviewer, I am faced with a dilemma. Many people who will see "Bright Lights, Big City" may never read the book, but when a highly acclaimed novel is made into a movie, comparisons between the two cannot be avoided.

Therefore, this review is broken into two parts — the first part for those moviegoers who have not read the novel, and the second for those who have.

"Bright Lights, Big City" is a film with a timely theme. It follows the life of Jamie, a 24-year-old proofreader working at a respected New York City magazine. Jamie's life is complicated by drug abuse, work dissatisfaction and a failed marriage.

If you have heard anything about "Bright Lights, Big City," you probably know who plays the lead role; that's right — Michael J. Fox.

Fox's initial presence in the movie is a major distraction. We have seen Fox acting in numerous roles, playing his stock Alex Keaton character, and in the opening shots of "Bright Lights" it appears that Fox is up to the same old thing. Surprisingly, the character of Jamie develops into a unique role for Fox.

For a good part of the show, Fox does an admirable job portraying Jamie as a character with whom the audience can empathize. Unfortunately, there are several instances where Fox reverts back to the Alex Keaton mode and damages the credibility of the character he has developed.

Most of "Bright Lights" was shot in New York City, and many of the bar scenes were filmed on location at the world-famous dance club The Palladium.

Director James Bridges does a fine job of filling the movie screen with dynamic shots of the city's yuppie nightlife.

If you read the book and decide to see the movie, be prepared to be disappointed. In this case, the general rule applies that a picture on a screen can never live up to the pictures we create in our minds when we read.

If you are a fan of contemporary dance music, then you will be pleased with the movie soundtrack. New Order, Brian Ferry, Prince and Depeche Mode have songs which serve as bar music during the show. Each of these artists has also contributed to the "Bright Lights, Big City" soundtrack.

The movie makes nice transitions from rowdy bar scenes to sedate office shots to intimate character profiles, but the film's diversity undercuts its attempt to create an effective emotional climax.

In the closing scenes of the show, we discover that most of Jamie's problems have been caused by his inability to deal with his mother's death.

In these closing scenes, I was able to put my finger on what bothered me most about "Bright Lights, Big City." Every major character in the movie was a big name, or at least a recognizable character — John Houseman, Swoosie Kurtz, Jason Robards, Keifer Sutherland, Dianne Wiest and, of course, Fox. Whenever one of these characters appeared on the screen, a distraction was created.

People in the theater were whispering, "That guy was in 'The Paper Chase'" or "Wasn't she in 'Hannah and Her Sisters'?"

There is no reason to use such talented, well-known actors in such small roles, aside from the obvious purpose of creating a box office draw. In this case, the quality of acting is good, but the presence of an actor like Jason Robards in a small role is a distraction and a waste.

"Bright Lights, Big City" is a mediocre movie, but it tells a special, significant story that makes the movie worth seeing — if you haven't read the book!

Now for the second part of the review. If you have read the book, the movie version of "Bright Lights, Big City," will be a disappointment. Although Jay McInerny wrote the screenplay, in many instances the movie does not tell the same story as the novel.

Fox did not fit my preconceptions about the character of Jamie, and the movie portrays his bout with drugs in a less-than-realistic manner.

If you read the book and decide to see the movie, be prepared to be disappointed. In this case the general rule applies that a picture on a screen can never live up to the pictures we create in our minds when we read.

I consider "Bright Lights, Big City" an average movie, and a poor attempt at turning a good book into a film. This movie is definitely C work.

Official says dance company to give 'athletic' performance

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

MOMIX, in the words of its founder and director, Moses Pendleton, is "something that refuses to be categorized." MOMIX is the modern dance company performing at 8 p.m. Thursday at McCain Auditorium.

"The key word is movement, not dance," said Don Woods, director of publicity for McCain. "Most people don't realize the human body can move like that."

"Their performance is very athletic," Woods said. "It is not classical dance. Someone who has never seen a dance production before would enjoy it," he said.

"If you think Danny Manning and Mitch Richmond can move, come see MOMIX," Woods said.

"MOMIX makes ordinary things strange," said Richard Martin, director of McCain. During one piece, performers wear cross-country skies and make the audience really believe they are skiing on the stage, he said.

"They are simply incredible and wild," Woods said. "They will appeal to the college sense of humor because they are highly trained and funny."

"I encourage every student who hasn't seen a dance to come and give it a shot," Woods said. "I can just about guarantee you'll have a good time."

"You don't have to know anything about dance to appreciate what they're doing," he said. "It will be a fun, informal production."

MOMIX will perform to the music of Elvis Presley, Peter Gabriel, Shadowfax, and King Sunney Ade and His African Beats.

The production contains partial nudity because they feel it's integral to what they're doing, Martin said. It's not meant to offend anyone, he said.

The dance group lives together, almost like a '60s hippy commune, in a Connecticut farmhouse, and they sometimes practice underwater, Woods said.

MOMIX is in its eighth year and took its title from a milk supplement for veal calves. The company has toured through western Europe, Japan and Brazil.

It was established by Moses Pendleton, who is also the co-founder of Pilobolus, a modern dance company. Most of the performers are from Dartmouth College and do not have a traditional dance background.

Meese must replace top justice aides

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Three top Justice Department aides to Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns are quitting or transferring to new jobs, marking a new round of departures and creating additional problems for Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

All three deputies rejected overtures by aides to Meese to remain at the Justice Department after the abrupt March 29 resignations of Burns and criminal division chief William Weld, department sources said Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Meese said he expects to hear shortly from St. Louis attorney John Shepherd on whether the former American Bar Association president plans to withdraw from consideration as Burns' successor.

"Probably tomorrow," Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland said Tuesday evening when asked whether there was any word on Shepherd's status.

Shepherd, 62, told Meese Friday that he was giving serious consideration to withdrawing because of stress on his family stemming from his selection.

A former bookkeeper from Shepherd's law firm testified shortly before Meese recommended him for the post that she had an affair with Shepherd.

'Fascinating' movie mixes politics, charm

Film transports audience to another place and time

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

Since the semester is coming to a close and time is short for every student, I will help some of you out a bit. If you are a fan of only those movies which involve car chases, spewing blood, rapid gunfire and mindless plots, then skip this review and turn to the comics section.

Movie Review

However, if you are a fan of intelligent film-making then you should not only read this, but you should definitely get your tickets to see "The Unbearable Lightness of Being."

Set in Prague in the spring of 1968, "The Unbearable Lightness of Being" uses a fascinating mix of romance, political upheaval, sexual bawdiness and charm to tell its story.

Based upon the much acclaimed novel by Milan Kundera, the film tells the story of Tomas, a brilliant brain surgeon and womanizer, and his attempts to satisfy his own lifestyle while also pleasing his wife.

Tomas, played by English actor Daniel Day-Lewis, is initially involved with a beautiful and talented artist named Sabina, played by Swedish actress Lena Olin. However, during a trip to a nearby spa (where his surgical talents are needed) he meets the shy but simplistically beautiful Tereza, played by French actress Juliette Binoche.

The dashing Tomas flirts with Tereza in his suave manner, but surprisingly leaves her without following through. However, Tereza surprises him by showing up on his doorstep in Prague. The two attempt to be cordial with one another but soon find themselves tangled in obsessive lovemaking. Within weeks they are married.

At this point, life gets difficult. Tomas cannot bring himself to stop seeing Sabina and, naturally, Tereza is terribly hurt by this. She feels she should leave Tomas, but cannot bring herself to do so. She wants him to stop, but he cannot do so.

Just as Tereza works up enough nerve to leave Tomas, the Russians invade Czechoslovakia and the two are forced back together again in order to survive.

Throughout the film, Tereza marvels at how "light" Tomas' life is — at his independence and tranquility. She feels her life is very heavy — always controlled by other people's rules and guidelines. Their marriage becomes a struggle to find the middle ground between light and heavy.

One of the many remarkable things about this film is its ability to completely take the audience away to another place and time. The audience watches, completely entranced, as Prague is transformed from a beautiful, light, spirited city into one of tired, heavy hopelessness following the Russian invasion.

Director Philip Kaufman adds a wonderful touch by inserting actual newsreel footage of the Russian invasion. This is mixed together with black-and-white footage of Tomas and Tereza immersed in the confusion, creating a very real and believable world for the characters. The audience is left feeling that Tomas and Tereza were actually in Prague in 1968.

"The Unbearable Lightness of Being" is never shy about anything it attempts. The sexual conduct of the characters is undoubtedly the heart of the story line and it was refreshing to watch director Kaufman attack the lovemaking scenes with full force. Sensuality and desire flooded many scenes while, thankfully, avoiding the hazard of poor taste and pornography.

Overall, the production quality of the film was superb. From the outstanding acting to the cinematography to the direction, almost no detail was overlooked. The script, too, was solid — a surprise considering the number of novels that are butchered each year in an attempt to transfer them to the screen.

If it were not for a somewhat contrived ending and the need for more judicious editing (the running time was nearly three hours), "The Unbearable Lightness of Being" would stand very close to perfection.

As it stands now, however, it is a film of solid quality, with solid acting and a solid story that is very satisfying for its audience.

Find some time in your schedule to set aside the textbooks or papers that need graded and grab a box of Milk Duds, because this grade A film will not disappoint you.

Administrator says students taking more time to graduate

By Steven Zadina
Collegian Reporter

During the past 15 years, the amount of time it takes for a student to graduate from a four-year college has extended nationwide.

"In four years plus a semester, we would expect 20 to 25 percent of a freshman class to graduate from K-State. In 5½ to six years, 50 percent of a freshman class will have graduated," said Mike Lynch, vice president for education and student services.

The remaining 25 percent, Lynch said, take longer than six years, decide not to graduate from a university or transfer to another university.

Often, students transfer to another university to graduate because of the lack of a terminal degree in the student's field, such as pre-nursing or pre-physical therapy, Lynch said.

One reason students are taking longer than four years to graduate is the increasing cost of education and the decreasing amount of financial aid. The decreasing financial aid has caused many students to seek part-time employment and enroll in fewer hours, delaying their graduation.

Students are also taking more diverse classes and are seeking dual degrees, Lynch said. These changes could extend the time it takes for them to earn their degree.

Students who change their majors may have to take additional classes because of problems transferring classes. This also adds to the time it takes to obtain a degree.

"About one student in five will graduate in the major they initially enter," Lynch said.

Most students change majors before their sophomore year. Usually, he said, they change from a technical major to one less technical. It is also common for students to transfer within their college, because the classes transfer more easily.

Employers do not usually look unfavorably on students who take longer than four years to obtain a degree, Lynch said. Their reaction, he said, depends on the cause of the delay.

Many job recruiters visit the campus every year, said J. Bruce Laughlin, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

"The ones who use campus recruitment will use the more skilled student. The higher GPA will usually win. But grades are not everything," he said.

"A 4.0 student who has no evidence of doing anything but studying will have a hard time finding employment," he said. "Getting along with people and a willingness to communicate are important."

Although some students may be in fields with a lower demand, this does not mean they will be unable to find a job. Instead, Laughlin said, it means that students need to be more flexible in their job ideas and look at jobs that are related, but not stereotypical, of their job ideas.

Mathematician speaks

'Points at infinity' topic of lecture

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

Referred to as one of the 20th century's leading mathematicians, Raoul Bott, professor of mathematics at Harvard University, spoke to about 100 people Tuesday afternoon at the sixth annual Friends of Mathematics Lecture. Bott's lecture was titled "On the Points at Infinity.

"Dr. Bott's mathematical discoveries have had a profound effect on the contemporary study of geometry and topology," said Louis Pigno, head of the Department of Mathematics. "He is an internationally acclaimed mathematician."

Bott's lecture may be explained in terms many students will recall from their secondary education. In high school, individuals learn the solution to the quadratic equation by means of a famous formula, Bott said. This formula, however, introduces complex numbers as solutions.

Higher degree equations only need complex numbers for their solutions, he said. These complex numbers, which people obtain as solutions, are just points in the plane.

"In order to solve equations with complex numbers as variables, we need more complicated geometric surfaces," Bott said. "That is, surfaces such as doughnuts or Rieman surfaces with points at infinity."

The concepts discussed in the lecture, Pigno said, are related to problems which arise in the elementary particle theory of high energy physics, such as the string theory.

Bott, a native of Hungary, earned a doctoral degree from the Carnegie Institute of Technology in 1949. From 1949 to 1951 and from 1955 to 1957, he was a member of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton University.

Bott's honors include being named a Higgins Professor of Mathematics at Harvard University from 1974 to 1977. Since then, he has been selected the William Caspar Graustein Professor of Mathematics at Harvard. He is also a member of the National Academy of Sciences.

FREE SHUTTLE

On April 20, and April 21, 1988, activities on the KSU Campus will result in the loss of several parking spaces. Because of the loss in parking spaces the KSU Police will operate a free shuttle service. This will not only help those in need of parking, but will give us a chance to assess the feasibility of a permanent shuttle system.

The shuttle will originate at the east side parking lot of KSU Football Stadium parking lot, entrance should be made from Kimball Avenue. The shuttle will start at 7:30 a.m. and end at 5:30 p.m. each day. A shuttle van will be at each pickup/drop-off point approximately every 20 minutes. Following is a list of each shuttle stop:

1. East Parking lot KSU Football Stadium.
2. KSU Parking lot A-28, near front doors of Durland Hall.
3. Bus Stop at 17th Street and Vattier Drive, near northwest corner K-State Union.
4. Mid-Campus Drive at the East doors of Anderson Hall.
5. Parking lot A-4 near the southeast doors of Farrell Library.
6. Southwest corner of KSU parking lot A17w.

We hope as many people as possible try tthe free shuttle system. A parking permit will not be required at the KSU Stadium Parking lot. The shuttle service is available to everyone.

K-State senior basketball players present Lon Kruger with a plaque honoring his achievements at the 1987-88 basketball awards banquet, "Celebrating Excellence," in the Union Ballroom Tuesday night. About 600 people attended the celebration.

Basketball program honored

Players, coaches, fans celebrate excellence

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

K-State's basketball season may have ended March 27, but the memories of that last game against Kansas in the NCAA tournament's Midwest Region finals, as well as the rest of K-State's 33 other games, were alive and well Wednesday night.

About 600 people packed the Union Ballroom to honor Wildcat players, their parents, coaches and support staff at the 1987-88 basketball awards banquet, "Celebrating Excellence."

It was an evening filled with food, applause, smiles, laughter and humorous stories about the Wildcats' 25-9 season, one of the best in K-State basketball history.

Mitch Holthus, the "voice of the Wildcats," on WIBW radio, set the stage for the banquet by saying: "We've got a lot to celebrate tonight. We don't have Cinderella, but we're going to have fun."

University president Jon Wefald, who at one point in the ceremonies was moved to tears, and athletic director Larry Travis were the evening's featured speakers. But the biggest round of applause and a standing ovation went to Coach Lon Kruger, the first coach in K-State's history to guide a basketball team to the NCAA tournament in his first two years at the helm.

"People at Kansas State really need to appreciate what the captain of the ship does," Holthus said of Kruger. "The dreams for him never stop coming, and he has the ability to make the dreams reality. He never sacrifices his values, and is the gentleman of the Big Eight (Conference)."

"There have been a lot of nice things said about this team, and it deserves all of them," Kruger said. "Everything we do in this program is a team effort. We've got a staff that is second to none, and we appreciate the great support of the fans and administration."

A standing ovation was also reserved for the team, as Kruger presented them to the appreciative crowd. Wefald distributed commemorative plaques to each player, all of whom will also receive a watch and a ring for being part of the NCAA's "elite eight."

Wefald, who Holthus tabbed the best 3-point shooting administrator in the country, shared with those present his memories of Kruger's two seasons at K-State. And in an emotional moment, he told the Wildcats: "Mitch (Richmond), you and the others have put K-State back on the national basketball map.

"We all had high hopes as we looked forward to 1987-88, but I don't think we had any idea the players would congeal to be one of the best teams in the history of Kansas State," he said.

Wefald said he was especially proud of K-State's 73-70 Midwest Region semi-final win over Purdue and the impact the game had on the rest of the country.

"Everyone who watched that game knew not only that Kansas State was one of the great Big Eight teams, but was one of the eight great teams in America," he said.

Travis pointed out the character and class K-State's players and coaches exhibit, and directed a special thank-you to them.

"This team helped me more than I could ever give back to them," he said. "You've shown me if I have pride and believe strongly enough, I can achieve.

"The strength of character this team showed ... they exhibited what intercollegiate athletics is all about. The way you responded to yourselves and your state means nothing but class. Thank you because you have made my life richer because of what you did."

Some of "what they did" was highlighted at the banquet:

- advanced to the NCAA Tournament's "elite eight."
- finished second in the Big Eight regular season and postseason tournaments.
- ranked eighth in the final CNN/USA Today poll.
- tied the school record for most wins in a season with 25.
- set the school record for most games played with 34.
- Kruger was named District 12 Coach of the Year by the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

Numerous individual accolades were also brought to light, and Kruger presented special awards.

The Porky Morgan Most Inspirational Player award, voted on by the players, was jointly given for the first time to Steve Henson and Richmond, "outstanding people and great ambassadors," Kruger said.

"To be absolutely the best is unbelieveable," Kruger said as he presented Henson with an award for being the best free-throw shooter in the nation this season at 92.5 percent.

Kruger presented a team picture to head manager Dean Heckethorn, who does "a lot of things and needs very little limelight."

Richmond, K-State's sixth-leading career scorer with 1,327 points, was presented a 1,000-point scoring award. Richmond's 768 points this season established a K-State single season scoring record.

Kruger also recognized seniors Will Scott, Charles Bledsoe, Ron Meyer, Mark Nelson, Walter Wright and Richmond — "a special group ... that set a standard that without any question will be difficult to live up to. But we appreciate that."

The seniors presented an award from the team to Kruger, and K-State's 1987-88 highlight film was also shown.

Wildcats rally, beat Creighton

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Submarine-style relief pitchers such as Kent Tekulve or Dan Quisenberry have terrorized major league baseball players for some time now.

In the college ranks, though, those type of relievers are as rare as wooden bats.

So when Creighton threw submarine-style relief ace Russ Mencyzwor at K-State, with the Bluejays holding a one-run lead, it seemed as if the Missouri Valley Conference leaders would go on to win their second straight game this season over the Wildcats.

But after retiring five straight batters, Mencywzor gave up a single to Tony Braddock and a walk to Kent Gleason in the bottom of the ninth inning. Scott Spangenberg then hit a three-run homer to give K-State a 13-11 win over the Jays Tuesday at Frank Myers Field.

"It says a lot for the kids not giving up. They easily could have rolled over and said 'Forget this one....'"

—Mike Clark

Spangenberg, who was three-of-five and had four RBI, said it is difficult to face a pitcher who throws that way.

"It's especially tough for a right-hand batter because he's throwing behind you," Spangenberg said.

Thanks to first base coach Brian McCarthy, the senior shortstop received some helpful advice before he faced Menczywor.

"He told me before I went up there to watch his first pitch closely because (their pitcher) was laying that first one right in the strike zone. Sure enough, he pitched the ball a little up and in, and I was able to turn on it. It felt good," Spangenberg said.

K-State coach Mike Clark, whose team improved to 26-13 overall, was impressed with the Wildcats' comeback after Creighton had built a 11-6 lead after six innings.

"It says a lot for the kids not giving up. They easily could have rolled over and said 'Forget this one. We've got a big series with Missouri this weekend,'" Clark said. "It was a great comeback. All the wins we can get make it that much better."

K-State starter Jeff Peterson had an uncharacteristic, rocky start, allowing five runs after only 1⅓ innings, and David Hierholzer gave up five runs in 3⅔ innings of work.

But Jim McClellan and winning pitcher Steve Scoville held Creighton to just one run over the last four innings.

Scoville, now 3-0, threw two innings of no-hit ball.

"Our relievers in the late innings did a good job of holding Creighton down. It allowed our offense to come back, Clark said.

"Our offense has been doing it all year, but we've got to get to the point where we're not putting ourselves in the hole early," he added.

Clark didn't have an answer as to why the 'Cats started sluggishly against the Jays. After all, in its last outings, K-State scored 67 runs and swept Kansas in a four-game series.

"If I knew the answer to that, I'd probably be making a lot more money doing something in psychology," Clark said. "I though we were ready to play."

But obviously the 'Cats weren't. Creighton led 4-0 after the first inning when eight batters went to the plate, and added another run in the second. K-State scored twice in the third, but Creighton added three more runs in the top of the fifth.

After 5⅓ innings with Creighton holding an seven-run lead, K-State woke up.

"We were kind of dead all day, and then things just started picking up in the dugout," Spangenberg said. "We got within striking range in a couple of innings, and it eventually paid off."

K-State scored twice in the sixth, and added four more runs in the seventh to set up the dramatic ninth inning. Center fielder Kent Gleason had a double and single in those two innings and drove in two runs.

The 'Cats also picked up defensively after committing three errors through six innings. Catcher Dan Skala picked off Creighton All-American Scott Servais on third which quieted a Bluejay rally in the eighth.

With the loss, Creighton dropped to 27-11 overall.

K-State's next action will be Friday when they begin a four-game series against Missouri at Frank Myers Field. Game time is set for 7 p.m.

Editors note: Tuesday's game, originally scheduled to begin at 7 p.m., was moved to 3 p.m. in anticipation of inclement weather.

Women's golf team wins at home; men second on road

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's women's golf squad defeated Southwest Missouri State Tuesday in the K-State/Pepsi Classic and the K-State men's team placed second in the Wichita State Invitational.

After shooting a team score of 362 on Monday, the women's team shot a 352 Tuesday morning and finished with a total of 714, 33 strokes ahead of Southwest Missouri State in the tournament held at the Manhattan Country Club.

Southwest Missouri State notched rounds of 371-376 for a final score of 747.

"Almost everybody improved her score Tuesday," K-State coach Rob Sedorcek said. "It was good to see that happen for the second straight tourney and it was also good to see Jill (Zientara) play well enough to win (as an individual)."

Zientara claimed the medalist honors after carding an 86's on both days for a score of 172. Teammate Chris Adams finished only one stroke back with a 173 after rounds of 87 and 86. K-State's Keli Blake placed fourth with a 91-90—181 total.

Wildcat Beth Holmberg finished with a 188 and Cory Harlow shot a 204. Lisa Lugar withdrew from play after shooting a first round score of 109.

In Wichita, K-State's men's team was unable to improve its position in the final round of the WSU Invitational yesterday, even though the squad posted its second best score of the spring season.

K-State finished second, 20 strokes behind the Kansas Blue team. The 'Cats ended the tournament held at the par 72 Willowbend Golf Course with a team round of 297.

It was the second consecutive day K-State posted a sub-300 round. The Wildcats had rounds of 305 on Sunday and 296 on Monday to finish with a three-day total of 898. The Kansas Blue team finished with a 878.

"I am real happy we finished second in such a good field," Sedorcek said. "We have definitely improved every tourney and I think it is evident that we are becoming a little more competitive. We need to continue to do that through the Big Eight Championships."

Wildcats Chris Gomez and Jeff Sedorcek finished play with 218s and tied for second place in medalist competition. Gomez shot a three-under par 69 Tuesday, along with previous rounds of 77 and 72. Sedorcek finished play with a par 72 along with earlier rounds of 72 and 74.

K-State's Troy Keller finished in sixth place with a total of 225. Teammate John Shields shot a 237 and Todd Fowler ended with a 243.

The men return to action this weekend, while the women will end their season April 25-26.

Pirates upend Cards in best start since '66

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Neither the St. Louis Cardinals nor the 42-degree temperature could cool off Brian Fisher, Barry Bonds and the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Fisher, 3-0, won his seventh straight decision by pitching a seven-hit shutout and Bonds doubled, singled and drove in a run as the streaking Pirates beat the Cardinals 3-0 Tuesday night for their seventh victory in the last eight games.

"I was just trying to keep us in the game. It was cold out there, but it was cold for everybody," said Fisher, who has pitched 16 2-3 scorelesss innings to lower his ERA to 1.25. "The difference in me is that I'm more relaxed than I was on the past and it's something I really worked on in the offseason.

"Right now, I feel relaxed and I feel confident."

The Pirates, in first place in the National League East for the first time since September 1983, are 9-3 at the start of a season for the first time since 1966.

"We're playing with some confidence and Brian Fisher is pitching with a lot of confidence," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "He's on a confidence roll where he knows he can be competitive up here and he feels pretty good right now. The more he's pitched for us, the more confidence he's gotten."

"Fisher has a good breaking ball and changes speed real good, and I've liked him ever since he was in the Atlanta organization," said Cardinals manager Whitey Herzog. "We had our shot at him but we couldn't get any hits with runners on base. We're not hitting the ball."

The Pirates took a 2-0 lead in the first against Danny Cox, 1-2, after Bonds doubled — his 13th consecutive extra-base hit — and scored on Jose Lind's double. Andy Van Slyke walked but was picked off first.

Bobby Bonilla's hard-hit grounder went off first baseman Bob Horner's right arm for an infield single, scoring Lind. Horner was removed from the game and taken to a nearby hospital for X-rays that were negative. He has a bruised arm and wrist and will be on a day-to-day basis.

Fisher, unscored upon in his last two starts, pitched out of several jams as the Cardinals stranded seven runners in the first six innings and 10 for the game. Fisher pitched 7 2-3 scoreless innings in the Pirates' 7-0 victory over Philadelphia last Wednesday.

"I'm just trying to be consistent this season," Fisher said. "I have more confidence because I'm concentrating better and I'm not trying to do what I can't do."

Blue Jays pound Royals, 12-3

By The Associated Press

TORONTO — Jesse Barfield hit a grand slam to cap a seven-run third inning and Jim Clancy tied a club record with 12 strikeouts, leading the Toronto Blue Jays over the Kansas City Royals 12-3 Tuesday night.

Clancy, 1-2, tied the mark established by Pete Vuckovich versus Baltimore on July 26, 1977. Clancy pitched seven innings and allowed six hits. John Cerutti and Duane Ward finished.

Trailing 2-0, the Blue Jays loaded the bases in the third with a leadoff single and two walks off Bret Saberhagen, 1-2.

George Bell, who hit three homers against Saberhagen on opening day, scored one run with a single. A second run scored on the play when right fielder Danny Tartabull's throw skipped through to the backstop.

Ernie Whitt walked to load the bases again, Fred McGriff lined a single for the third run, and then Barfield homered far over the right-field fence for his second career grand slam.

Rally day Thursday

From Wire Reports

K-State will hold a special "Wildcat Appreciation Day" rally Thursday to recognize the accomplishments of the 1987-88 men's basketball team.

The rally will begin at 12:30 p.m. on the lawn just north of the K-State Union and is sponsored by the KSU Student Government Association.

In case of inclement weather, the event will be moved inside the Union to the courtyard area.

Special citations and awards from SGA will be presented to Coach Lon Kruger and the K-State basketball team during the rally.

Kennedy photos burned

By The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — More than 2,400 photographs from the assassination of Robert Kennedy were unaccountably destroyed nearly 20 years ago, officials said Tuesday as they opened to the public for the first time the long-secret police files.

There was no explanation in the 50,000 pages of documents why the pictures were burned or why such items as ceiling tiles and door jambs from the scene of Kennedy's death were destroyed in the months following the assassination.

California Secretary of State March Fong Eu released the documents, including interviews with 4,000 witnesses and 2,500 photographs from the Los Angeles Police Department files.

The state's chief archivist said the documents were unlikely to answer the numerous questions surrounding the 1968 assassination because of the destroyed material.

"I've never seen a file quite this large," said archivist John Burns. "This is a very unusual murder file (but) I'm not absolutely satisfied that any questions are answered."

He said the biggest surprise was the amount of evidence destroyed, including the photographs, which were burned three months after the assassination. Their subjects are unknown.

"What I didn't know, and I'm told others didn't know, was that so much evidence was destroyed," he said.

He also said he could not explain why evidence was destroyed, noting police were careful at the outset because they didn't want "another Dallas," where Kennedy's brother, President John F. Kennedy, was killed.

Burns said he had not had time to examine all the evidence, which he predicted will occupy researchers for years.

The gaps in the material drew immediate criticism.

"Someone should ask the police why they destroyed 2,400 photographs in the most important case they've ever examined. ... We didn't know about that until today," said Gregory Stone, a political scientist at the University of Wisconsin and a longtime student of the case.

Among the persistent questions raised by conspiracy theorists and scholars are: Was Sirhan Bishara Sirhan the only gunman? Was Kennedy shot from in front or behind? Were there eight shots or more in the pantry of the Ambassador Hotel?

TO WHOM it may concern, Love is patient, love is kind, and is not jealous; love does not brag and is not arrogant, does not act unbecomingly; it does not seek its own, is not provoked, does not take into account a wrong suffered, does not rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth; bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things (1 Cor. 13). But God demonstrates His own love toward us in that while we were still wicked, Christ died for us (Rom. 5:8). For more information contact Tom or Gary (532-5433). (139-140) us by a mile."

New Yorkers voted while Democratic senators met behind closed doors in the Capitol to select 43 delegates to the party's national convention. Dukakis won 13 pledges and outdueled Gore, who gained six as well as his own. Jackson was shut out, with the majority of senators remaining uncommitted.

In Vermont, Jackson led in Tuesday night's early caucus returns even though Dukakis triumphed in a nonbinding primary vote March 1. Bush was winning another easy victory.

Jackson had hoped for an upset to propel his candidacy through the final six weeks of primaries, but the networks said his black support — in excess of 90 percent — was not enough to offset Dukakis' strength among other voters.

CBS said Dukakis was winning the white vote 69 percent to 17 percent for Jackson. The Massachusetts governor was carrying 77 percent of the Jewish vote, the network said.

"In Iowa we won the bronze," Dukakis said in his victory statement. "In New Hampshire we won the gold. Tonight we won the Oscar."

Dukakis' emergence as undisputed front-runner came after an exhausting 10 weeks of caucuses and primaries in which first one contender and then another struggled to gain the upper hand — while rumors swirled incessantly that a noncandidate might be drafted into the race.

The governor finished in third place in the first test of the year, in Iowa. But he rebounded to capture the New Hampshire primary a week later and then scored twin successes in Texas and Florida on Super Tuesday ballotting March 8. Then came a crash as he finished third in Illinois and lost Michigan in a landslide to Jackson — followed by recovery victories in Connecticut and Wisconsin.

"It wasn't easy," Dukakis said in victory. "The choice you had to make was a difficult one. Al Gore and Jesse Jackson are both outstanding candidates. They both ran strong campaigns. And however the race for this nomination turns out, they both have great futures as leaders of our party."

Jackson's national campaign chairman, California Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, said an overwhelming Dukakis victory "would make our job far more difficult" when the campaign reached California at the end of the primary season, June 7.

The New York primary campaign proved to be a ferocious affair that exposed deep racial and religious divisions among New Yorkers, featuring an almost daily tongue-lashing from Mayor Ed Koch directed at Jackson.

Jackson sought to remain above the fray, although he said on the day before the primary that "we have received more death threats in this campaign than in all the others combined because the climate has been so divisive and so violent."

Jackson hailed a solid victory over Dukakis in the Delaware caucuses on Monday and said it was a sign of things to come. "Delaware was the hors d'oeuvre, New York is a four-course meal," he said. He campaigned through the morning of primary day in hopes of boosting turnout in predominantly black areas in New York City, where his support was strongest.

Dukakis greeted morning commuters at a subway stop in Queens in New York City before returning to Massachusetts to spend the day.

Gore was a distant third in public opinion surveys, despite a costly effort designed to reinvigorate a campaign that has been moribund since Super Tuesday six weeks ago. He spent primary morning campaigning in New York as aides passed the word that they expected the senator to gain less than 10 percent of the New York vote — a performance that would raise questions about his ability to continue.

Bush watched the Democrat battle from a distance. He divided time between next week's primary state of Pennsylvania and Washington, where he attended official meetings on the Iranian military situation.

"I can't wait for the debates with the Democratic nominee no matter who it turns out to be," he said in a recent interview.

why the men were driving on the trail.

Because the accident occurred on military property, Fort Riley Military Police are investigating the incident, he said.

Eric Ward, paramedic and crew chief for Riley County Emergency Medical Service, said workers searched the area for about two hours before finding the wrecked car.

"At one point, we had at least 25 to 30 people on the search," he said.

Ward said the MAST ambulance helicopter is often utilized, but not usually for searches.

"This is the first time in the recent past that we've used them for searches," he said.

Hostages escape prison of death

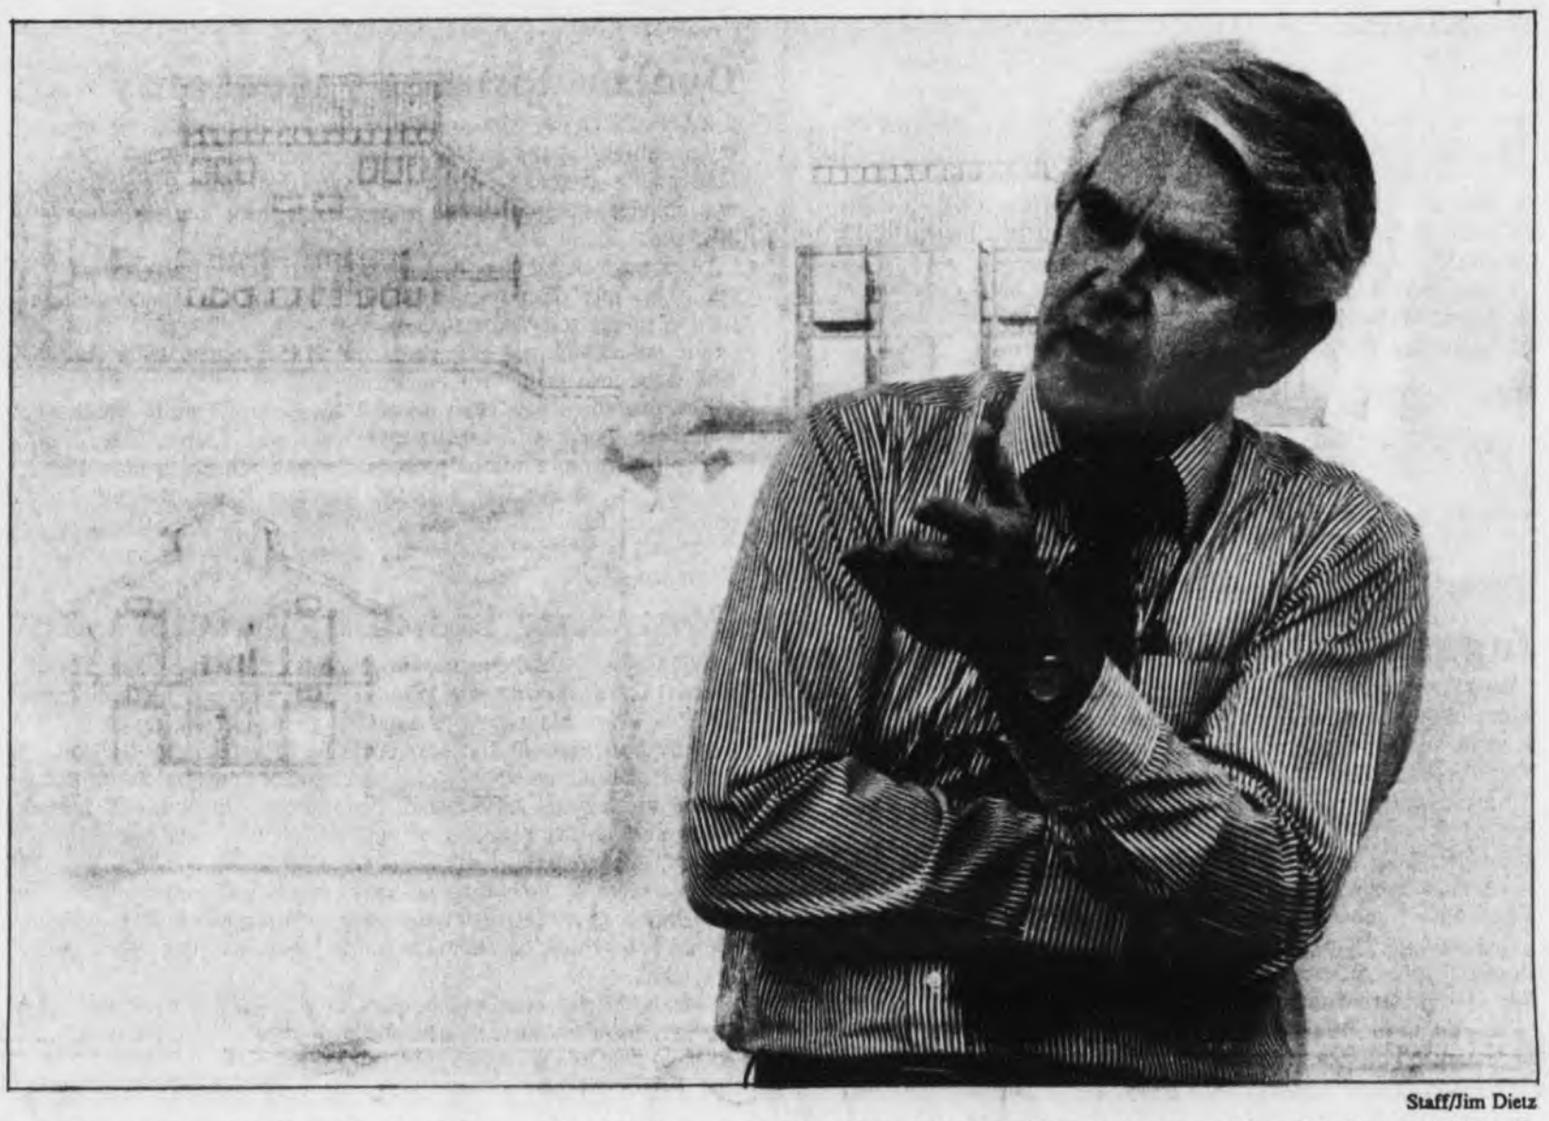
Nine hijackers disappear

By The Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — Hijackers with "eyes of sharks" wiped out their fingerprints and slipped away Wednesday, leaving 31 hostages to stumble from a Kuwaiti jumbo jet that was a prison of fear, brutality and death for 15 days.

The Shiite Moslem gunmen had murdered two passengers since hijacking the Kuwait Airways Flight 422, with 112 people aboard, on April 5 between Bangkok and the Persian Gulf sheikdom.

They agreed to free their remaining hostages after arranging safe passage with Algerian officials who mediated a settlement. The hijackers had demanded that Kuwait free 17 pro-Iranians convicted and imprisoned for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in December 1983.



Among the passengers on the Boeing 747 were three cousins of the Kuwaiti ruler, Sheik Jaber Al-Ahmed Al-Sabah.

Kuwait's official news agency KUNA, citing Algerian sources it did not identify, said "five hijackers left the plane, then about 10 minutes later, four other pirates left the plane. Following that the hostages came out" at 6 a.m. — three hours into the 16th day of the hijacking. The number of hijackers had previously been estimated at seven or eight.

According to the agency, the hijackers were assured safe passage to either Beirut or Tehran.

Alumni gather for annual reunion

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

K-State graduates from as far back as 1916 have returned to the campus that contributed to their present success.

More than 400 alumni returned to campus for the annual Alumni Reunion, which started Wednesday and continues today, according to Grace Prusik, special events coordinator for the KSU Alumni Association.

Prusik said one of the highlights of the reunion will be the welcoming of the class of 1938 to the Golden K, a group that recognizes alumni who graduated more than 50 years ago.

The Alumni Association received a good response to its invitations, and Prusik said she was pleased with the number of people who returned for the event.

"We sent mailings to 529 (members) of the class of 1938, and of that number, 101 have registered, which is really tremendous," she said.

Eight members from the class of 1928 are celebrating their 60th reunion, along with some earlier graduates, including several from the class of 1916.

Activities for the alumni include visits to the Veterinary Medicine Complex, the College of Engineering and Nichols Hall. Tours of Manhattan will also be given. University President Jon Wefald will deliver a State of the University address at the All Graduate Banquet tonight. As part of the reunion, the alumni attended luncheons, took photographs and listened to entertainment.

A relatively new feature of the reunion is the naming of Alumni Fellows, said Pennie Wallerstedt, director of administrative programs. Alumni Fellows are graduates who are working in their original career fields. They are invited to return and share some of their experiences with students and faculty.

The program began in 1983 and has become very popular with the Senate to consider new co-op funding

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

Student senators will give preliminary consideration Thursday to a bill creating a fee to aid the financially ailing KSU Childcare Cooperative.

The bill is virtually the same as a proposal rejected March 4 by Senate. Like the earlier one, the new bill would create a $1 per semester fee for full-time students and 50 cents per semester fee for part-time students.

Also, the bill would require students attending summer session classes to pay a 10 cents per credit hour fee for up to six hours of enrollment. Students enrolled in more than six hours for the summer would have to pay 60 cents.

The money earned from the fee would pay for childships — grants given to needy families to defray the costs of the co-op's tuition. Childships would be for children of K-State students.

Unlike the previous bill, money from the fee would not go to pay the salaries of students employed by the co-op.

Under its rules, Senate does not reconsider a bill which it has rejected unless new facts have been discovered about the issue the bill would have covered.

A bill may also be reconsidered if its form or requirements have been changed.

Student Senate Chairman Doug Folk said the new bill meets both of those criteria.

At the time it rejected the previous co-op fee proposal, Senate had not heard the announcement March 31 by Vice President for Institutional Advancement Robert Krause about the level of the administration's addi-

Professor named president

Sutton to head Mississippi college

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

William Sutton, former vice president of educational and student services and current professor of biology, was named Wednesday as president of Mississippi Valley State University.

William Sutton

The 57-year-old Sutton was selected unanimously by the Mississippi State College Board to be the new president of the financially troubled University.

"He's got wide, extensive experience in all levels of institutions. With that kind of experience and his track record, the board of trustees feels very confident he'll do an exceptional job," said the board's executive director, George Carter.

"It was a unanimous decision of the board," Carter said.

The board met behind closed doors Wednesday to choose between Sutton and William E. Gardner Jr., vice president for academic affairs at Lincoln University in Pennsylvania.

Neither Nathaniel Boclair, the interim Valley State president, nor other members of the Valley State administration were available for comment Wednesday.

K-State President Jon Wefald, who offered Sutton congratulations on the appointment, said Sutton has been a valuable administrator and instructor at K-State and has done an excellent job on a variety of fronts.

"Dr. Sutton has an opportunity to fulfill a life-long dream of being president of a university," Wefald said.

"We'll be putting on a full-court press to attract additional minority staff."

—Jon Wefald, K-State president

With the departure of Sutton, the number of black faculty members at K-State has dropped to two. Wefald said, however, that the University is committed to attracting top-quality minority staff members.

"We'll be putting on a full-court press to attract additional minority staff," he said.

Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for minority affairs, said he was elated over Sutton's selection to a presidency.

"I think he'll do an excellent job — he served K-State well in two capacities during his tenure here," he said.

Sutton came to K-State from Chicago State University in 1986 and was named vice president for education and student services. He served in that capacity until June 1987, when he stepped down to devote more time to teaching and research in biology.

Board of education members said faculty, students and alumni liked Sutton, who visited the campus last week.

Sutton replaces Joe Boyer, who resigned under pressure Jan. 20 after Department of Audit figures revealed that Valley State was $880,508 in debt. The 1,860-student university also is plagued by low enrollment.

Carter said Sutton will be in Itta Bena, Miss., this morning for a press conference and will report for work at his $70,000-a-year post July 1.

Valley State, located in Itta Bena, has a campus of about 450 acres. The board selected Gardner and Sutton as finalists April 10, along with a third finalist who later dropped out, Luther Burse Sr., president of Fort Valley State College in Fort Valley, Ga.

Lecturer to focus on women's issues

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

One of the best speakers at combining content, wit and clarity will speak at the last Lou Douglas Lecture of the semester at 7 tonight in Union Forum Hall, said Cornelia Flora, professor of sociology.

Barbara Ehrenreich, writer and speaker on women's issues and public policy, will speak on "The Disappearing Middle Class."

"I've never learned so much — and laughed so hard at the same time — when discussing such a serious topic," Flora said, referring to the last Ehrenreich lecture she attended.

Ehrenreich will discuss the reasons why women and children increasingly make up the poor in America, and what the alternatives may be to this problem, she said.

Ehrenreich may talk about the changing male roles and economic structures that she discussed in her book, "The Hearts of Men," Flora said.

"Society has legitimized male irresponsibility to their families," she said.

This lack of responsibility isn't caused by the women's liberation movement. It results from movements like the acceptance of Playboy magazine, Flora said.

"(This acceptance) symbolizes the fact that it is all right to be selfish — then it carries over to public policy," she said.

Society tends to channel funds into recreational activities rather than programs like day care facilities that would help get women out of poverty, Flora said. Even when women can work, the kinds of jobs available do not pay well enough to allow them to support families, she said.

"(Ehrenreich) is an incredibly funny speaker, even with dismal topics," Flora said.

She is willing to look critically at a wide range of topics, Flora said.

Ehrenreich has written a number of books on women and social policy, and is a contributing editor of Ms. and Mother Jones magazines.

Currently, she is a fellow at the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C., where she is studying women in the economy. She is also a fellow at the New York Institute for the Humanities at New York University.

Ehrenreich is working on a book tentatively titled "The Liberal Surrender," which discusses American political culture since the 1960s. She has a doctoral degree in biology from Rockefeller University and a bachelor's degree from Reed College.

Ship insurance doubles in Gulf

LONDON — Lloyd's of London insurers are charging twice as much to insure ships sailing the Persian Gulf after U.S. and Iranian forces clashed in the waterway earlier this week, a spokesman said Wednesday.

The war-risk premium doubled Tuesday to 2 percent, said the spokesman. For a 14-day voyage to Kuwait, insurance doubled to $200,000 on a $10 million hull.

"It's in response to the recent incidents in the gulf," he said. "I think the (gulf insurance) rates have moved in fits and starts. If we have one or two weeks without major incidents, I think they'll go down again."

Cargo insurance premiums remained largely unchanged, he said.

For voyages to ports of Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates in the southern gulf, the rate doubled to 1.5 percent of the value of a hull from 0.75 percent, said the spokesman.

Mummified pope recovered

L'AQUILA, Italy — The mummified remains of Pope Celestine V, who died in the 13th century, were recovered intact by police before dawn Wednesday after they were stolen from a cathedral.

Church bells rang here and in Celestine's hometown of Isernia after the remains, stolen Sunday night in this city 70 miles northeast of Rome, were found in a plywood box hidden inside a cemetery wall in a nearby town.

Police said they found remains, undamaged, in a cemetery in Amatrice, 35 miles south of L'Aquila, at 2 a.m. by following two suspected thieves, who got away in the dark.

Jagger's credibility at stake

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — Rock star Mick Jagger said Wednesday that his credibility is at stake in a lawsuit charging that he stole another composer's music and used it in his 1985 hit "Just Another Night."

Reggae musician Patrick Alley, 36, of the Bronx, claims the chorus of his 1979 song, also called, "Just Another Night," appears in only a slightly modified version in Jagger's song, which was copyrighted in 1985 and appeared on Jagger's solo album "She's the Boss."

Jagger, who is expected to testify later this week in the copyright infringement trial, made his first statenent about the case to reporters during a recess.

"My credibility is on the line because of this" the 44-year-old leader of the Rolling Stones said.

Director takes bus keys

ATCHISON, Kan. — About 100 students were stranded without rides to seven city schools Wednesday when the local transportation director walked off with the keys to all the school buses, district officials said.

"I just decided to go out with a bang," USD 409 Transportation Director Gene Dedeke said when he left the district's bus barn about 6 a.m. with the keys to the entire fleet of buses and mini-vans.

City officials said the buses should be running on schedule today. Superintendent Bill Sellers said he did not know if Dedeke would be fired over the incident.

Dedeke said he grounded the vehicles because of alleged safety violations, including faulty brakes, lights and oil seals. He said he took the step as a means of retaliation against other district officials who "usurped his authority."

Dedeke said he was particularly disgruntled over the recent purchase of two new buses without his consent. He did not know about the new buses until after they were acquired.

Doctor donates vasectomy

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Karen Rankin has seen a lot of strange things in the years she has coordinated KCPT-TV's fund-raising auction so she wasn't surprised when a vasectomy was donated along with the usual cars, cruises and countless other items.

"I've been doing this long enough that every (gift) seems normal to me," Rankin said of her work for the annual auction for the public television station.

The vasectomy was purchased for $185 Monday by a couple who were unavailable for comment.

The procedure had been donated by Central Family Medicine, a medical group with offices in Mission and Kansas City, Kan.

The operation, a minor procedure which renders a man sterile, was valued at $300, said Dr. Malcolm Knarr, a family practitioner who said he was a supporter of public television.

"It makes an ideal present for a wife to give her husband," Knarr said.

Poor drug handling brings fine

WICHITA — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has proposed a $2,500 fine for the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Wichita relating to its handling of radioactive drugs.

A VA official said the hospital plans to appeal the decision.

Joe Gilliland, an NRC spokesman, said a commission inspector visited the hospital June 8 and found several violations of federal regulations on the handling of radioactive drugs used for diagnosis and treatment.

The inspector discovered an unauthorized and technically unqualified physician had been using radiopharmaceuticals without proper supervision between December 1986 and June 1987, Gilliland said.

The NRC also cited the hospital in a letter last week for failing to update its nuclear medicine license with the names of physicians currently working in that area.

Rally to commend teams, announcer

By The Collegian Staff

K-State will be honoring its own at a pep rally today at 12:30 p.m. between the Union and Seaton Hall.

As part of Wildcat Appreciation Day, sponsored by Student Senate, honors will be presented to the men's basketball team, debate team, cheerleading squad and Mitch Holthus, "voice of the Wildcats."

K-State President Jon Wefald said the day will commend the significant accomplishments of K-State students this semester.

"Not enough people realize that K-State had one of its greatest seasons ever in basketball," Wefald said. "This is an opportunity to remind the alumni, students and fans what a great season we had."

The team was ranked eighth in USA Today's final poll, and made it to the final eight of the NCAA Tournament before losing to eventual national champion, the University of Kansas, in the Midwest regional final.

The cheerleading squad was among 20 selected to compete at the national cheerleading championships at San Diego's Sea World in January. The debate team is ranked fifth in the nation and Holthus was recently voted Kansas Sportscaster of the Year.

The K-State band and cheerleaders will perform at the rally, which will be moved into the Union Courtyard if the weather is bad.

State vehicles' fee altered

Parking proposal awaits approval

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

Despite the concerns that were expressed at the April 15 public forum on proposed changes in on-campus parking regulations, the proposal will more than likely be approved.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said Wednesday he doesn't believe the discussion will affect proposals.

However, as a result of a discussion with Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, the original proposal of charging state vehicles $225 for reserved parking has been lowered to $100, he said.

"The administration, President (Jon) Wefald and his assistants have agreed to (the changes)," Lambert said. "They have looked at it, and it is ready to be sent off for approval by the Board of Regents."

The final proposal must be submitted to the Kansas Board of Regents April 29.

The changes will include an increase in parking permit fees, the charging of visitors on campus, permit hours and misuse fees.

Student parking permits would increase from $22 to $30 a year for on-campus and residence hall lots. Faculty and staff permits would also increase from $44 to $50 per year. Reserved stalls, which currently cost $165 for the 24-hour reserved and $110 for the 10-hour spaces, would increase to $225 and $150, respectively.

The parking hours that require a permit on campus are currently 7 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. However, the proposal will shorten the hours to end at 5 p.m.

An increase in the misuse fees is also being proposed, from $8 to $10 for parking violations. Some of these violations are parking in the wrong area, not having a valid permit or parking in a loading zone for too long.

"The advisory council is aware of the strain on parking and realizes the need for more spaces and money," Lambert said.

Another change will charge conferences and seminars $1 per participant per week, or a portion thereof, for the use of campus parking. Organizational unit permits in faculty/staff lots would also be raised to $50 from the current $44. Reserved stalls for state vehicles would be granted, but must be purchased by the organization, and the amount of spaces allotted would be limited.

The proposal will restrict students who live in residence halls from purchasing both a residence hall permit and a campus permit. Only residents of Edwards Hall would be eligible for both permits.

Legislating morality

Dial-a-porn bill sneaks though House

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

Picture the scene: Some teen-agers are home late at night with nothing to do. Their parents are gone for the evening. They want to do something exciting without getting in too much trouble. So, they dig out the traditional girlie magazines, scan the advertisements and try out a dial-a-porn service just for kicks.

So, what happens? The teens get a thrill, and their parents get the bill. They have ordered a service, and the fee will come later in the mail. It's kind of like ordering a porn magazine; you have your fun with it, knowing that a bill will come eventually.

Granted, this probably isn't the most morally upstanding service ever created, but it certainly isn't the worst. However, soon it may not be available at all. The House passed legislation Tuesday that would prohibit all dial-a-porn services.

This was cleverly accomplished by tagging it on as an amendment to the bill which would renew federal education programs for the next five years. The measure was approved by a vote of 397 to 1.

Of course the House is going to vote for this bill. It certainly wants to see education receive funding for the next five years. Since the elections are coming up, everyone wants to make education an issue. Therefore, this bill — which also has an increase of $2 billion for new programs and grants — has been highly acclaimed by many and is expected to be passed by the Senate and receive presidential approval later this week.

How slimy. This tiny little amendment, lost in the big parade of educational funding — which it really has nothing to do with — should not march through so easily. The House has slipped in an amendment which will, no doubt, end in a battle over constitutionality in the Supreme Court.

What this bill does is make it illegal for telephone companies to permit operations that require telephone users to pay a fee for listening to pornographic messages. The big question here is "Why?"

Why just pornographic services? If there is a problem with minors dialing services and putting it on their parents' bill, then why not outlaw all dial-in services? (No, wait, that might impair freedom of speech.) Of course, if the problem is that minors are dialing these services, shouldn't their guardians assume responsibility for them?

If these minors are so unruly that their guardians cannot prevent them from dialing pornography message services at will, then they probably cannot prevent them from drinking illegally, reading pornography and using drugs either. Therefore, it is ridiculous to outlaw a service just because of a few unruly children who are going to break the law one way or another, sooner or later.

As far as the "good kids" who use the service and then watch their parents go into conniptions after finding out about it, if they have any brains at all they should realize their parents will find out about it when the bill arrives. This would seem to be a great discouragement for doing it more than once. Besides, I'm sure that with the discouragement their parents will give them, they will probably go back to good old-fashioned entertainment like girlie magazines and peep shows.

So what is the problem? The House is outlawing a reasonable service. It is also jeopardizing the constitutional freedom of speech. House members already realize that this amendment is going to create a legal snarl for years as it crawls through the court system, costing great amounts of money.

And the whole point is that this service really doesn't hurt anyone. It is no worse than porn channels or porn magazines. In fact, it is probably better since the consumer must go out of his or her way to find the number and solicit the service.

It is ridiculous to outlaw this service on the basis that it may corrupt minors. If they found the telephone number for it in the first place, they've probably already seen enough porn to corrupt them far more than will a steamy voice on the phone. It is ridiculous to prohibit this service for adults since it is legitimate. A service is provided for a prearranged fee. No more and no less.

Members of the House should be ashamed of their backward efforts to combat children's access to porn. There may indeed be a problem with children's use of porn, but this is not the way to go about solving it. The House should take the time to do a thorough study of the issue and address all types of pornography that affect children, not just telephone sex.

It should also take the responsibility to put this amendment in a bill by itself, instead of counting on the popularity of education to drag it through. Using Band-Aid style bills to placate those griping about porn is going to solve nothing, and the legal battles to come will only complicate the problem further.

For Galena residents, good water not in sight

If some state officials have their way, Kansas may soon be a first: the first state in the nation to refuse federal aid to a community for cleaning up its contaminated water.

The Environmental Protection Agency has proposed $4.3 million in federal Superfund money to help residents of Galena in southeast Kansas get a new water supply. Nearly 1,000 residents of the former mining town are drinking water that has been contaminated with high levels of lead and cadmium. Lead can lead to mental retardation in children, and cadmium can cause kidney disease.

So why aren't officials using the newly pledged money to correct the situation? Because Kansas officials don't want to part with enough money to fund 10 percent of the cost.

EPA Superfund guidelines require the state to either pay 10 percent of the cleanup cost — about $430,000 — or prove beyond a reasonable doubt that it will be paid.

Gov. Mike Hayden, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, and the Senate don't want to do that. They contend that the people of Galena should pay for their own good water. Their reasoning, according to Hayden's press secretary, is that providing funding "could turn out to be an extremely costly precedent."

The Galena site at one time was considered one of the most hazardous waste sites in the country. Today, residents of the community are some of the state's poorest and sickest. On the last day of the Legislature's regular session, the House took these factors into consideration and voted in favor of providing $500,000 for the project.

Other state officials should follow suit. In addition to pondering the fact that the health of Galena residents is being adversely affected, those opposing the funding should ask themselves which would be best — $500,000 now or several million dollars worth of lawsuits later.

Charging state vehicles for spaces isn't feasible

It seems that in order to get decent parking on campus, everybody is going to have to dig a little deeper into their pockets.

A proposal that is being considered will increase the cost of student permits, faculty permits and reserved spaces. So far, all of this makes sense.

What doesn't make sense is the decision to charge state vehicles $100 each for reserved spaces. However, this decision is better than the original plan to charge $225 for each space.

But still, this proposal would cause more problems than it would solve.

The College of Agriculture utilizes more than 100 state vehicles for research work, teaching and transporting students to laboratories. Currently, those vehicles are not assessed a charge.

But now it's been decided by the committee that formed the proposal that everyone shouldn't have to support a parking system the state vehicles use for free. Thus, they should pay their fair share.

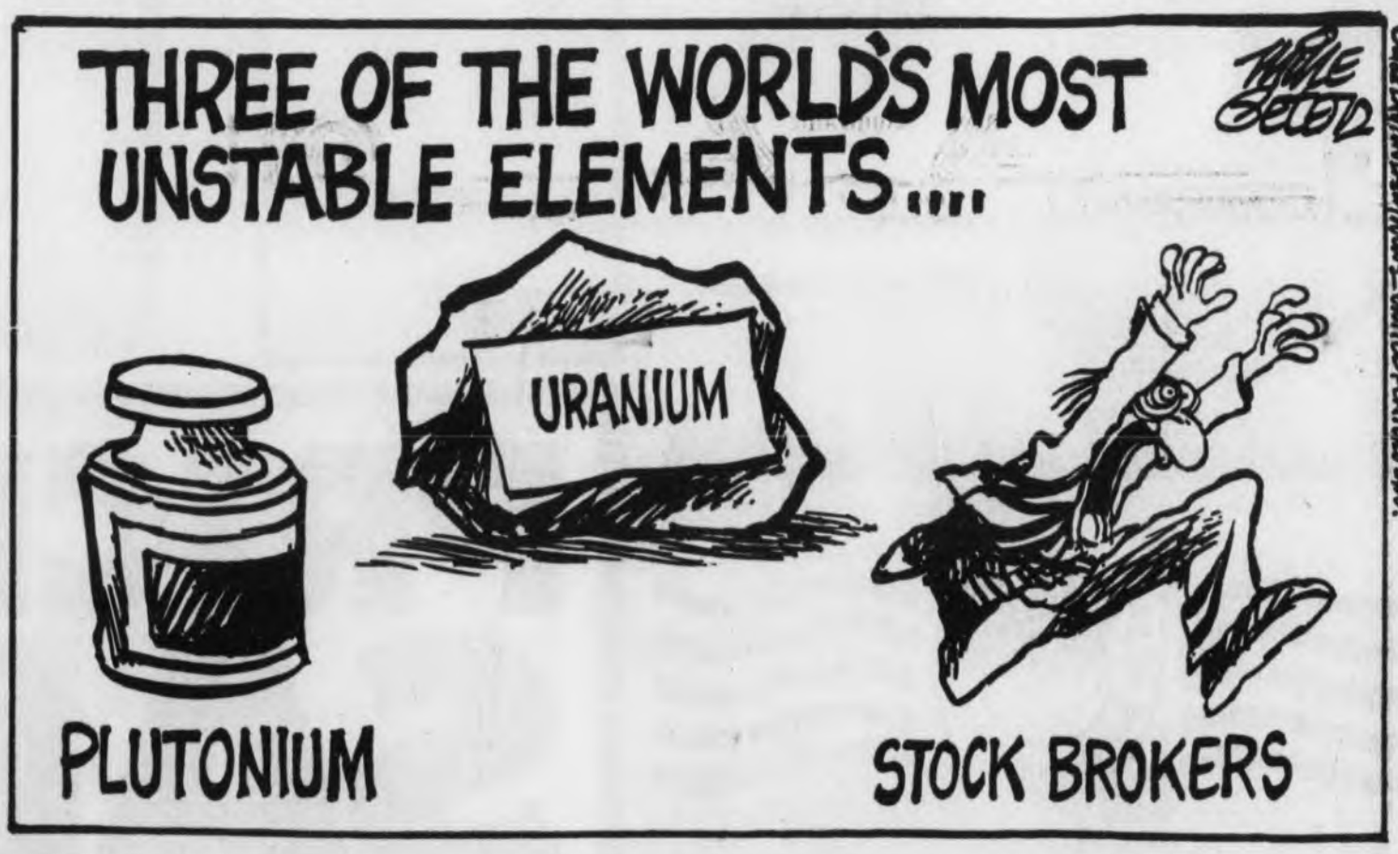
It's estimated that it costs $96 to upkeep one parking space a year. So by charging $100 a space, students and faculty won't be subsidizing the state vehicles.

But wait a minute. Those state vehicles are used for and by the students. And as a land-grant University, K-State is heavily based on agriculture. This charge could result in extensive budgetary problems for the College of Agriculture.

And is it all worth it? Paying the increased rate for parking permits wouldn't seem so bad, especially if it meant the college wouldn't have to do the same.

Despite violence, ships in Gulf remain insured

Call it a fact of life, but it's still ironic and just a little amusing.



It was reported Wednesday that Lloyd's of London, the famous company that will insure virtually anything including starlets' gams, has increased its rates for ships sailing through the Persian Gulf. The increase comes in light of the skirmish Monday between the United States and Iran in which the U.S. Navy sank or damaged six Iranian vessels and destroyed two offshore oil platforms.

A company spokesman, who talked on condition of anonymity, said the rates have doubled. The new war-risk premium is 2 percent, and a 14-day voyage to Kuwait will now cost $200,000 on a $10 million hull.

"If we have one or two weeks without major incidents, I think they'll go down," the spokesman was quoted as saying. That's certainly more fair than, say, auto insurers who normally make insured individuals wait three years before a speeding ticket quits affecting their rates.

And it's gracious, considering such incidents as Monday's could cause the insurance to be revoked.

Yes, ships sailing through the gulf can be assured that they — to borrow a slogan from a competitor — are in good hands.

DOUG FOLK

Where were you on the night of March 25? Is it possible that you were one of those people who actually traveled to Pontiac, Mich., and witnessed the K-State Wildcats defeat the third-ranked Purdue Boilermakers in the semifinal game of the NCAA Midwest Regional first-hand? Or were you one of several thousand individuals glued to their television sets? Or is it possible, if indeed not probable, that you were among those masses of students who stormed Aggieville in a wild (yet non-destructive) jubilation following the game?

Bet you were. I'll bet you were one of those victory-crazed fans who was no less than elated over the success of your Wildcats. Pretty neat feeling, huh? In case you haven't heard of it before, it's what they call Purple Pride. And you're one of the fortunate few who will ever get to experience it. It's that feeling you get when a classy yet tough, cool yet hard-working K-State basketball team knocks off a highly touted, arrogant, third-ranked Oklahoma team in the legendary atmosphere of Ahearn Field House.

It's that feeling you get when you pick up the paper and read that K-State has just produced another Rhodes Scholar. Or another Fulbright Scholar. Or a couple more Truman Scholars.

It's that feeling you get when a team or squad whose respective sport doesn't necessarily fill the bleachers, but is comprised of competitors worthy of the name "Wildcats" nonetheless. A name that is nationally recognized for its outstanding performance.

So how would you like a chance to say thanks to some of those people who have made you feel so proud to be a K-Stater — proud to be a Wildcat? To thank a few of those groups and individuals who have brought national recognition and respect to K-State?

You've got that chance at 12:30 p.m. today in the Union Plaza Area (north of the Union). It's called Wildcat Appreciation Day. Sponsored by the Student Governing Association, it's when the students, faculty and staff of K-State and the members of the community will get their chance to say thanks to some of these people I've been talking about. Some of the groups and individuals to be recognized for their achievements are:

■ The K-State cheerleading squad. The cheerleading squad has always been an integral part of the atmosphere at K-State athletic events. This year, the squad was one of only 20 squads chosen to compete in the Cheerleading National Championship in San Diego in January. It was the only Big Eight Conference squad to be chosen for the competition.

■ The K-State debate team. The debate team was placed fifth in the final rankings of the 1987-88 season, distributed by the Cross-Examination Debate Association. K-State sent four teams to the national tournament in Colorado Springs, Colo. All four teams placed in the top half of the tournament. Three were in the top third, and one placed in the top 15 percent.

■ Mitch Holthus, the "Voice of the Wildcats." Mitch has been giving his colorful play-by-play on the Kansas State Basketball Network for the last five years. He was recently named Kansas Sportscaster of the Year for 1987.

■ The K-State men's basketball team. The achievements of Coach Lon Kruger and his Wildcats this season are numerous. The team posted a 25-9 record, tying the record for most wins in a season at K-State, en route to a second-place finish in the Big Eight, the championship game of the NCAA Midwest Regional Tournament and a No. 8 ranking in the final poll by CNN and USA Today.

These are just a few of the outstanding groups and individuals who have represented K-State in a variety of ways this year. Indeed, to specifically recognize them all would require a Wildcat Appreciation Week. Or month. What we would like to do today is to recognize just a few of the most outstanding — to give them a chance to see how appreciative we are of their efforts.

So come on by today. Come by and join the pep band (another outstanding group), President Jon Wefald and SGA in showing these individuals our appreciation for their efforts, and for giving us good reasons to be proud of our university. Come by and say thanks.

Senate votes to give $20,000 to internment camp victims

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate voted Wednesday to give $20,000 tax-free payments to thousands of Japanese-Americans who were forced from their homes and sent to internment camps during World War II.

Final passage came on a 67-27 vote after an emotional debate in which senators recalled the sometimes-harsh treatment and financial losses suffered by about 120,000 Japanese-Americans who were interned after Japan attacked Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on Dec. 7, 1941.

The bill would require the United States government to apologize for the mass roundups and would make each of the estimated 60,000 survivors eligible for $20,000 payments. A similar bill already has passed the House.

On votes of 67-30 and 61-35, the Senate defeated attempts to strip the bill of the payments, while retaining the apology. It then voted 91-4 to kill an amendment proposed by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to withhold payments until Japan compensated American families for losses suffered at Pearl Harbor.

At one point, Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, was brought to tears as he told of an elderly Japanese-American internee being killed by machine-gun fire when he strayed too close to a camp fence.

But Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., argued that the internment "was not a dishonorable act, it was the option of a nation in the first days of a war."

Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, a Japanese-American who lost his right arm in combat with the Army in Italy, said: "These payments acknowledge the unconstitutional deprivation of liberty ... and the stigma of being deemed unloyal."

Opponents, in addition to objections over the payments, complained about a statement in the bill that the internment "was caused by racial prejudice, war hysteria and a failure of political leadership."

"Hindsight has proven us wrong," said Sen. Chic Hecht, R-Nev. "But I cannot in good conscience go back and tell survivors of Bataan, Iwo Jima and all those battles in the South Pacific and tell them we have forgotten you but we are compensating the people who we moved into camps."

Matsunga, a Japanese-American and the bill's chief sponsor, was an Army officer stationed in Hawaii when Pearl Harbor was bombed on Dec. 7, 1941.

The measure is similar to a bill passed by the House 243-141 on Sept. 17. The Senate version, however, authorizes payments of up to $12,000 for surviving members of the Aleut Indian tribes who were forcibly removed from the Aleutian Islands during the Japanese attack on those islands in 1942.

That and other minor differences would have to be worked out before the bill could go to President Reagan, who has been urged to veto it by the Office of Management and Budget.

Money to fund research

Division of Biology awarded $15,000

By The Collegian Staff

For the third consecutive year, the Division of Biology has received $15,000 for cancer research and the support of workshops and graduate student fellowships.

The Dane G. Hansen Foundation awarded the money to the Center for Basic Cancer Research. The money will go toward supporting cancer workshops that are conducted at K-State and assisting graduate students working on cancer research during the summer months.

"Both programs supported by the Hansen Foundation have been instrumental in attracting some of the brightest young minds to the field of cancer biology," said Terry C. Johnson, director of the Division of Biology. "Without a program like the Dane Hansen Foundation, all of this work would not be possible. It is really a fantastic thing."

The workshops are set up for students and teachers from other schools in the state of Kansas to see how cancer research is being done. The workshops, which began in January 1987, feature four days of intensive hands-on laboratory sessions. The previous two have attracted more than 70 instructors and students.

The participants who attend the workshops are provided room and board by Hansen Foundation money. The approximate cost runs close to $10,000 for the four-day sessions.

"Our workshops are for some students around the state who are learning about cancer research but don't actually get a chance to see it," Johnson said.

The graduate student fellowship is set up to support three graduates for the summer months so that they may have uninterrupted cancer research. The students are paid for their work during the regular school year, but not during the summer.

This program, which is funded from the remaining $5,000, gives these students the funding necessary for the summer months.

Official: productivity linked to child care

Workers receive benefits to reduce lost work time

By Mary Strafuss
Collegian Reporter

Child care in the United States has emerged as a major issue on the political agenda thanks largely to the increasing number of workers, said Beverly Schmalzried, director of social services for the U.S. Air Force. Schmalzried spoke Wednesday on "Child Care Crisis: Issue of the 80s."

"Child care has become the work family issue of this day," Schmalzried said, citing several reasons why the issue has become more prominent.

The most important reason for the emerging attention is the concern for workers' productivity, she said. The interest in child care is not based primarily on increasing social responsibility, but rather on attracting employees and reducing lost work time, Schmalzried said.

"(Corporations) are worried about the product and retaining workers," she said.

The cost of child care and the increasing number of single parents in the job market have contributed to the concern about care.

Seventy percent of working women are in their child-bearing years, and 80 percent of these women will become pregnant in their working years, Schmalzried said.

Thirteen work days a year are lost due to children, and this statistic is a powerful one with employers, she said.

"The biggest cause of stress and anxiety (at work) is children," she said. "The new work force is women, and women have children, and children need child care."

About 10 percent of a person's income goes toward child care, Schmalzried said. This is the third largest cost for a family, with food and clothing being the most costly items, she said.

"The biggest cause of stress and anxiety (at work) is children. The new work force is women, and women have children, and children need child care."
— Beverly Schmalzried social services director

Several alternatives for meeting child care needs are available. Employer-sponsored programs do not elicit a large corporate response, yet the future will push in this direction, Schmalzried said.

Another alternative is organizing child care centers for profit. But this option will only alleviate some of the demand, Schmalzried said. The alternative with the greatest potential, though, is the non-profit contractors, Schmalzried said.

Another crisis of the child care industry is a shortage of employees. Good people cannot be retained or recruited with the wages being offered, Schmalzried said.

Child care institutions have suffered a great deal due to incidents of child abuse, she said.

"There is a distrust of child care institutions," Schmalzried said. Despite the distrust, she cited a study which states that children are more likely to be abused in their own home than at a child care center.

Schmalzried presented the "bottom-line" recommendations to the child care crisis: Child care must be subsidized to meet the demand, and care must have realistic standards with middle-of-the-road solutions.

In addition, incentives must be given to developers and businesses to invest in child care programs, Schmalzried said.

"Child care is a good investment for America," Schmalzried said.

However, "responsibility still needs to rest with the parents," she said, adding that it's unrealistic to expect the government to be solely responsible for child care.

Hayden approves KanWork program

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden signed into law today the KanWork program, which many lawmakers think will help welfare recipients find jobs and keep them.

Hayden, who signed the bill before the state's top welfare official and the lawmaker who sponsored it, called KanWork an innovative attempt to reform the state's welfare system.

Meanwhile, Rep. David Miller, R-Eudora, the sponsor, said the $10 million a House-Senate negotiating committee has recommended to start the program next year in a minimum of three counties will help ensure its success.

"It's the amount of money that counts," Miller said. "I think this is a significant amount."

Under KanWork, adult recipients of Aid to Families With Dependent Children who have children age 3 or older will be required to work or take vocational training or education.

More than 90 percent of AFDC recipients in Kansas are women, many of them single parents.

In turn, the state will provide the women with child care, medical care and money for transportation while they're looking for jobs and for several months after they find employment.

That so-called "transitional" aid will help the women retain jobs long enough to work up to better jobs, under which they can afford health insurance and other necessities, KanWork supporters said.

Critics of the program said most of the women will find only entry-level jobs in service industries, which will never provide them with benefits such as health insurance or pay them well. Supporters counter that KanWork provides more job-training than previous welfare programs and thus may help the AFDC recipients bypass entry-level jobs.

The State Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services will administer the program and pick the counties where the state will begin pilot programs next year. The House-Senate committee recommended it be started in a minimum of three counties and a maximum of 10.

Miller said SRS will pick both urban and rural counties.

EDGE office opens, provides new resource center

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

What used to be an empty conference room in the student government office will today become a new resource center at K-State.

The Environment for Development, Growth and Excellence will have video and cassette tapes on topics ranging from salesmanship to personal relationships to study habits, which will be made available to any student.

The grand opening of the EDGE center will be celebrated at 11:30 this morning by the Blue Key senior honorary.

The idea for the center grew from a request by the Mistler family to convert the scholarship money it traditionally awarded into something able to benefit more people.

In the past, the Mistler Creativity Awards went to two students who showed outstanding creativity and leadership, said Kent Bradley, member of the Student Alumni Board.

"There was a need for consistency; a desire by the Mistler family to serve more than just two students," Bradley said.

Richard Mistler will cut the ribbon to the new EDGE center on behalf of the family. Mistler is a K-State graduate from the College of Engineering and was a member of Blue Key Honorary.

Blue Key had the assistance of students in the interior design curriculum in choosing the color scheme, wall coverings, furniture and lighting. The new room is furnished with a portable VCR, television, cassette player and headphones.

Many famous speakers and experts are featured among the tapes and series', said Dan Owens, Blue Key scholarship chairman. The tapes may be viewed or listened to in the center or checked out for two days.

The EDGE center is intended to help more than the individual, Owens said. He encourages organizations, living groups, classes and instructors to take advantage of the resources which are free of charge and centrally located on campus.

"It's appropriate that Student Senate approved a bill to incorporate the EDGE center into the (Student Governing Services) office with other student services," Owens said. "We were glad to have their cooperation."

The EDGE Center will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Bill extends amnesty deadline

Opponents in Senate could delay passage

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted 213-201 Wednesday for a bill that would make the first change in the nation's landmark immigration law, by extending the amnesty deadline for illegal aliens from May 4 to Nov. 30.

House passage of the measure sent the proposal to an uncertain fate in the Senate, where opponents could use delaying tactics.

The Reagan administration opposes the bill, and the chief of the nation's immigration service, Alan Nelson, has said he would recommend a veto if the measure reached the president's desk.

The immigration law signed by President Reagan in November 1986 was finely tuned legislation that carefully balanced a legalization program for illegal aliens with penalties for employers who knowingly hiring undocumented workers.

Under the law, those who have lived illegally in the United States since before Jan. 1, 1982, had one year — until May 4 — to apply for temporary residency.

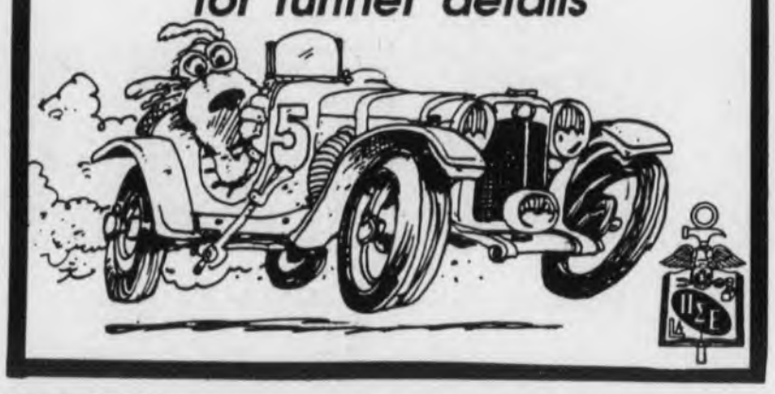
Approval by the Immigration and Naturalization Service for temporary residency allows the aliens to live and work in the United States, while they go through a longer process for permanent residency and citizenship.

Those favoring the extension contended the INS was slow in writing rules for the temporary amnesty program, and said many of those who initially feared the agency were at first reluctant to come forward and apply.

The fears existed, the supporters said, even though the law prohibits immigration officials handling amnesty claims from sharing their information on illegal aliens with the INS enforcement agents.

"I am convinced that hundreds of thousands of potentially eligible applicants have not applied and may not be able to apply by the current May 4 deadline," said House Judiciary Committee Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J.

Rep. Romano L. Mazzoli, D-Ky., the chief sponsor of the extension, said 1.2 million aliens have applied for amnesty and 729,000 have received temporary residency cards. Another 400,000 have applied for legalization under a separate program for agricultural workers, but that program is not affected by the bill.



Mazzoli said the number of applicants for the general amnesty program was sizeable but "falls short of the numbers anticipated."

He said that leaving additional illegal aliens in the country would also mean a greater potential pool of undocumented workers, which the sanctions program is trying to wipe out.

The Congressional Budget Office estimated that the bill would increase expenditures by $270 million through fiscal 1993 to pay for administrative costs, reimbursements to states and federal benefit programs.

But supporters of the extension said fees charged applicants will pay for much of the program.

State offers employees health screening

By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

About 1,320 state employees have registered to participate in HealthCheck '88, a free health-risk screening.

Joe Younger, regional coordinator, said HealthCheck was designed to get an overall look at just how healthy state employees are.

"Each employee going through HealthCheck will be given individual health profiles which will suggest ways in which the employee can improve in the areas needed," Younger said. "After the program is completed, we will receive an overall health profile for K-State."

Younger said the program could result in the establishment of wellness programs which would fit the employees' needs.

"Ultimately, results of survey questionnaires will be compiled to give a picture of the general health and well-being of the total employment group. This will assist in the development of future wellness programs at agencies throughout the state," Younger said.

HealthCheck was initiated by Gov. Mike Hayden to help preserve good health and enhance healthier lifestyles among state employees, Younger said.

Staff or faculty members who work part-time or more and are on the University's Blue Cross/Blue Shield health insurance program are eligible for HealthCheck '88.

"More than 3,700 people are eligible in Riley, Geary, Pottawatomie, Marshall, Washington, Clay and Wabaunsee counties," Younger said.

Among the tests administered in HealthCheck are a health-risk appraisal, blood tests to measure high and low density cholesterol levels, blood fat, blood sugar, height, weight and blood pressure.

Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka is providing a medical team to administer the tests in Manhattan and will compile the results.

"The team goes to where the population is instead of the population going to the team," Younger said.

HealthCheck '88 will continue through May 16. On two days the tests will be given at the Kansas Wheat Commission on Claflin Road for non-University employees.

"Each campus site is clustered in groups of buildings. Each day, only the people from the designated building cluster can be tested.

"This makes it easier for those employees who work across campus. They won't have to walk clear across campus to another building for their tests," he said. "They can wait until it is their building's testing time."

Employees can receive the results of their tests by mail or can consult with the medical team on June 14 or 15.

"The advantage of the consultation group sessions is that the employees will be able to interact with the medical team and ask specific questions about their results," Younger said.

Younger said some individuals have given compliments on the program's efficiency.

"Individuals have complimented the competency and have expressed appreciation for making the program available to them," Younger said.

The program is funded by the employees' monthly contributions to their state health plans that began Jan. 1.

Younger said about 40 percent of the employees are participating in HealthCheck and of that, 97 percent are showing up for their appointments.

"The other 3 percent are asking to be rescheduled because of a variety of reasons," he said. "Otherwise the program is working very, very smoothly. We have three people coming through every five minutes."

Younger said there are advantages to both the employer and the community.

"For the employer, anything we can do in health prevention can increase morale, productivity and decrease illness in workers," he said.

A lone prisoner peers out from his 8-by-8 cell, which is built for one inmate but houses two. This cell block, which houses 280 people, is called the "Honor Unit" because of the privileges the prisoners earned.

OVERCROWDED

Dealing with the Prison Population

Story by Christine Doll
Photos by John La Barge

The prison offers employment for inmates who want to work. Kansas Correctional Industries makes paint, cleaning products and furniture.

Building A, one of the oldest parts of the prison, was built in the 1870s when prisoners were kept in chains and shackles.

On one side of the room the men lay in bunk beds. They have to carefully maneuver when they crawl out of bed to avoid bumping into desks and television sets occupying the other half of the room. Outside the open cube, a fan blows, trying to cool off the two men who share the 8-foot-square room.

These men are privileged — they are part of the "Honor Unit" at Kansas State Penitentiary in Lansing. The other units in the prisons have a wall of bars containing prisoners inside the rooms, and the men are not allowed to have as many personal possessions.

The "Honor Unit" prisoners have one thing in common with the other prisoners. They all feel crowded. All inmates must share 16-foot-square cells built for only one.

The penitentiary is holding 2,464 people. Its maximum capacity is 1,539. But overcrowding is not an unusual predicament in Kansas prisons. In fact, the system is holding about 1,500 more prisoners than its maximum capacity.

The problem has become so bad that a federal judge has ordered the release of 400 prisoners by Sept. 1. Now, the Legislature is debating how to solve the overcrowding problem so it does not happen again.

Overcrowding is not an effect of higher crime rates. The Kansas crime rate has held nearly steady since 1981, but the prison population has jumped by almost 3,000 prisoners during the same time period.

The problem is that fewer inmates are leaving prison. The parole board is stiffening the penalties for every class of crime by not granting as many paroles. For example, people who commit robberies today spend more than two years in prison — twice as long as they would have in 1983.

The trend to keep people in prison longer is not the fault of the parole board, said Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth, who was a member of the joint legislative committee that studied the problem. It has reflected how Kansans feel about criminals.

"The parole board is tough because of the attitude of Kansas," he said.

Overcrowded prisons are an infringement of the prisoners' Eighth Amendment rights barring cruel and unusual punishment. They are also likely places for riots to erupt.

"In the summer, it's hot, and you're confined to a small area with another guy. There are bound to be fights," said Jerry Judy, public relations director at KSP.

Guards going into the cells to break up the fights are in high risk of being hurt themselves. Judy said he isn't concerned about the possibility in KSP because other guards back up the ones going into the cell. But it is a possibility.

Roger Endell, secretary of corrections, wants the Legislature to build two prisons that would cost about $70 million dollars — money the committee is wary of spending.

"You can't build yourselves out of an overcrowding problem," said Sen. Robert Talkington, R-Iola, who heads the joint committee.

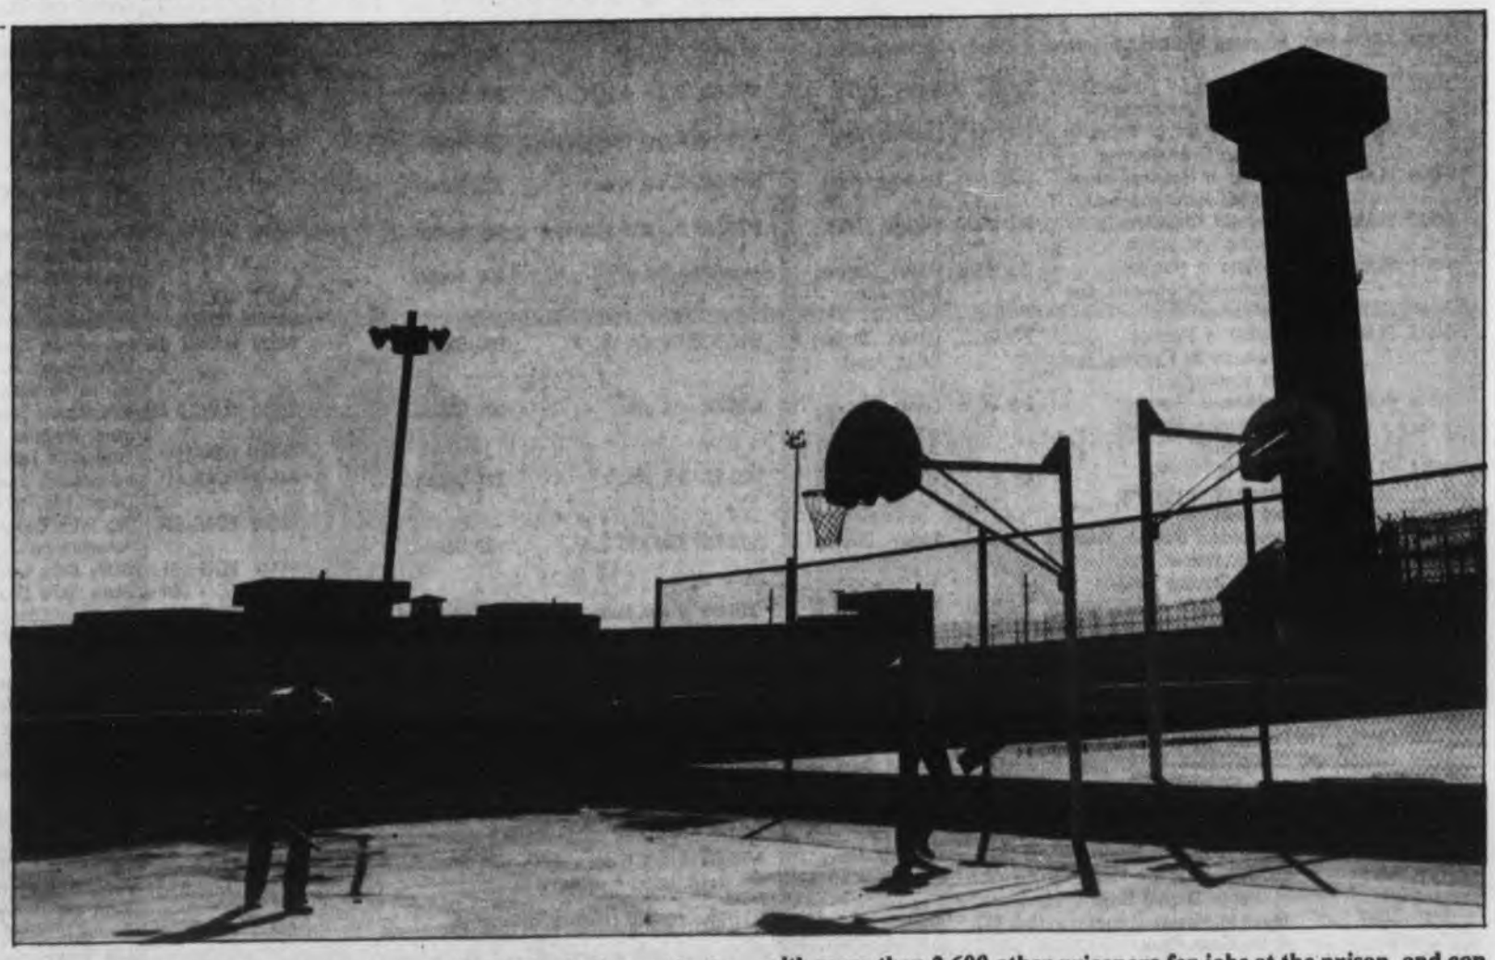
He said he may approve of building a prison in Sedgwick County, since 25 percent of the convicts are from there, but building is not the panacea to the overcrowding problem, he said.

Last year 663 more people went into Kansas prisons than were released. The state must release more prisoners on parole, Talkington said.

"Even if we build a 700-bed prison, we're going to be in trouble again next year," Talkington said. "We must look at every possible facet of corrections."

Sister Therese Bangert, lobbyist for Kansas Citizens for Justice, agreed that more prisons is not the answer. Her group wants more convicts enrolled in community correction programs instead of being sent to prisons.

"Statistics nationwide show that if they build more beds, then they just are filled," she said.



One facet the committee recommended is spending more than $4 million to employ 32 more parole officers and court service officers.

The short-term reasoning for the expansion is to ensure that the 400 prisoners who must be released will be adequately supervised. In the future, it is hoped the three-member parole board will be convinced that enough parole officers are employed to take on more parolees.

Not incarcerating as many convicts has its merits. For one, it is not as expensive. The state pays about $13,000 a year to keep a convict in prison. Also, the chances for rehabilitation may be better outside of prison. Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said more prison will not solve the problem.

"I've come to the conclusion that

Veterinary complex treats exotic animals

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Not all of the patients treated in the small-animal hospital at the veterinary complex are dogs and cats.

In fact, a growing number of them are small enough to hold in your hand and unusual enough to be labeled exotic. Exotic animals are defined as a non-domestic, non-mammalian species.

According to Terry Campbell, assistant professor of veterinary medicine and faculty expert in the field of exotic animals, the popularity of the study of exotic animals is increasing.

"More and more people are living in apartments and can't have traditional pets like dogs and cats," Campbell said. "They keep birds, rabbits, hamsters and other rodents as pets."

Treatment of exotic animals was developed as a specialized area of study at K-State in 1986.

Campbell said the specialized area of study is new and plays a significant role in the veterinary profession. It is now beginning to receive recognition as an important field of study.

Since 1980, the veterinary profession has taken a more scientific approach when dealing with the treatment of these animals, he said. The only problem is that veterinarians do not have the same amount of background data on exotic animals as they have for domestic animals.

"Usually, when taking a blood sample from a domestic animal, there are norms to go by. With an exotic animal, that type of information isn't available, which makes the exotic animals much more challenging to work with," Campbell said.

When instructing his students, Campbell tells them to treat the animals just like any other patient.

"I teach students not to throw all their medical knowledge out the door and just deal with the animal in front of them," he said.

Since 1980, the veterinary profession has made much progress in the treatment and handling of exotic animals.

"Before 1980, the standard treatment would be the empirical approach. The vet would give the animal an antibiotic and hope it would get better," Campbell said. Today, however, veterinarians take a totally different approach.

Some injuries can now be corrected with surgery, and there is also a "tremendous difference" in how anaesthetics are handled, he said.

"If someone brings in a bird, beyond the physical examination we may draw blood samples, run a chemistry profile, or do bacterial cultures. It used to be unheard-of to get a blood profile on a bird because you could not get a large enough sample, but now with the latest developments in micro techniques, it is possible to run the same tests on smaller samples," Campbell said.

The hospital receives approximately 15 to 30 exotic animals a week. Of the many types of animals the hospital receives, 60 percent are birds and reptiles, he said.

"There is a growing economic interest in the area of bird breeding, so the welfare of the animals is important from a business point of view as well," he said.

Campbell said the percentage of successful recoveries for these types of animals is difficult to determine because of their short life expectancy.

"They have a tendency to hide symptoms until the disease process becomes too advanced. By the time the owner notices there is something wrong with the pet, it may be too late. That's why we have a high fatality rate," he said.

Campbell said very little special equipment is used for treating these animals, and expenses to the department are not that much different than expenses in other areas.

"Drug costs are actually lower because of the smaller body sizes," he said.

The most unusual case Campbell has treated was a South American rodent called a degu, which inflated itself whenever it became nervous or upset.

"At some point he would calm down and deflate himself. There was not much we could do for him," he said.

Campbell also serves as a consultant for veterinarians across the country who have problems with exotic animal patients.

Salina students to perform alumnae's play

Former K-Stater now actress, playwright

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

In the fall of 1963, Karen Sunde began her graduate work in English at K-State — one step toward a career that was to make her a successful New York actress and playwright.

Sunde has received rave reviews in New York, acted in plays across the country and written several scripts.

She has been at Marymount College in Salina for the past four weeks working with students of Dennis Denning, chairman of the Department of Speech and Drama. The students are working on a premiere production of Sunde's play "To Moscow."

Denning was the head of the theater department at K-State from 1959-68 before he went to Marymount, and Sunde performed several classical productions under Denning in the mid-'60s. They kept in touch — and with encouragement from Denning, Sunde came to Salina, which will be the site of the first performance of her play.

"Karen is an electrifying actress. People in this area are still talking about her," Denning said.

Denning said that as Sunde cast and rehearsed the play, she also did some rewriting. Sunde will encourage the audience to "stick around" after each performance for nightly critiques, he said.

After completing her undergraduate work at Iowa State University, Sunde chose to attend K-State because of the scholarship she was offered: $2,000 plus paid tuition.

She has performed more than 60 roles, but it was on the K-State stage that she played one of her favorite parts: the lead role in "Mother Courage."

"It was the first role I ever did professionally minded. I went at it like a job. Before then, it was all fun," she said.

After receiving her master's degree at K-State, Sunde began "developing the disease about theater." It was then that she decided she didn't want to teach but wanted to be a professional in the arts.

She said making this decision wasn't easy because she had thought a career in drama was "frivolous."

Before going to New York, she worked with several regional companies. These included The New Shakespeare Company in San Francisco, Arrow Rock Lyceum Repertory in Missouri and the Colorado Shakespeare Festival. Sunde also stayed in Europe for about a year.

In New York, Sunde acted with the City Stage Company Repertory from 1971 to 1985.

"What I'd hoped to find in regional work was there in New York," she said.

"To Moscow" opened Wednesday night and will run through Sunday. The play begins at 8 p.m., and reservations can be made by calling 825-9898.

Chamber helps businesses expand

By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce has made it easier for local businesses to expand by forming a committee designed to extend economic incentives to existing businesses.

Brent Bowman, chairman of the newly established Existing Business Committee, said the committee will provide information and economic assistance to existing businesses in Manhattan — a service that has been lacking for several years.

"We needed to do more for existing businesses in Manhattan," he said. "In the past, incentives were offered to outside businesses to come into Manhattan. Now, the committee will offer (incentives) to local businesses."

Bowman said there is one big advantage to having a group like this.

"This kind of committee provides a link between city government, the Chamber of Commerce and existing businesses," he said.

Bowman said despite this big advantage, there is one aspect of the committee's policies which people and businesses have to consider.

"Our policy is not to provide financial assistance to businesses that have existing competition in the Manhattan area," he said.

To provide this type of business with money to expand could prove detrimental to other competing businesses, he said, because it would give the expanding business the upper hand.

Although the committee is offering economic assistance, it is not in need of funds because funds will be provided by the city of Manhattan and the Chamber of Commerce.

"Any funds we try to make available will be through both the city and the Chamber of Commerce," he said.

Bowman believes the impact of the committee's decisions will be felt immediately.

"We currently have an existing business considering expansion in the next six months," he said.

Bowman said he is optimistic about the committee's success.

"I think we can provide a great deal of assistance to existing businesses. We have found many opportunities for businesses in the community that have not been fully developed yet," he said.

The committee has a network of people involved in its operation, but it must answer to the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce.

Bowman said the 12-member committee — with representatives from city government, business and education — was formed to help the Chamber of Commerce increase service to its members.

"However, membership is not required to get assistance from the committee," he said.

The committee has two programs planned for local businesses. A hotline number at the Chamber of Commerce will be established for businesses to call for information and assistance.

Pamphlet provides students tips on effective money management

By The Collegian Staff

Money.

Though most college students claim to never have enough of it, they seem to often need help managing it. The College of Human Ecology is now offering a pamphlet to help college students manage their money more effectively — without running up a list of overdraft charges.

The pamphlet, "Scholars and Dollars: Economic Survival Strategies for Students," is directed toward students and their monetary obligations.

Joyce Cantrell, instructor of human development and family studies, and Tracy Campbell, senior in political science, prepared the brochure.

Cantrell said the publication is the result of a discussion among parents on problems with financing their children's education.

"One person said she'd never trust her daughter with a checkbook, and another said she wouldn't trust her's with a credit card. Then we started talking about expenses, and the idea for the brochure came up," Cantrell said.

The brochure is broken into sections that outline where college students spend their money and ways of stretching their spending money.

It also shows a breakdown of how much students spend on such things as rent, tuition and books as well as items like clothing, season tickets for sports events, entertainment, personal upkeep and gifts.

According to the listing, the average on-campus student spends $2,771 each semester, and the average off-campus student spends $2,929.

However, Cantrell said these figures vary for each student.

"I received these numbers from a class I teach, called Personal and Family Finance. Of course, these figures may vary with the individual."

To help students meet these expenses, the last page of the brochure lists financial aid sources that are funded by both the campus and the federal government.

Alumni to donate $11 million

By The Collegian Staff

K-State alumni and friends are expected to set two contribution records before June 30, the end of the KSU Foundation's fiscal year.

About $11 million is expected to be donated from K-State alumni, corporations and foundations this year, which will exceed last year's total of $9.85 million.

"Contributions are 16 percent ahead of this time of year," said Art Loub, Foundation president. "We will far surpass the $10 million plateau this year, and we may reach 30,000 contributors.

"Financial support of this magnitude reflects our constituents' dedication to the educational opportunities available at K-State."

This year's total number of expected donors — 30,000 — will break last year's record of 27,000.

The Foundation is the University's official fund-raiser and conducts a variety of programs to enhance K-State's academic opportunities, Loub said.

Man finds bones while unclogging pipes

By The Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Human bones unearthed while a man was unclogging a drainage pipe may be 100 years old, an anthropolgist says.

"We're going back out there to see if we can't find more of that individual," said William Bass of the University of Tennessee. "We think the feet are on one side of the trench and the arms are on the other side of it."

A week ago Harry Kennedy was trying to unstop the drainage line from his washing machine when a helper unearthed the bones.

"I was sitting here in the house and went out there to see how he was doing and he pitched a bone up on the bank," said Kennedy, 73. "I said we ought to stop right here and call the police; I believe this is a human bone."

A sheriff's deputy brought bones from a thigh, pelvis and lower arm to the county coroner's office.

Bass, also a forensic pathologist for the state, said a preliminary review indicates the bones are from an adult male.

Athlete fulfills five-year dream

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Bruce Cook doesn't want people to feel sorry for him.

He hates that.

Just because he lost the use of his legs about five years ago in an automobile accident and has been confined to a wheelchair since, doesn't mean he isn't like any other amateur athlete.

But Cook accomplished something Monday that many area athletes can only dream about — he competed in the Boston Marathon. Cook, seeded 25th in the wheelchair division, placed 20th after covering the 26-mile, 385-yard course in 2:12.16.

For Cook, competing at Boston was a dream that came true.

"That's what I've been training for all these years — to go to Boston. It's the granddaddy (of all marathons)," Cook said. "When I was first in a wheelchair ... I saw wheelchair athletes competing in Boston. I thought, 'Wow, that's neat.' I've always wanted to qualify for it."

Cook's statement about the Boston Marathon being the "granddaddy" of all foot races is exactly right. For the past 92 years — since April 19, 1897 to be exact — the Boston Athletic Association has sponsored the race which starts in the rural New England town of Hopkinton, Mass., winds through eight cities and towns, and finishes in downtown Boston.

Boston is also famous for the tremendous crowd support given to the participants. Race organizers hand out sheets with the name and number of each entrant, and fans add a "personal touch" to their cheers.

"That's what's neat about Boston. There were people cheering me on, going, 'Come on, Bruce.' And the closer we got to Boston, the streets were just full of people. It was a neat feeling," Cook said.

Even though the Merriam, Kan., native was one of only 55 wheelchair athletes who qualified for this year's race, rainy weather made the wealth of history and tradition a less-than-enjoyable experience.

"I was soaked. At the 20-mile mark, the clothes I was wearing weren't cutting it. I was just cold and wet," Cook said. "It really came down to ... the people who were prepared to handle the rainy weather, and I wasn't one of those.

"I've never gone out and trained in the rain. If I see it's raining outside, I'm not going to go outside and work out. After the first 18 miles at Boston, I felt like it was me against the elements instead of me against the other competition," he added.

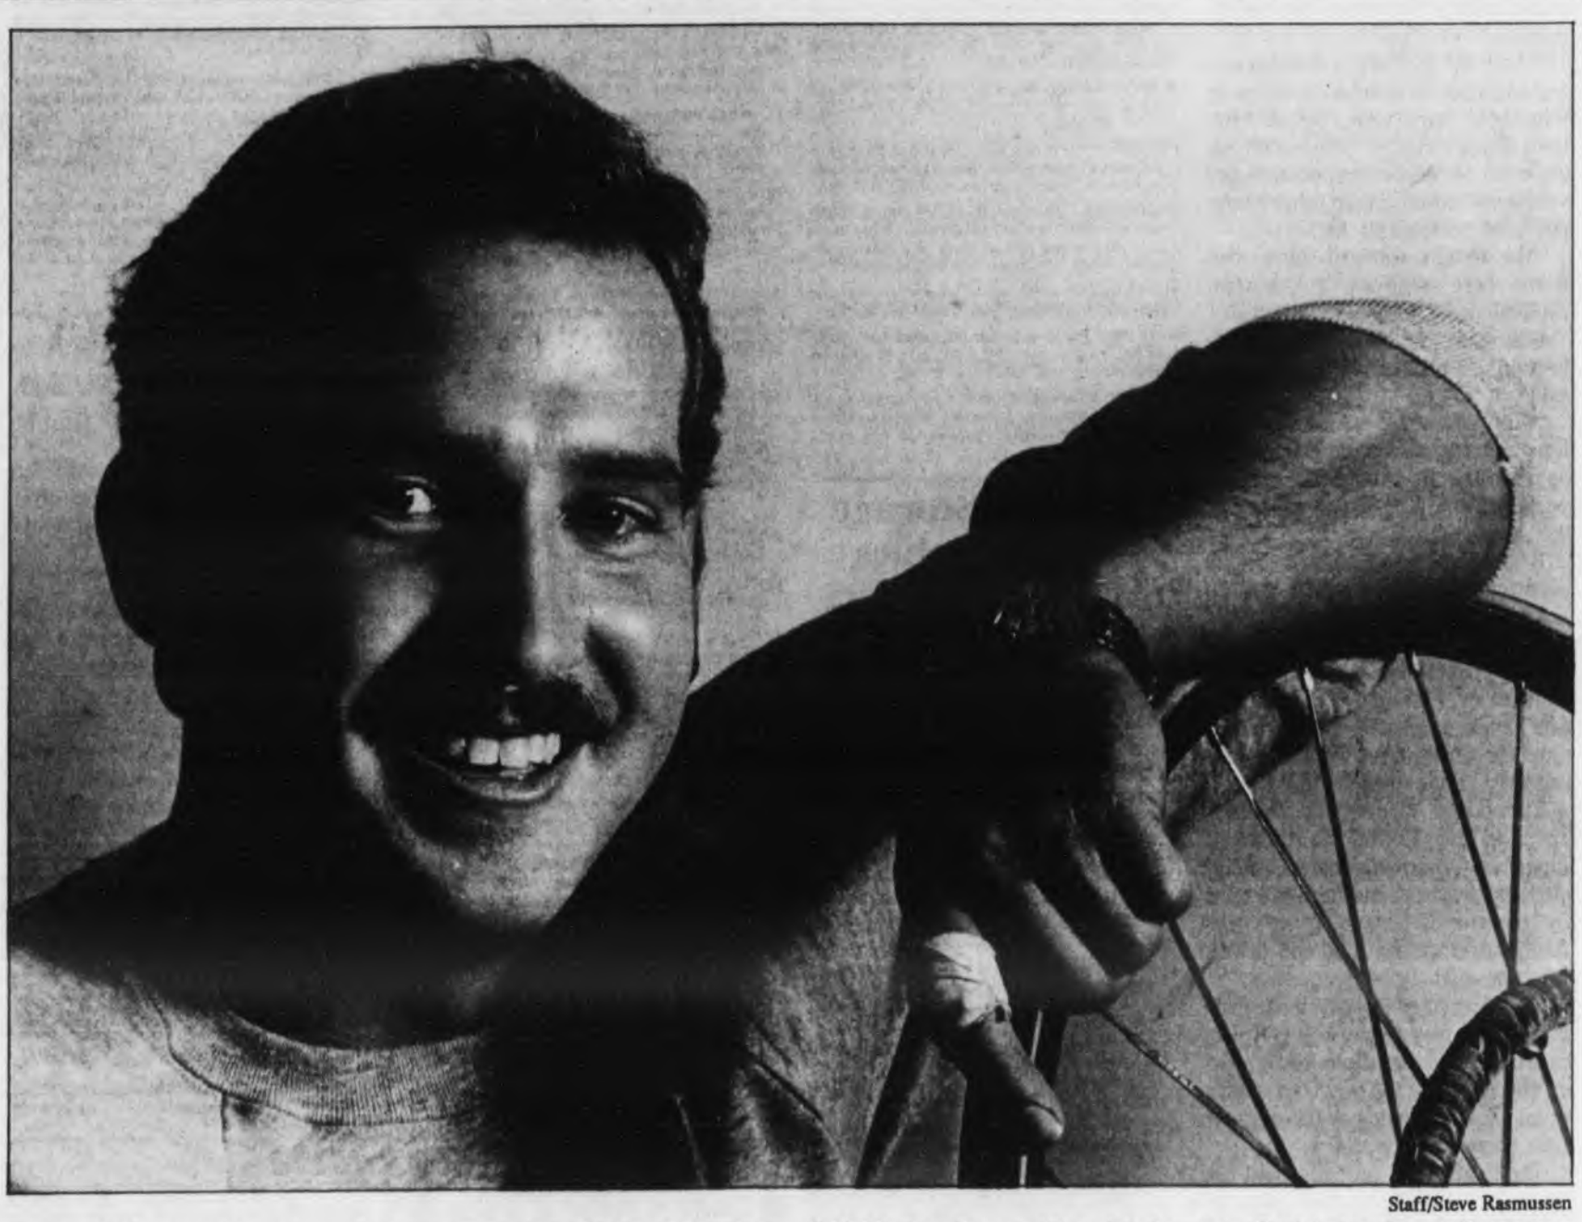
The rain also caused Cook's push rims to become slick, which resulted in cramps in his wrists and arms. He also wears tape which covers a blister on a left-hand finger.

"This was the worst I have been as far as being sore after a race," he said. "I had to concentrate on grabbing on to my push rims. If it's dry, you just have to worry about tapping and pushing them. (The rain) made a big difference."

Hardships aside, Cook did manage to master "Heartbreak Hill," the infamous slope which makes or breaks many Boston participants.

"When I got through the hills, I knew the race was over with. I just kept my head down. I didn't want to look up," Cook said.

Wheelchair racers were officially sanctioned by the Boston Athletic Association for the first time in 1984. The first wheelchair participant to "unofficially" compete in the race was Eugene Roberts in 1970. He completed the race in just under seven hours.



In 1984, prize money was awarded for the first time to wheelchair participants. This year's winner in the men's division, Maussetapha Badid of France, received $7,000 in addition to a $10,000 bonus for breaking the course record. Badid's time of 1:43.19 is a world record and broke the Boston mark by six seconds.

Cook started training for Boston at the end of December. In addition to 60 miles of roadwork weekly, Cook also competed in the Detroit Free Press and Los Angeles marathons. In his first-ever marathon at Detroit, Cook placed seventh out of 60 entrants with a personal best of 2:08.40.

Cook had to absorb the cost of going to Boston, which was "a pretty expensive weekend." After he had dried out and the soreness had subsided, Cook assessed his experience.

Was it worth it?

"I had to fork out the bill for Boston, but I was going to do that no matter what," Cook said. "Boston has always been a big deal. There was no way anything was going to keep me away from that baby."

Staff/Steve Rasmussen

Bruce Cook recently returned home from the Boston Marathon where he placed 20th in the wheelchair division with a time of 2:12.16, despite a cold and rainy day. Cook's bandaged finger is a result of competing in the 26.2-mile race.

'Subway series' to conclude season

Commentary

BILL LANG
Sports Writer

It's been about a month since the major league baseball season began. After a long season without the summer game, my nerves are finally relaxed and I'm ready to make some predictions.

This is the time of the year almost every sports writer in the country sticks his neck out and says which teams will make it all the way to the World Series.

Let's begin with the American League East. I'm truly sorry to say this, but I have to go with the New York Yankees. They have a decent — not great — pitching staff for the first time in a long time. Also added to the bullpen is a proven stopper in reliever Dave Reghetti.

They also have is a batting lineup that is one of the better ones in the majors today, starting with Rickey Henderson. Hey, if he gets on base, add another stolen base to his stats. Willie Randolph is a proven second baseman and now he's proving that he can be a No. 2 hitter in any lineup. Then Don Mattingly — enough said right there. He's a shoo-in for the Hall of Fame when he retires. Add Dave Winfield and you have what is probably the best lineup in today's game.

The Kansas City Royals should win the American League West. On paper they look good. And they have a pitching rotation that would make a number of managers drool — Bret Saberhagen, Charlie Liebrandt, Mark Gubicza, Floyd Bannister, Dan Quisenberry, Gene Garber, etc.

Field-wise, Frank White is still at second. He is one of the game's best at his position, and he has eight Gold Gloves to back up that claim. George Brett and Willie Wilson are both solid players all the way around. Danny Tartabull and Kevin Seitzer are two of the hottest young talents in the majors. Then there is Bo Jackson. Jackson is a talent just waiting to explode. Give him another year and he'll be up there with the big boys.

Over in the National League East — this hurts when one is a Chicago Cubs fan — the New York Mets have the best team and will win the East in a big way. The Mets have Mookie Wilson, Len Dykstra, Darryl Strawberry, Keith Hernandez, Kevin McReynolds and Howard Johnson in the batting lineup. That's enough power to scare any pitcher.

New York also has pitching in its own right. Dwight Gooden, Ron Darling, Sid Fernandez and Roger McDowell could start for any team in the majors.

In the National League West, it's a toss-up, but I have to go with the San Francisco Giants. Actually there are three teams — the Giants, the Cincinnati Reds and the Houston Astros — that will vie for the pennant, but San Francisco has the best chance. The Giants are coming back with everybody intact and are ready and able to prove they are capable of winning a pennant. They have the arms, the power and the speed to walk away with the pennant. But keep an eye out for Cincinnati and Houston. If the Giants struggle against those two, they'll lose out on repeating in 1988.

My pick for the World Series contestants are ... New York and New York. That's right. I'm envisioning a subway series.

Now for the winner of the Series. I hate to say this, but it will be the New York Yankees.

I think I have stuck my neck out far enough. But as long as the Cubs aren't playing in the Series, I have to go with the next best team in baseball.

Pitcher helps 'Cats 'get the job done'

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

What a difference a year makes.

But in the case of K-State's talented senior pitcher Jeff Peterson, what a difference a couple of years make.

When Peterson arrived at K-State from Birmingham, Mich., in the fall of 1984, he admitted that he wasn't even close to being a pitcher.

"When I arrived here I had a live arm," he said. "But I had a high school idea of what the strike zone was. In high school I could just rear back and let (the ball) fly. But the talent (in the college ranks) is so much better than in high school, you just can't expect to do that."

Peterson began developing his pitching skills early in his youth in the streets of suburban Detroit.

"When I was younger, there wasn't much to do in the suburbs of Detroit during the summer," he said. "So I just started throwing a tennis ball at a wall behind a drug store. Then I started throwing the ball at a spot on the wall. By the end of the summer I was able to hit the spot with both arms."

It was that kind of talent that got Peterson noticed. Following his senior year in high school, he was planning to go to San Diego State University. Then former K-State coach Gary Vaught came along.

"He called and said 'We'd like to have you pitch for K-State,'" Peterson said. "They could only give me a half-ride scholarship and San Diego was going to give me the same.

"My dad got in on what was going on and told K-State to give me a full-ride, and next thing you know we pack the car, get a road map and head for Manhattan."

As Peterson has gained more experience against Big Eight Conference teams and other opponents, his idea of how to outthink and out-pitch his opponents has matured. The result this year is a 5-1 record, a 4.50 earned run average and 33 strikeouts. He has also earned Big Eight Pitcher of the Week honors for the week of April 10-16.

Peterson still sees room for improvement, though.

Hayden names Hall of Fame trustees

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden Wednesday named seven Kansans to serve on the board of trustees for the Kansan All-Sports Hall of Fame.

"Individually, each of these Kansans bring to the board tremendous interest and dedication to Kansas sports," Hayden said. "Collectively, they comprise a strong force that will clearly benefit the hall of fame and I look forward to their service to the state."

The seven new trustees will select Kansas athletes for induction into the Kansas All-Sports Hall of Fame, located in Lawrence. The group also will accept gifts and grants for the hall of fame.

"Kansas has a tremendous sports heritage," Hayden said. "I am confident these new hall of fame trustees will be successful in working to realize the full potential of the hall of fame."

The Kansans named to the board are:

■ Max Falkenstein of Lawrence, who originated the Kansas University Sports Network and has been broadcasting Big Eight sports for 40 years.

Long-time K-State radio announcer named to board

■ Jim Hershberger, a Wichita businessman, philanthropist and athlete, who is a featured speaker on goals, motivation, organization and perserverance.

■ Charles Lower of Topeka, who is president of Lower Heating and Air Conditioning, Inc. He is active in the Greater Topeka United Way and the Highland Park Optimist Club.

■ Dev Nelson of Manhattan, who has been involved in the state's radio and television industry for 37 years. Nelson was Sportscaster of the Year for Kansas five times. He was sports director at WIBW in Topeka for 10 years and served as sports information director and director of the Kansas State University Radio Network.

■ Willie Nicklin of Topeka, who is varsity basketball coach at Topeka High School. A coach for 32 years, he was named 1973 Kansas Coach of the Year.

■ Fred White of Leawood, who is entering his 15th year as broadcaster for the Kansas City Royals Radio Network.

■ Rep. Bill Wisdom, D-Kansas City, who has long supported the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame.

Mossman signs recruit, brings final total to four

From Wire Reports

Sheila Cherry, a 6-0 forward/center, has signed a national letter-of-intent to attend K-State to play basketball, Coach Matilda Mossman announced Wednesday.

Cherry is Mossman's fourth and final signee for the 1988-89 season.

Cherry, originally from Salina and a two-year all-league selection at Salina Central High School, will be transferring to K-State from Cloud County Community College. She helped lead Cloud County to a 38-19 record in two seasons and earned All-Region VI honors both years.

As a freshman at Cloud County, Cherry averaged 17 points a game while pulling down nine rebounds. She upped her average to 18 points and nine rebounds a game as a sophomore.

Cherry was also an All-Region VI honoree in volleyball. Last week, she qualified for junior college track nationals in the triple jump with a leap of 35-1¼ as she competed in the Ward Haylett Invitational hosted by K-State.

"Once again, we feel like we have signed a quality young person who will help increase our team speed and quickness," Mossman said. "Sheila is a physical player who can get up and down the floor and is also an outstanding athlete."

Last week, Mossman announced the additions of Mary Jo Miller, a 5-5 point guard from Tracy-Milroy High School in Marshall, Minn., Leah Honeycutt, a 5-9 forward from Parkway West High School in St. Louis, Mo., and Arneetrice Cobb, a 5-10 guard/forward from Cowley County Community College, to the Lady Cat squad.

Chiefs trade, get first pick Sunday

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs swapped places in the NFL draft Wednesday with Detroit, giving the Lions their first and second-round choices in Sunday's draft for the Lions' first-round choice, the No. 2 selection overall.

The Chiefs, who gave up the No. 3 pick in the first round and the second pick in the second round, will thus be the first team to act Sunday. The Atlanta Falcons have already signed Auburn linebacker Aundray Bruce with the overall No. 1 pick.

"Our thinking was that we identified the player we wanted, and we weren't going to take a chance on not having an opportunity to get him," General Manager Jim Schaaf said. Schaaf refused to identify the player or say if the Chiefs will sign him prior to the draft, which starts at 11 a.m. Central time on Sunday.

"As soon as anything happens, we will apprise you of the details, either a signing or an announcement on draft day," Schaaf said.

The Chiefs finished 4-11 last year and ranked No. 27 among the 28 NFL teams in defense. Team officials have said they will concentrate on defense in the draft and there has been speculation that Nebraska defensive lineman Neil Smith may be high on their list.

"If we thought he was going to be there, we wouldn't have moved up," Schaaf said. "We wanted to insure the fact that we're going to get this player. There are very few impact players in any draft, particularly this draft. We thought we had to do something to insure we cold have the opportunity to select him."

The Chiefs also announced Wednesday that former NFL head coach Sid Gillman will be a special consultant this year in evaluation of quarterbacks.

Prison

we are sending too many people to prison," he said. "Look at the punishment of having to work for a living and pay restitution. That's more of a punishment than putting someone in a cell with a television set for 18 months."

Inside the prisons, rehabilitation and education is also becoming more important. Jerry Judy, public relations director at KSP, said Endell has put more emphasis on education and vocational training than other secretaries of corrections had.

"He doesn't want to see a man leave here without a (General Equivalence Diploma)," he said.

Education is the first step to becoming a productive citizen, Judy said.

"Forty percent of the inmates have less than a fourth-grade education," he said. "It is difficult to even get into vocational training if you can't read the instructions."

Besides education, the corrections department has contracted with a Kansas City school district to offer vocational training courses at the prison. The inmates have the chance to learn everything from refrigeration repair to masonry. They complete the same course work as a non-prisoner in the training program.

The prison also offers employment in the Kansas Correctional Industries. It manufactures paint, cleaning products and furniture used by the state of Kansas. It also produces some of the food the prison uses, he said.

"I feel we need to assist these people in some way, because only 1 percent of the inmates die in prison. An ex-con might be the guy next to you in line at McDonalds or dating your best friend," Judy said.

The Legislature probably will not develop a comprehensive plan to solve the overcrowding problem until next year, Reilly said. Until then, Kansas prisons will continue to cram prisoners behind bars.

"We're in the middle here. The courts say 'go to jail.' The Legislature tells us how much we can spend," Judy said.

Some of the statistical data in the article was supplied by a Wichita Eagle-Beacon article published Feb. 14, 1988.

FREE SHUTTLE

On April 20, and April 21, 1988, activities on the KSU Campus will result in the loss of several parking spaces. Because of the loss in parking spaces the KSU Police will operate a free shuttle service. This will not only help those in need of parking, but will give us a chance to assess the feasibility of a permanent shuttle system.

The shuttle will originate at the east side parking lot of KSU Football Stadium parking lot, entrance should be made from Kimball Avenue. The shuttle will start at 7:30 a.m. and end at 5:30 p.m. each day. A shuttle van will be at each pickup/drop-off point approximately every 20 minutes. Following is a list of each shuttle stop:

1. East Parking lot KSU Football Stadium.
2. KSU Parking lot A-28, near front doors of Durland Hall.
3. Bus Stop at 17th Street and Vattier Drive, near northwest corner K-State Union.
4. Mid-Campus Drive at the East doors of Anderson Hall.
5. Parking lot A-4 near the southeast doors of Farrell Library.
6. Southwest corner of KSU parking lot A17w.

We hope as many people as possible try tthe free shuttle system. A parking permit will not be required at the KSU Stadium Parking lot. The shuttle service is available to everyone.

Board approves Vo-Tech budget

By The Collegian Staff

The Manhattan Board of Education approved the preliminary 1988-89 Vo-Tech budget at its meeting Wednesday night.

Bill Berry, director of the Manhattan Area Vocational Technical School, said the tuition students pay per clock hour will not be raised for the third year in a row. The budget is to be received by the State Department of Education no later than May 2.

Nancy Thompson, director of elementary education, presented the kindergarten through 12th grade Language Arts Curriculum Guides for the board's approval. The guides, developed to provide guidelines for the language arts-related courses in the middle and high school, represent the conclusion of a three-year study, Thompson said. Reading, English, spelling and written composition will be included at the elementary level. The board adopted the guides.

In other action, board members approved a proposal to support an early retirement plan for the Kansas Employees' Retirement System. This will benefit members 60 years of age with a minimum of 35 years of service credit, Rowe said. The plan will continue health insurance benefits until age 65 and employer contribution toward a retirement fund in absence of the employer's Social Security contribution.

Hijack

took off shortly before dawn. It is rare for military aircraft to use the civilian Houari Boumedienne airport and there was speculation that some or all the hijackers were aboard.

Algerian officials would not discuss the flight or its occupants. KUNA quoted Mohammed Taher, a member of the Algerian negotiating team, as saying without elaboration that the hijackers were "still here."

Interior Minister Hedi Khediri, who led the Algerian mediators, announced the drama's end without giving details and said the fate of the hijackers was the "concern of Algeria" alone.

Floodlights had bathed the blue-and-white jet nightly since it landed in the North African capital on April 13, but were extinguished at 9 p.m. Tuesday. They never came back on, making it difficult for reporters to detect movement in the area.

After the plane was seized over the Indian Ocean, it was diverted to Mashhad, Iran, where the terrorists released 57 hostages. Freed passengers said they believed more gunmen boarded at Mashhad with submachine guns and dynamite that was wired to the plane's doors later.

After three days in Mashhad, the hijackers tried to take the plane to Beirut but the airport there would not permit it to land. The jet ran low on fuel and Larnaca, Cyprus agreed to accept it.

During five days in Larnaca, the hijackers beat two Kuwaiti security men, shot them to death and dumped their bodies from the aircraft.

fellows as well as the students, she said.

"The fellows that we've visited with in the past felt like they got as much out of it as the students and faculty," Wallerstedt said. "The thing that they are stressing is that they feel like they have an opportunity to give something back to their University."

Seven fellows were invited to speak in the Colleges of Agriculture, Architecture and Design, Arts and Sciences, Business, Education, Engineering, and Human Ecology.

Because the colleges select which alumni will return, Wallerstedt said the invitations are an honor.

tional financial support.

Since the new fee, if adopted, would only pay for childships and not student salaries, the bill is different from the one Senate rejected, Folk said.

In the March 4 debate, opponents of the bill argued that the fee would benefit only a small part of the student population. The bill failed in a 27-22 vote which came at 2 a.m. after nearly three hours of debate.

Since then, a bill which would have called a student referendum to create a fee for the co-op was withdrawn by its supporters before its scheduled consideration by Senate on March 10.

In a meeting with the co-op board of directors March 31, Krause said the administration would provide $9,000 to aid the co-op. Co-op officials had been seeking $200,000 in combined administration and student financing to alleviate expected deficits.

At the same meeting, Krause also suggested dissolution of the co-op.

"Maybe we're kidding ourselves," Krause said. "Maybe we ought to dissolve it and give it to the private sector."

"I haven't been as consistent as I would like to have been this year," he said. "I'd have to say that I've had only one good outing this year.

"We scored 23 runs against Kansas (Saturday) and still struggled," Peterson added. "I didn't come out with experience. I tried using my power, and when I start using that I start losing control of the game."

Peterson thinks this year's squad, now 26-13, has the best chance of any team that he's been on since his arrival to make the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament.

"This is a great ballclub," he said. "It's not a bunch of superstars, but it's a bunch of guys who just go out and get the job done.

"We've gotten through the rough part of our schedule," he said in reference to the series' already played against conference powerhouses Oklahoma and Oklahoma State. "We've got a tough one this weekend, though. We can beat Missouri. We've got a lot of potential on this ballclub."

Candidacy over for Gore

Dukakis frontrunner by 200 delegates

By The Associated Press

The 1988 Democratic presidential marathon dwindled down to two survivors on Thursday as Sen. Albert Gore Jr. called it quits. Front-runner Michael Dukakis said Jesse Jackson's showing guarantees him consideration when it comes to picking a vice presidential running mate but nothing more.

"If I were to finish second, it wouldn't entitle me to anything more than consideration, period," Dukakis said in an interview in Boston before he flew off to campaign in Pennsylvania and Ohio, the next primary states on the calendar.

Jackson spent the day in Pennsylvania, buoyed by an endorsement from the Philadelphia Daily News. "I am the alternative in the Democratic Party. I am the alternative to Reaganomics," he said as he made the rounds on a hectic campaign day.

"We can win. We can win," he said.

The ubiquitous public opinion polls suggested otherwise.

A survey taken for television stations in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh showed Dukakis favored by 55 percent to 24 percent for Jackson and 6 percent for Gore. That represented an improvement in Dukakis' position since his big victory in the New York primary, which established his control over the presidential race.

Pennsylvania votes next week and offers 178 Democratic delegates.

Gore exited with a quip.

"I was going great until I turned 40," he told a roomful of family members and supporters in the Senate.

The Tennessee senator said he would technically remain a candidate so his delegates can attend the Democratic National Convention this July in Atlanta.

But, he said, "I will no longer campaign in the hope of winning the nomination. ... I want no part of a stop Jackson or stop Dukakis movement.

"The only person I want to stop is George Bush and we're going to stop George Bush."

Vice President Bush is clearly heading for the Republican nomination, and the only suspense is when he will amass the 1,139 delegates needed for clinching it. The best guess is Tuesday night in Pennsylvania.

Gore, who sought the nomination as a Southern, moderate alternative to the other contenders, left the campaign at least $1.5 million in debt after failing to build on his Southern successes in any Northern or Midwestern states.

Dukakis leads in the delegate chase with more than 1,000 and Jackson holds more than 800.

Developer amends lawsuit, wants proposal approved

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

An amendment was added Thursday to a $1 million lawsuit filed against the Manhattan City Planning Board and the Board of City Commissioners.

The lawsuit was filed Tuesday by DeWayne Talley, Manhattan, after the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board's April 4 denial to approve plat plans for 1.6 acres of undeveloped land he owns.

The tract, University Terrace Addition, is near University Terrace Apartments at College Avenue and Claflin Road.

The original suit, filed Tuesday, called for $1 million in damages to be awarded to Talley, but the amended suit asks for damages in excess of $10,000.

"This (amendment) doesn't change a thing. It just makes the wording of the suit more correct," said Howard Fick, Talley's attorney.

In a suit of contract, the petitioner asks for a set amount for damages. However, since this is a suit of tort and contract, Fick said, the change was appropriate.

Talley, owner of L-K Investments Inc., first asked the board in May 1986 to rezone his property from R, single-family residential, to RM, four-family residential. The request was denied.

On March 21, Talley submitted the plat plans for the construction of a single-family residential development. The board tabled the discussion until its April 4 meeting, when it was denied.

In the past few years, Talley has submitted several different proposals for the area, said Ray Weisenburger, member of the planning board and professor of regional and community planning.

With each proposal, Talley said, he has tried to work out the problems cited by the board.

"Every time I have submitted a proposal, it has been with the blessing of the planning board. Then, every time, it's been denied," he said. "I've tried for almost two years to work with them."

In earlier plats, Talley said he had planned a street on the east side, but the city wanted it on the west — so he moved it. He planned a through street, but the city wanted a cul-de-sac — so he changed it.

"I've widened the street — I've done everything they've wanted me to do," he said. "I planned a retention pond (for drainage) and the neighbors didn't want it. I planned it without one, and the city didn't like it."

Weisenburger said the area Talley wants to develop does not drain well after hard rainstorms.

"After a hard rainstorm, that area has a tremendous runoff," he said.

Talley agrees the area doesn't drain well, but said he has made plans to solve his portion of the problem.

"It's only four city blocks. It's not a whole lot of ground," he said. "There are about 98 acres there that have water-shed problems.

Speaker: Middle class shrinks; future holds 'two-tier' society

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

The middle class is shrinking, and the middle-class lifestyle is no longer affordable on a median income.

Staff/Steve Wolgast

Barbara Ehrenreich

Barbara Ehrenreich, writer on women's issues and public policy, delivered her lecture, "The Disappearing Middle Class," at the last Lou Douglas Lecture of the year Thursday night in Union Forum Hall to about 400 people.

America is experiencing what economists call classical polárization, Ehrenreich said.

"The extremes in our society have been getting further apart. The middle is shrinking numerically so that we are heading toward becoming a two-tier society," she said.

The two tiers would be the few wealthy and the many poor — a pattern similar to many Third World societies.

"Some economists call it the Brazilianization of America. Maybe that is not fair to (Brazilians), who may think they are undergoing the Americanization of Brazil," she said.

Ehrenreich said there are four reasons for society's classical polarization.

■ Certain groups have been "set adrift" from the middle class, but not by choice. Among those groups are farmers, industrial workers and single mothers with children.

■ Public policies under the Reagan administration have promoted this classical polarization.

"(Reagan) redistributed the wealth from down to up. That was the theme for many years," she said. Tax cuts and cuts in social programs made between 1980 and 1984 resulted in the richest one-fifth of America gaining $25 billion, and the poorest one-fifth losing $6 billion.

■ Before the 1980s, wages in America began to drop.

"Wages have been stagnating or actually falling for most workers, except those at the top, throughout the '80s," Ehrenreich said.

Organized labor is suffering under an anti-labor administration. The National Labor Relations Board has stopped providing support for workers who are suffering from unfair labor practices.

■ Classical polarization is self-perpetuating.

"The more we polarize, the more difficult it is to reverse that trend. We've started down a very dangerous path. (Polarization) has its own momentum," she said.

Student Senate to vote on new childcare fee bill during meeting Thursday

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

A bill to create a student fee to aid the defecit-plagued KSU Childcare Cooperative passed preliminary consideration by Student Senate Thursday night and will be voted on next week at the final Senate meeting of the semester.

During the meeting, the bill survived a motion to deny consideration because of its similarity to a proposal voted down by Senate on March 4.

The 22-21 vote failed to gain the necessary two-thirds of Senate to deny consideration. Three senators abstained from voting on the denial motion.

The bill, which is almost identical to the one rejected in March, would create a $1 per semester fee for full-time students and a 50 cents per semester fee for part-time students.

In addition to those fees, the bill would create a 10 cents per credit hour fee for up to six hours of enrollment during the summer session. Under the proposal, students taking over six hours during the summer would pay 60 cents.

Proceeds earned from the fee would pay for childships, grants made to needy families to defray the cost of tuition so their children may attend the co-op. The bill requires childships to be given only to children of K-State students.

Needy families would be determined based on formulas developed by the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitative Services.

If the bill gains approval, it would enable K-State students with children who met SRS criteria for need to afford the cost of the co-op.

Needy families who qualify under the guidelines would have a portion of the co-op's costs paid for by SRS. The childship would pay for the rest of the tuition.

"This is going to allow a significant number of student families to come into the co-op," said Nancy Bolsen, co-op director.

In other action, senators passed a resolution in a 28-16 vote condemning the University of Kansas' Student Senate for missing an annual inter-senate basketball game, which had been re-scheduled.

The resolution states that senate " ...condemn the KU Student Senate for its blatant disregard of its commitments and for its total lack of consideration in blowing off the scheduled basketball game this year."

Gunmen flee after standoff

LOS MOCHIS, Mexico — Seven gunmen who holed up in a bank after a foiled robbery in which five people were killed freed their 42 captives Thursday and were allowed to flee with three hostages.

Police said the gunmen released the three captives 15 minutes after they escaped.

"Thanks to you, the hostages are safe!" a policeman shouted to the hundreds of people who had gathered outside the bank as the 24-hour standoff was ending. The crowd had urged officials to end the crisis peacefully.

Trying to get close to the bank building or clambering atop two armored cars that were standing by, some shouted "Freedom, freedom!" in support of the gunmen.

Gov. Francisco Labastida Ochoa of Sinaloa state said the gunmen left in one of the two armored cars, taking two Red Cross workers along as hostages. Police later said there were three Red Cross hostages.

Labastida Ochoa told the Televisa network's afternoon news program the agreement allowed police to look for the gunmen later.

"We're not deceiving anyone," the governor said. "We simply reached an agreement in which we could safeguard lives." The 42 hostages were taken to a hospital in Red Cross ambulances.

American youth wins Bible Quiz

JERUSALEM — The two-hour battle neared its climax. Tension was palpable. Rhythmic chants from fans urged on the competitors, who wiped sweat from their brows as the interlocutor spoke like the voice of the Chronicler.

When it was over, the annual International Bible Quiz had its first American victor in 15 years. Jeremy Weider had won the World Series, the Super Bowl, the World Cup of Old Testament scholarship for Jewish teen-agers.

"I'm elated," said the 17-year-old from Monsey, N.Y. "I studied so hard for this. Two hours of Bible reading every day for seven months. But I never thought I'd win."

Weider, a religious Jew who attends Yeshiva University in New York, shared first place with Zehava Heder, an Israeli with an identical point total.

Contestants were given more than 20 questions involving intricate details of quotations from the Jewish Bible, which is the Old Testament of the Christian Bible.

Israel's 40th anniversary tense

JERUSALEM — Israel celebrated its 40th birthday Thursday but in the violence-ridden occupied territories it was called Firebomb Day, proclaimed by the PLO.

Military jets roared over Jerusalem and Israel honored veterans of the Independence war, who fought five Arab armies in 1948.

Soldiers were on alert in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel has occupied since the 1967 war, but Palestinians managed to throw a firebomb at a military patrol in Bethlehem.

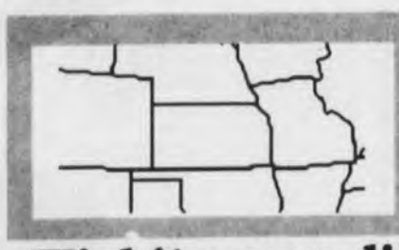
2 local men die in plane crash

RAPID CITY, S.D. — Two Kansas men died Thursday in the crash of a single-engine airplane near Box Elder, Pennington County authorities reported.

Pilot Everett J. Dennis, 64, and Kenneth E. Kraus, 56, both of Manhattan, were pronounced dead at the scene, authorities said. Only the two men were on board.

The plane, a Cessna 182, was en route from Broadus, Mont., to North Platte, Neb., Federal Aviation Administration officials said. It was not known why the men were flying from Montana to Nebraska.

Inspectors still were trying to determine the cause of the crash, the FAA said.



The crash was reported at 11:44 on Radar Hill, an abandoned missile site near Box Elder, east of Rapid City, an FAA official said.

Meese meets with Reagan

WASHINGTON — Embattled Attorney General Edwin Meese III was summoned to a private meeting with President Reagan at the White House on Wednesday shortly after Reagan met with two top Justice Department officials who resigned in dissatisfaction with Meese's continued tenure, a Justice Department source said Thursday night.

The source, who declined to be identified, said Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns and former Assistant Attorney General William Weld, who headed the department's criminal division, met at the White House with Reagan and Vice President George Bush and perhaps some White House staff members.

The details of that conversation could not be learned. Weld and Burns have not discussed publicly their reasons for turning in their resignations March 29.

Wichita man dies in fire

WICHITA — One man died and another was in critical condition Thursday following a flash fire at the Derby Refining Co. refinery.

Everett George, 42, of Wichita, died about seven hours after the accident, a St. Francis Regional Medical Center spokeswoman said. He had burns over 90 percent of his body.

Bill Mueller, who is in charge of the north Wichita plant, said the two were working on piping when flamable fluid escaped.

Charles Ross, 40, of Augusta, was in critical condition with burns over 80 percent of his body, the hospital spokeswoman said.

Flinthills Festival planned

K-State departments to be involved

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

Plans for a major entertainment and arts and crafts festival were announced Thursday evening by Manhattan officials as groundwork has been laid for the premiere of The Flinthills Festival this fall.

A group of approximately 75 people were on hand for the announcement at a reception at the Holiday Inn as City Commissioner Kent Glasscock described the event, which is being planned as an annual festival. The festival, which will feature major entertainment, history, folklore and food, is scheduled for Sept. 23-25.

The event will be in Manhattan's City Park and the festival board hopes to attract more than 40,000 people in the first year.

"I firmly believe that in the years to come we will look back on this premiere year of The Flinthills Festival as the kickoff of what may be one of the most significant steps in the advancement of the community and the region," said Glasscock, chairman of The Flinthills Festival board.

Areas that will be featured at the festival will be a juried art show, arts and crafts exhibits and sales, folklife, history and children's activities. The festival is the project of the City of Manhattan, K-State, the Manhattan Arts Council and the Manhattan/Ogden Unified School District 383.

Participation from K-State is expected to include the College of Architecture and Design, the speech department, food services and the Union Program Council. Architects from K-State are expected to help in the design and layout of the festival at City Park.

"Because of the very special talents and expertise available to us from this community, Kansas State University, the school district and the arts community, we believe we are in position to present an entertaining and learning event of outstanding quality that will be truly unique to Kansas," Glasscock said.

The entertainment portion of the festival will include live music from two country and western bands, three rock groups and a 1950s- and 60s-style band.

The arts and crafts section will feature 12 demonstrations and show tents with more than 250 artists and craftspersons showing and demonstrating their work.

The folklife and history aspect will focus on folklife traditions, crafting skills and displays and demonstrations from Kansas and Western history.

Children's activities are also planned for the younger crowd. This area will feature not only entertainment but also educational opportunities for the children.

"This is not going to be a carnival," Glasscock said. "It is a cultural and educational event that will be a lot of fun."

Alumni Association to sponsor 'K-State Day' at Worlds of Fun

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Worlds of Fun in Kansas City will turn into a World of Wildcats Sunday.

The KSU Alumni Association is sponsoring "K-State Day" at Worlds of Fun as part of a new recruitment plan, said Amy Button Renz of the Alumni Association.

Willie the Wildcat, the K-State cheerleaders, the pep band and 150 other K-State students will perform at Worlds of Fun all day to promote interest in the University.

The Alumni Association invited 5,000 prospective students from the Greater Kansas City area to attend, Renz said. The mailing list of students was taken from the registrar's office.

"We are hoping to attract prospective students from northeast Kansas. We also mailed out 11,000 flyers to alumni and their families in Wyandotte, Riley and Johnson counties promoting K-State Day," she said.

The Union Program Council teamed up with the Alumni Association to get current K-State students to attend. UPC put together a travel package for the event. Tickets, including transportation by chartered bus, cost $18, and tickets are $9.50 for students with their own transportation, said Mike Penner, UPC program director.

Students will save $8 off the regular admission price by getting their tickets in advance, Penner said.

Tickets are being sold in the Union Activities Center, the Union Recreation Center and in the Alumni Association Office. Penner said tickets are selling fast.

K-State's pep band will give visitors a Wildcat welcome with a concert in the Sunken Garden at 11:30 a.m. to kick off the day's events.

Lunch with K-State administrators, including Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, and former K-State athletes starts at noon in the Festhaus. The K-State Singers will perform at 1 p.m. The Men's Glee Club will sing in the Moulin Rouge at 2:15 p.m., followed by the K-State Players, who will perform selected scenes from "Romeo and Juliet."

The admissions office will have an information booth at the Festhaus open to all visitors until 6 p.m.

Forcing visitors to pay for parking is absurd

Judging by present and past complaints, it is doubtful the parking situation at this campus will ever stop being a problem. The solution to the latest woes, officials say, is more money.

Among the remedies being proposed is to increase parking fees and fines. However, there is another proposal that disregards all facets of good sense.

The proposal, which is being submitted to the Kansas Board of Regents, would require all visitors attending a conference or seminar to pay a $1 parking fee for each person attending, multiplied by the number of weeks the function will last. The $1 would be charged regardless if the people were staying several hours or seven days.

A good illustration of this would be if two busloads of visitors — say 90 people — came here for a conference for two weeks. They will be charged $180 simply to park.

What a plan of action to make money for parking! This should give us a great reputation among our many visitors.

Continuing Education would be most affected by this because it sponsors a number of seminars and conferences. Since it could not absorb the cost of the parking fee, it would be passed on to the people attending the function.

According to an official on the Council of Traffic, Parking and Police Operations, Continuing Education now advertises free parking in its brochures. It then receives, free of charge, visitor parking permits from K-State Police.

An official with Continuing Education said if the University is going to charge for parking, the least it can do is provide guaranteed parking. The way the proposal is now, those same two buses would pay $180 for the opportunity to park on campus.

Furthermore, if the University is indeed going to guarantee parking, where will the spaces be? That is a most definite concern that hasn't been addressed.

But that is the least important of the many problems associated with charging visitors to park. The greatest is the very poor University image this will present.

These people have been invited to campus and to charge such an exorbitant fee is absurd.

But maybe the officials who suggested such a proposal are on to something here. Perhaps the fee would, in a roundabout kind of way, reduce our parking headaches.

After all, we could at least count on everybody who ever visited K-State to never return.

Safe cigarettes against manufacturers' logic

One of the more hotly debated topics in the country today is whether or not smoking is safe. And one of the reasons this conflict rages on is because if it were ever proven that smoking is dangerous and the tobacco companies had previous knowledge of this, they could be held liable for an untold amount of damages by smokers.

As one might expect, the tobacco companies contend that a link between smoking and harmful effects has never been absolutely proven. And to date no libel suits against the tobacco companies have been won.

Yet one still wonders about the safety of smoking, especially when reading any of the large and varied warnings on all cigarette packages and ads. Surely the U.S. Surgeon General didn't call for such warnings on just a whim.

And now to stir things up a little more is the "smokeless" cigarette and a memo about the new cigarette from a tobacco industry law firm. The cigarette uses a heat-producing element to pass steam through tobacco and a flavor packet and produces very little smoke — while still providing the smoker with nicotine and carbon monoxide.

The memo raises the concern that if the new style cigarette is billed as safer than the old style, it will imply that the old style is unsafe and open the tobacco industry to possible legal risks. The Los Angeles Times reported that the memo says: "The industry position has been that there is no alternative design for a cigarette as we know them and therefore a cigarette was not, and is not, defectively designed. Unfortunately, the Reynolds announcement (dealing with smokeless cigarettes) ... seriously undercuts this component of industry's defense."

So in effect, the memo is saying that the industry should not introduce a safer cigarette because that would imply that the old ones are unsafe — which could be a legal disaster for tobacco companies.

This is a special pleasure for the non-smoker to see the tobacco industry caught between keeping its old style of cigarette — which people are finally beginning to stop smoking — or introducing a new style that could boost their sales — but could destroy the industry with legal battles.

Looking at the track record of tobacco companies, it is very unlikely they will risk destroying their industry to make smoking any safer.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR pertaining to matters of public interest are encouraged. Letters should be kept as brief as possible. All letters are subject to editing on the basis of space and style considerations.

Events in India demonstrate uncertainty of human rights

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

The hot issue on the editorial page the last 10 days has been Student Senate's decision to allocate funds totaling $529.31 to the K-State chapter of Amnesty International and the Coalition for Human Rights. This highly debated decision may or may not be proper.

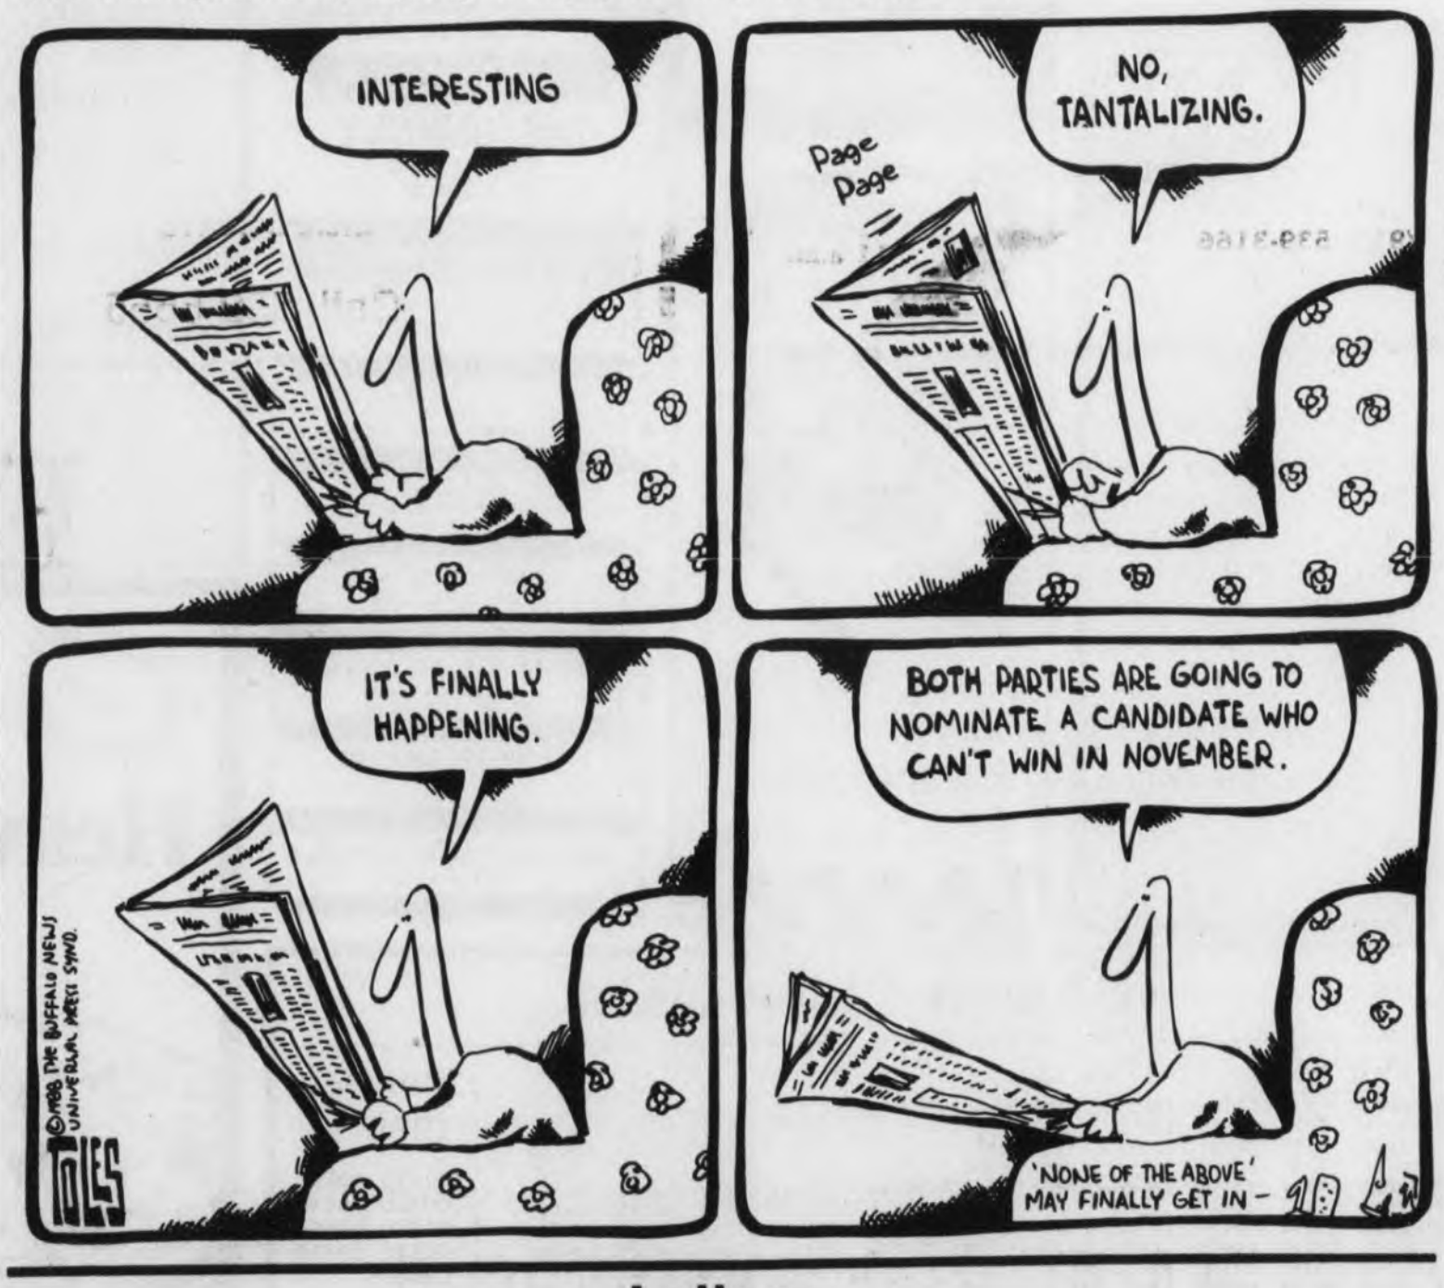
However, if you are concerned about human rights (and if you are not, you should be), then you should put aside your political affiliations and religious convictions and be thinking and participating actively with individuals and groups that have a vision to protect human rights. Whether you are a communist, socialist, capitalist, Christian, Catholic, Jew or whatever, you are a human being first.

The human rights issue I wish to highlight is the one concerning India, which is purportedly the largest democracy in the world.

In 1978, the Indian Parliament amended the Indian constitution for the 44th time. It declared that the fundamental right to "life and liberty" guaranteed by Article 21 of the Indian constitution could not be suspended in any state of the country at anytime. Ten years later, the constitution's 59th amendment has been passed. It allows the Indian government to suspend the fundamental right to life and liberty in the state of Punjab (in northwest India) for a period of two years. This step has been taken to restore law and order in the terrorist-infested state of Punjab.

According to the attorney general of India, this implies, for instance, that if a man was wrongly identified as a security risk and was forcibly removed from his home and imprisoned, he would not have a right to recourse in a court of law. He also asserted that the suspension of Article 21 empowers a police officer of the requisite seniority to pick up any person and shoot him without trial. In short, it is a "license to kill" and has thus potentially created numerous Indian James Bond 007s.

Under the legislation, in effect, a person can be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of a co-accused. Moreover, trials (if any) are not to take place in the ordinary criminal courts in public view, but before specially designated courts in camera and adopting different procedures. If a trial cannot be conducted, preventative detention in judicial custody is permissible up to a year; confinement before trial is the rule, and bail is a rare exception. To add insult to injury, the legislation also curbs the freedom of press in the so-called best interests of the country.



To any right thinking person, it is obvious that the legislation is tyrannical. It leaves numerous loopholes for abuse of human rights. The principle of protection of human rights is derived from the concept of man as a person and his relationship with society. Hence, human rights should not depend upon the will of a state.

For those readers who have not realized in plain terms the full impact of this amendment on the people of the largest democracy (constituting 16 percent of the world's population), it states that arbitrary powers can be exercised by governmental agencies including the police, with the result that any person can be arrested, tortured and put to death without any justification and without any possibility of legal redress.

On Wednesday, concerned students from India put up a table in the Union proclaiming "Right to Life and Liberty is Suspendable? Avoid Genocide Now," and "Guilty Unless Proven Innocent — Believe It or Not." This was to create a general awareness of this problem to the citizens of the world. Also, if someone thought the issue was important to humans in general, they were urged to sign a letter addressed to India's prime minister Rajiv Gandhi opposing this inhumane legislation. The response of American citizens and international students was encouraging. In five hours, about 70 people signed these kind of letters.

Those who missed out on supporting this worthy cause may still contact Rattan Nath, graduate school senator, at 539-6782. He would be glad to fill you in with more details.

It is always time to raise your voice for human rights. Remember what Martin Neimoller, a German civil liberties activist, once said: "In Germany, the Nazis came first for the communists, and I didn't speak up because I was not a communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I was not a Jew. Then they came for trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I was not a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics and I was a Protestant and so I didn't speak up. Then they came for me, and by that time there was no one left to speak for anyone."

Letters

Quotes vs. facts

Editor,

In your front-page article on April 6, you represented a talk given by Mr. Stamih Staiteih (Palestinian) on "the Palestinians and the West Bank," which actually dealt mainly with Israel. While Mr. Staiteih expressed known Arab and PLO views on Israel, may I correct only three of the most notorious falsities in his presentation.

■ One, quote: "If you are not Jewish, you are not welcome to stay in Palestine." Fact: Nearly half a million Arab Israeli citizens live in Israel (Palestine?) with full rights, including voting rights. They are Israeli citizens by their own free choice.

■ Two, quote: "Israel is the only country in the world with no official borders." Fact: Israel's borders were painstakingly defined by the League of Nations before 1948, when part of Palestine (excluding what is today Jordan) was divided between what was intended to be a Jewish state and an Arab state. This division was voted upon by the general assembly of the United Nations in 1948 and was recognized by most countries, including the United States and the Soviet Union.

This division was totally rejected by the Palestinian Arab population and the Arab neighboring countries, seven of which declared war on and invaded the newly born Jewish state. The historical events since then comprise a continuous attempt by the Arabs to eliminate the Jewish state and their constant aggravation in failing to do so.

■ Three, quote: "Palestinians are not allowed to have gardens" and "not allowed to have fruit trees." Fact: Israeli extension of modern agricultural practices and better seed to the Arab farmers in the West Bank (in which I was personally involved) resulted in a green revolution. West Bank Arab farmers progressed from biblical-time agriculture to modern farming in 20 years, now exporting produce and enjoying a high standard of living.

Only five months ago I personally delivered a whole day seminar on wheat and wheat growing to West Bank farmers and local extension specialists at Ramallah. While the above quote is originally designed to defamate Israel, it at the same time is an insult to these progressive farmers.

Poor coverage

Editor,

It seems strange that the Collegian, a paper created to report on and inform people about campus news and events, so often overlooks those stories. One case in point is the Collegian's coverage of the current K-State Players production of "Romeo and Juliet." This show received minimal attention from the Collegian staff the day following the opening performance. Instead, the entire April 15 entertainment page focused on The Ranch Saloon, a local tavern in no way affiliated with K-State.

Timeliness is a key element of journalism. Without it, a story is not newsworthy. The Ranch Saloon will continue to operate in the future, but the production of "Romeo and Juliet" will close Saturday. Many students need to plan time in their busy schedules to attend events; therefore it is vital that information reaches them before the events.

If covered today, the story will have lost nearly all of its timeliness, especially since the last Friday and Saturday performances have been sold out since April 15. Little informative value will remain in the story.

Granted, the Collegian is not an advertising agency. It is, however, the paper's responsibility to inform its readers of newsworthy events as they happen.

'Tough' topics to be discussed

Women's studies conference begins today

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

This weekend's Midwest Women's Studies Association Regional Conference may be a little different from most conferences, but it will still deal with tough, emotional topics.

Sandra Coyner, director of women's studies, said the MWSA conference can be compared to similar scholarly meetings held at K-State, but women's studies conferences are "more democratic and less hierarchical."

Representatives from Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Iowa will participate in the two-day conference today and Saturday in the Union.

"The difference is that we try to make it accessible to a lot of people. We try to reach out to students and people outside the University because the MWSA is devoted to promoting women's studies in all educational settings and at all levels," Coyner said.

Barbara Ehrenreich, a noted feminist author and the co-chair of the Democratic Socialists of America, will officially open the conference with her lecture at 11 a.m. today in Forum Hall.

The first of the 35 conference sessions will begin at 9:30 a.m. with a discussion on frontier literature in the Sunflower Room.

Sessions will be conducted throughout the day today and Saturday. The topics will range from women and the military to American female playwrights. However, the majority of the sessions will focus on current research in the women's studies field, Coyner said.

A workshop on the problems of racism will be conducted at 1:30 p.m. today in Kedzie 208 by representatives of Women Against Racism, an Iowa-based group of students, faculty and community members from Iowa City. The workshop will be repeated Saturday at 1:30 p.m. in Union 212.

A picnic has been scheduled to benefit the Manhattan Alliance on Central America at 6 p.m. today at Tuttle Creek Park.

The Split Britches Theater Company of New York, a feminist acting troupe, will present a signature play on the struggles of three women living during the Depression of the 1930s at 4 p.m. today in Nichols Auditorium.

The actors will give another performance, "Upwardly Mobile Home," at 3 p.m. Saturday in Nichols. This play features three struggling actors who camp out under the Brooklyn Bridge and consider themselves victims of "New Age" thinking.

A comedy, "My Blue Heaven," will be presented in the Purple Masque Theatre at 9:30 a.m. Saturday. The play focuses on a lesbian couple's encounter with a religious publishing firm.

Barbara Baker, local playwright, will have her play, "Freedom to Love," performed at 11 a.m. Saturday in the Purple Masque. The play explores the issue of interracial relationships.

Also at 11 a.m. Saturday, Cornelia Flora, professor of social anthropology and social work, will lead a discussion on women in Central America with representatives from Chile and the Dominican Republic in the Sunflower Room.

The conference will conclude with a dance at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Ecumenical Christian Ministries Building at 1021 Denison Ave.

Although entertainment is part of the program, the sessions will deal with serious and often emotional issues and counselors will be available for participants, Coyner said.

"Women's studies conferences talk about subjects that can be very personal, and sometimes people are reminded of past, unpleasant experiences and have a very strong, emotional reaction," she said.

Registration will continue today outside the main ballroom on the second floor of the Union. The conference is open to the public, and Coyner said that people who are not in the women's studies discipline can also benefit from the sessions.

"We don't like jargon, so we don't like people talking in language only experts can understand," she said. "You can learn a lot about women's studies and this (information) is the newest stuff, on the cutting edge."

Wildcat Appreciation Day draws 700 K-State fans

Collegian/Jennifer Quist

President Wefald presents T-shirts to the K-State men's basketball team Thursday at a pep rally sponsored by the Student Governing Association, commemorating the team's "Final Eight" appearance.

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

It was an old-fashioned pep rally Thursday afternoon complete with cheerleaders, a band, balloons, the school colors, alumni from more than 50 years ago and, of course, the star.

The star of Wildcat Appreciation Day was the K-State men's basketball team. The Wildcats finished No. 8 in the USA Today/CNN final college basketball ratings and made it to the final eight of the NCAA tournament before losing to the eventual national champion, the University of Kansas, in the Midwest regional final.

In addition, the cheerleading squad, the debate team and Mitch Holthus, "Voice of the Wildcats," were honored.

The cheerleading squad was one of 20 college squads selected to compete at the national cheerleading championships at San Diego's Sea World in January. The debate team finished its season ranked No. 5 in the nation and sent four teams to the national competition.

Holthus has been the Wildcats' sportscaster for five years and was named Kansas Sportscaster of the Year for 1987.

The rally, which was sponsored by the Student Governing Association, began with the pep band playing and the cheerleaders performing to the "Wabash Cannonball." The cheerleaders passed out pictures of the basketball team to the approximately 700 fans at the rally.

Then the team, along with President Jon Wefald, took the stage, which was set up east of the Union.

"Are you proud of this Kansas State University basketball team?" Wefald asked and was greated by a roar of applause.

"Not enough of the alumni and students and fans realize that this team is one of the finest in school history, and one of the finest in America," Wefald said.

Wefald then held up a sign showing K-State with a No. 8 ranking.

Troy Lubbers, student body president, thanked the crowd for "taking the unique opportunity to show off your purple pride and to show how K-State programs succeed in a class way."

Doug Folk, Student Senate chairman, presented commendations to the debate team, the cheerleading squad and Holthus. Folk also presented the basketball team with a commendation.

"K-State is proud to have you as ambassadors," Folk said of the basketball team.

While accepting the commendation, Coach Lon Kruger said, "This is very special and today has been a lot of fun. We represented a lot of good people — the best people anywhere. Our seniors have set a standard of excellence that will be hard to live up to."

Ron Meyer, senior center, presented Wefald with an award from the team commemorating the season. Kruger gave Wefald a framed version of the final rankings.

"It was a really good turnout," said Heather Moss, sophomore in industrial psychology. "It was really neat that alums are getting to see this, too. I'm proud that we have one of the best basketball teams in the nation."

"I'm glad they talked about some of the lesser-known activities that are doing well — like debate," said Greg Morgan, junior in secondary education. "I was especially pleased to see them honor the seniors on the basketball team."

KU chancellor denied New York post

By The Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — The State University of New York's Board of Trustees will appoint Buffalo State President D. Bruce Johnstone as the new chancellor of the SUNY system, university sources said Thursday.

Johnstone was chosen over University of Kansas Chancellor Gene Budig for the New York job.

SUNY is the nation's largest public university system, with 64 campuses and 370,000 students.

University sources, who insisted on anonymity, said the decision to appoint Johnstone was made at a closed-door meeting of the trustees on April 8.

FIGHTING to entertain

Clingidy, clang clang, clingclang, BANG!

And down goes Tybalt. Or at least that is what happens now in the play "Romeo and Juliet," thanks to J.R. Beardsley, choreographer of the fight scenes for the K-State Player's production.

The play continues at 8 p.m. today and Saturday in Nichols Theater.

Beardsley provides an unknown but vital skill to theatrical productions throughout the United States.

"Most people don't know what it is that I do," Beardsley said. "They don't know how to do it, and they don't understand it at any level."

What Beardsley does is provide his talent, knowledge and love of the sword to productions involving fight scenes using swords, pikes, battle axes or other implements of medieval destruction. However, his company, Touche Unlimited, has also recreated the 1946 breakout at Alcatraz Prison and more modern scenes as well.

"I like to give (my clients) as much for their money out of me as possible without killing me. I mean just choreographing ('Romeo and Juliet') in a week takes a couple of years off your life."
—J.R. Beardsley, fight master

It was interest in the sword, though, that brought him to form Touche Unlimited about a year ago in San Francisco with his partner Richard Lane, a fellow fight master and dance instructor.

"We call ourselves sword entrepreneurs," Beardsley said. "We really feel like theater is making a cycle right now and so is the history of the sword."

Which is fine with Beardsley, who said he would like to see more violence and sex in stage productions.

"I think the American public, because of film, because of television, demands more realism," he said. "It must be real first and the reactions can take you to whether it is comedy or something else."

In theater today, producers, directors, actors and actresses are not going far enough with scenes Beardsley said should be realistic.

"One of the reasons I hate theater is when you get to a moment that is supposed to be moving or scary or sensual and the audience laughs — something's wrong," he said. "These people are not nailing it. ... These people have got to nail these moments, because, if you do them right, you're going to have an emotional, physical impact on (the audience)."

This is what Beardsley said he strives for when he creates scenes for productions such as "Romeo and Juliet."

He said he does this by producing small scenes of the action, and then framing it so the audience sees the action of a specific moment. With that moment, the audience will see a reaction and then the play's action will move on.

For example, in a fight scene there might be several actors fighting, with each reaching a certain point, such as one getting hit in the head. Audience members will notice this action, but then the rest of the fighters will carry the spectators' attention back to the scene as a whole.

However, getting the to such a point takes a tremendous amount of effort on the part of Beardsley and the Players.

Beardsley was only able to work with the actors and actresses of "Romeo and Juliet" for a total of two weeks — one week in March and then the week before opening night, April 14.

"It's my job to go and look at the ability of the people on stage and make them look as good as they possibly can," Beardsley said. "I have to look at their abilities and give them enough to make them look good, but (I) don't ask for the impossible."

"I like to give (my clients) as much for their money out of me as possible without killing me," he said. "I mean just choreographing ('Romeo and Juliet') in a week takes a couple of years off your life."

Most of what is involved is making sure the players can do the actions safely.

"There's so much danger that could possibly happen," Beardsley said. "My job first of all is to make things safe, and then I need to try and make it so it is as realistic as possible."

Safety is stressed even with the first contracts Touche Unlimited sends out to clients, he said. Included in them are two pages of safety instructions and recommendations for time allotment for work to be done after Beardsley, or one of the other instructors, has left.

As the scenes are blocked out, Beardsley studies the traffic patterns occurring on stage, and watches the actions of the players to make sure they are moving exactly like he has taught them. Also, the stage manager makes a written record of each move the actors make during the fight scenes so they will have a reference when they are practicing after Beardsley has left.

"They need to have the third eye to make sure they are going in slow motion (during rehearsal) and make sure the cuts are safe so they don't hurt anyone," Beardsley said.

It is very easy for people to get out of control when they start the fight scenes and that is something that could be very dangerous, he said.

"If I'm supposed to look like I'm hitting you in the face, the first thing I think is that I've got to do it," Beardsley said. "You don't do any moves any faster than you can accomplish them perfectly every time."

He said he expects to see the performers moving in very fluid, flowing motions.

"There's a real difference between timing and speed," Beardsley said. "So if (the players) are working on (the fight directions), they can act and think and move at the same time."

So no matter how fast that motion is, when the swords clash, the daggers flash and the fight ends, hopefully the audience will believe Tybalt has fallen.

"Those are the things that help make the magic," Beardsley said. "That's what stage combat is like every time you do it — it's magic.

"When you get off the stage you can't tell someone what it's like. But if you have done it, you have got a friend for life."

"Sword entrepreneur" J.R. Beardsley choreographed the scenes for the the K-State Players' production of "Romeo and Juliet." Beardsley shares his sword skills with productions throughout the United States.

Beardsley carefully watches Tybalt, played by Mark Hetrick, and Mercutio, played by Jeff Kaufman, as they run through a fight scene during a rehearsal of the play.

Along with sword scenes, Beardsley choreographs scenes using other weapons and common utensils such as axes and bottles. Beardsley also demonstrates and tries to instill in the actors the proper mood and feeling of the scene he is directing.

Jardine residents to sponsor carnival

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

Residents of the Jardine Terrace Apartments are having a carnival Saturday to give students a chance to unwind before the semester's final push.

The carnival, put on for Jardine residents by the mayor's council, features games, contests, a flea market and an international potluck lunch. The carnival is free and strictly for the residents of the complex, but the flea market, which will be from 7:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., is open to the public.

"We try to have the carnival far enough before finals," said Carrie Garcia, executive mayor of the Jardine council. "It kind of gives everyone some refreshment and makes finals a little easier to handle."

A main attraction will be a free door prize drawing. Prizes will be awarded to three people. The first winner will receive $100 off May rent, while the second and third winners will receive discounts of $75 and $50, respectively. The winners must be adults and be present at the time of the drawing.

Some of the games and contests will include a pickle-eating contest, dunk tank, egg toss and tricycle races for the adults. Many prizes for the contests have been donated by local merchants. The carnival is funded by Jardine's mayor's council through the University's budget allotment to the housing department at the beginning of the year.

"The great thing about the carnival is that everything is free," Garcia said. "It is really a lot of fun."

There will be special appearances by Willie the Wildcat, McGruff the crime-fighting dog, the KQLA Q-Roo and a robot from the Manhattan Fire Department. The international potluck lunch is an event that Garcia says can be intriguing.

"The international lunch is interesting because you don't always know what you are eating," she said.

The festivities will take place in Jardine Park, which is located in the middle of the housing complex. The carnival is scheduled to run from 1:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Event will feature African culture

By Jeff Stead
Collegian Reporter

Traditional African music, poetry, dances and food will be on the agenda Saturday night at the African Student Union-sponsored African Night, which will be from 6 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. at Lee Elementary School.

The annual fete is expected to attract about 200 participants, said Wilfred Singogo, graduate student in agricultural mechanization and president of the African Student Union.

The purpose of the function is to bring people from Africa together and to inform the Manhattan community about Africa and its traditions, Singogo said.

"It is a great opportunity for the Manhattan community to come and to help them understand the African society and each other," he said. "The students are happy to be here at K-State and we want to share this with the people of Manhattan."

Featured at the event will be African dancers and drummers performing traditional African music and a fashion show, he said.

Members of the African Student Union representing countries from all across Africa will be in costumes from their respective countries. They will explain their costume and its use in the society, he said.

African cuisine will be prepared by members of the African Student Union, and will be made from grains such as rice and cornmeal as well as meat, he said.

"There will not be any African delicacies like ... caterpillars," he said.

Last year's African Night was a huge success, attended by more than 300 people, and some people wishing to attend had to be turned away, he said.

Singogo said that compared to last year's event, there will be more dancing and drumming this year.

Everyone is welcome to African Night, he said. The cost is $5 in advance and $6 at the door. Tickets are on sale in the Union.

Membership in the African Student Union is open primarily to Africans, but any interested students or faculty members can become associate members, he said. There are currently about 50 active members of the African Student Union.

The African Student Union performs the "Into Africa" show on KSDB radio.

Wildcat track teams head to Kansas Relays

By Tom Perrin
Sports Writer

K-State will be looking to add more names to its list of qualifiers for the NCAA track and field meet in this weekend's Kansas Relays at Lawrence.

Coach John Capriotti listed Jacque Struckhoff and Alysun Deckert in the 5,000 meters, Anne Stadler in the 3,000 meters and Ron Stahl in the 5,000 as those among the Wildcats' top hopes for the meet.

"I think they all have a chance to qualify this weekend," Capriotti said. "We'd like to get it out of the way so we can finish the season and they can relax."

The meet, which began Wednesday with the men's decathalon and women's heptathalon, will take place today and Saturday, running from 8 a.m. until around 5 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

Other top K-State entrants include Felicia Curry in the women's triple jump, Kim Kilpatrick in the women's 100 hurdles, Jeff Reynolds in the men's 400 and Doug Brown in the javelin.

All-American Kenny Harrison may compete in a relay, but won't be long jumping or triple jumping. Harrison's spring schedule in the two events is limited because he is working to peak at the Olympic Trials set for July 15-23 in Indianapolis.

Earlier in the week, Capriotti had been disappointed in KU officials about some overly restrictive entry procedures, but was much happier after receiving some concessions Wednesday.

"They know we do well at the meet. We bring a lot of people to that meet — both fans and athletes. (Meet officials) are cooperating a lot better this year," he said. "The Kansas Relays is a big meet for us even though we don't host it. We always use it as one of our top meets."

Once one of the nation's top outdoor track meets, the Kansas Relays hasn't attracted nearly as strong a field in recent years for various reasons. Among the reasons is a lack of appearance money to pay for world-class performers.

"When it was a great meet 10 years ago, they were getting a lot of the Texas teams to come, but they stopped because of a travel rule," Capriotti said. "Then they got hit with a lot of bad weather. For six or seven years in a row, it was just bad weather and that really hurt the meet."

Traditionally, the meet's strongest event has been the men's invitational pole vault, which has attracted some of the top vaulters in the United States including American record holder Joe Dial, formerly of Oklahoma State. The pole vault is one event where the typically strong Memorial Stadium winds can play to a competitor's advantage.

Capriotti mentioned Arkansas, Iowa State, Illinois State and Nebraska as having particularly strong men's teams. Iowa State and Nebraska are the heading teams in the women's field, he added.

Wildcat golfer Chris Gomez is making a name for himself, as well as helping the team to a sucessful season during his first and last year at K-State. Gomez, who has done especially well in his last three outings, hopes to play on the PGA tour.

Topeka native, Texas transfer adds to K-State golf program

By Jim Vader
Collegian Reporter

Chris Gomez caught the attention of K-State sports followers two weeks ago with his first place finish in the Nebraska Cup Golf Tournament.

He directed the limelight on himself again last Friday in Junction City when he carded the best round of the day, a two-under par 70, at K-State's triangular with Emporia State and Marymount.

And this week, Gomez tied with teammate Jeff Sedorcek for second place in medalist competition in the nine-team Wichita State Invitational, shooting rounds of 77, 72 and a three-under par 69 in the three-day competition.

The Topeka native is making quite a name for himself while contributing to the success of K-State's men's golf team in his first and last season at the University.

"Chris adds a lot of maturity and experience to the team," Coach Rob Sedorcek said. "He has played down in Texas and can relay to our players what to expect from opposing teams."

Gomez, a senior in marketing, has seen his share of golf teams and universities. He played at Midland Junior College in Texas for two years, and then transferred to Houston Baptist University to play for one year. This year, he came to K-State to play his final collegiate season.

He has not regretted his decision to become a Wildcat, but he has had some adjustments to make, especially in regard to K-State's reduced playing season.

"I was used to playing year round," Gomez said. "I thought I could take a winter off and jump right back into it, but it has been difficult for me. It has only been nice here for two weeks."

Gomez attributes his success to the strength of his game — power.

"I think the strength of my game is the long ball. Ever since I was a little kid, I've always hit the ball further than most people," Gomez said.

This year, Gomez has been working very hard on his short game, because that is where the majority of strokes are scored.

"I've been trying to emphasize my chipping in practice," Gomez said.

Gomez said K-State's team is young but has high ambitions.

"We are a young team with younger players who seem hungry to make a name for K-State and themselves," he said.

Coach Sedorcek said the team is looking to place fifth or sixth in the Big Eight Conference tournament this year.

"We are playing much harder competition and harder courses this year. We are definitely moving up out of the cellar," he said.

Gomez also has high aspirations for himself as a player after exhausting his eligibility at K-State. He eventually hopes to play on the PGA tour.

"I've got a pro back in Topeka who is helping me," he said. "(Going pro) depends on how much I improve toward being that caliber of a player."

Tigers next prey for baseball team

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

K-State's baseball team is looking to extend its five-game winning streak tonight at 7 p.m. in Big Eight Conference action with Missouri at Frank Myers Field.

The 'Cats, 26-13 and 5-7 in the Big Eight, will also be trying to move into the number four spot in the conference currently occupied by the Tigers, 30-11 and 6-6.

After sweeping Kansas last weekend and slipping by Creighton, 13-11 Tuesday night, K-State graduate assistant coach Brian McCarthy said the 'Cats have the momentum to sweep Missouri.

"We're looking to sweep Missouri. Although they are one game ahead of us (in the Big Eight Conference standings), they're one game down, the way we look at it," McCarthy said.

"Out of the teams we have played mutually, we're one game up on them," McCarthy said. "They haven't played Oklahoma yet. We played Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and Kansas. They've played Oklahoma State, Kansas and Nebraska, and only won three out of four from Kansas. We control our own destiny."

The Tigers, however, won't be pushovers. During the 1987 spring season, the Missouri posted a 3-1 record against the 'Cats and edged them out of the tournament with their fourth-place finish in the conference.

"We're not a good enough team to give less than our best effort or have less than our full concentration or be looking ahead," Missouri coach Gene McArtor said. "We don't have that kind of ability, so we're going to have to focus on whatever game is at hand and try to do the best job we can."

Mizzou is coming off an extra-inning win over Southwest Missouri State Wednesday night. Tiger Gary Barth hit a home run in the bottom of the 11th inning to give his club the victory.

K-State will also be trying to equal and better the total number of wins it posted last year this weekend. The Wildcats are only two wins away from that mark. Wins this weekend would also increase the 'Cats' chances of finishing as one of the top four teams in the Big Eight, thus earning a trip to the conference tournament May 18-22 in Oklahoma City, Okla.

"It's a crucial weekend for us and we're starting to turn things up a notch, so I think some things will really start to gel," McCarthy said.

"We are doing a good job swinging the bats and we need to improve defensively, but we're looking to put it all together this weekend."

Friday's game is the first of a four-game series with the Tigers. Two seven-inning games will be played Saturday starting at 5 p.m. The series will conclude Sunday with a nine-inning contest at 12:30 p.m.

Notes ... Missouri shortstop Dave Silvestri leads the Big Eight in hitting with an average of .454 through all games. In conference games, Silvestri ranks sixth with a .372 average ... Pitching-wise, Tiger Steve Powers is third in the conference with a 2.51 earned run average .

Basketball returns to Tulane; Royals' co-owner gives money

By The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Tulane University announced Thursday that it would reinstitute men's basketball and hopes to resume play in the 1990-1991 season.

The university abolished the program three years ago because of a point-shaving scandal.

The Tulane Board of Administrators approved the recommendation of President Eamon Kelly and the University Senate, a group of students, faculty and alumni who recommended that basketball be resumed.

The board also authorized a $25 million fund-raising campaign for intercollegiate athletics which it said would ensure a solid foundation for a strong Division I athletic program.

Avron B. Fogelman, co-owner of the Kansas City Royals and a graduate of Tulane, was present for the announcement and said he has contributed $1 million to the university as a result of the decision to restore the men's basketball program.

Fogelman said the gift was earmarked for programs designed to prevent problems such as those that led to the discontinuation of the program.

"I asked that my gift be used to help Tulane's basketball players in the areas of counseling, tutoring, and adjusting to pressures facing today's student-athlete," Fogelman said.

Legitimate prospects subject to question

Sunday's draftees under scrutiny

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Leigh Steinberg, who represents some of the NFL's top players, is taking it easy this year, although he still has two players who will probably be picked in the top 15 in Sunday's draft.

"I consider Brian Boitano my prime first-rounder," he says.

If you listen to some scouts, Boitano, a Steinberg client who is headed for a professional ice skating career, might be a better NFL prospect than some of the football players out there.

In fact, there's rarely been so much moaning and groaning as there has been about this year's NFL draft, which will take place Sunday beginning at noon, EDT.

Some player personnel people consider it the worst draft of the decade and perhaps the worst ever. Some claim there are no more than 12 to 15 actual first-rounders available and one team gives only 112 players "make it" grades, less than half the 250 rookies who normally make NFL teams in a normal year.

Perhaps.

Linebacker Aundray Bruce of Auburn, who has already signed with the Atlanta Falcons, isn't considered as good a prospect as the top picks of the last three drafts — Bruce Smith, Bo Jackson and Vinny Testaverde.

And even the top seven or eight players are considered flawed in some fashion.

For example, there are worries about Heisman Trophy winner Tim Brown's hands; Craig "Ironhead" Heyward's weight; a high school neck injury suffered by Florida safety Bennie Blades; how quickly Nebraska defensive end Neil Smith will learn.

But Karl Mecklenburg, Deron Cherry, Mark Clayton, Richard Dent, Joe Jacoby, Jim Burt and several dozen other Pro Bowl-caliber players wouldn't be playing in the NFL if pre-draft ratings always stood up.

Baltimore sets record with 15th loss

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Baltimore continued to struggle on baseball's skid row Thursday as the Milwaukee Brewers scored six runs in the third inning and sent the Orioles to a major league-record 15th straight season-opening loss with a 7-1 victory.

Bill Schroeder's two-run homer capped the six-run Milwaukee third off Baltimore loser Scott McGregor, who lasted just 2 2-3 innings, as the Orioles' added another loss to their improbable beginning.

The Orioles broke the major league record with their 14th straight loss Wednesday night and continued the streak as their starting pitching failed once again. The previous mark of 13 losses to start a season was set by the 1904 Washington Senator and 1920 Detroit Tigers.

Baltimore starters Mark Thurmond, Mike Boddicker and McGregor lasted a combined nine innings in the three games and gave up 18 hits and 18 runs to the Brewers, who have won five straight after ending a seven-game losing streak.

Milwaukee right-hander Chris Bosio, 3-1, stopped the Orioles on eight hits in his third complete game as the Brewers beat the Orioles for the fifth time this season. The Orioles did not score until the eighth when, with one out, Terry Kennedy doubled and scored one out later on a single by Rene Gonzalez.

Baltimore, which entered the game with a .201 team batting average, scored 11 runs in the first two games of the series but now has only 29 in its 15 losses.

Milwaukee has now beaten the Orioles in 20 of the teams' last 23 meetings, including 10 straight at County Stadium.

Netters wrap up season against Nebraska, ISU

By The Collegian Staff

Road matches have taken their toll on the K-State women's tennis squad this season and the team is glad to be playing at home again.

K-State, 7-8 overall and 1-4 in Big Eight Conference matches, hosts the University of Nebraska at 1 p.m. this Saturday and then concludes regular season play against Iowa State University at noon on Sunday. The matches will be played at the tennis courts at the L. P. Washburn Recreational Area.

After starting the Big Eight season with a win against the University of Missouri at home nearly three weeks ago, the Wildcats have lost four consecutive Big Eight matches to Kansas, Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and the University of Colorado.

K-State coach Steve Bietau said the traveling played a factor in the losses, but that the teams they played were also good.

"Travel certainly is a factor," Bietau said. "It's nice to be rested and to have been able to get a full week of practice in without having to travel. I think it also has to do with the teams we have played."

Good things have developed from the losses, though, Bietau said.

"The effort has been there throughout those losses," he said. "We've played pretty hard and if we continue to play like that, we have a good chance for success this weekend. Our people need to play well to accomplish the goals we set for the conference."

As nice as it would be to chalk up two wins this weekend, Bietau knows the team will have to play well to win.

"Both Iowa State and Nebraska got points off Colorado," he said. "It will be a good challenge playing against them.

"Nebraska is very strong at the top and somewhat weaker at the bottom. We lost 5-4 to them in a close match in the fall. Their No. 1 and No. 2 doubles are pretty good. Iowa State has been doing well this year also," he added.

Theater group explores feminist issues

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

A three-woman experimental theater group that focuses on feminist issues will take to the stage this weekend in Nichols Theatre as part of the Midwest Women's Studies Association Regional Conference.

The Split Britches Theater Company was founded in 1980 and has toured Europe and much of the United States, but this showing marks one of the group's first trips to the Midwest.

Kate Anderson, associate professor of speech, described the members of the group as "dynamic performers."

"They are the most exciting thing that is happening in women's theater today," she said. Anderson believes the performance will appeal to all kinds of audiences.

"The pieces are very fun, interesting and they involve music," she said.

Lois Weaver, one of the founders of Split Britches, said she believes women's theater is important.

"Our scripts tell stories about women's images and histories that have been forgotten by the mass culture," she said. "We don't imitate traditional theater.

"Women's issues become a major part of our performances," she said, adding that there are lesbian characters in parts because two of the three actresses are lesbians, and they are lovers.

It is important to the group to portray these issues positively, Weaver said.

"We want the audience to come away with a positive image of characters that are often disenfranchised in today's societies," she said.

The group will present two different shows this weekend. Split Britches will be performed at 4 p.m. today and Upwardly Mobile Home will run at 3 p.m. Saturday. Both shows are being held in the afternoon to avoid conflict with "Romeo and Juliet," which is being performed nightly by the K-State Players.

Split Britches is based on true characters and focuses on the lives of three women living in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia in the 1930s and 40s. Weaver researched her family's roots and used the characters of two unmarried great aunts when compiling the script.

Upwardly Mobile Home details the life of a mother and her two daughters camping under the Brooklyn Bridge to support a friend who is participating in the Living Bridge Marathon.

The group is currently working on a new piece, a burlesque version of "Little Women," Weaver said.

"It deals with pornography, censorship and morality," she said.

"The city doesn't seem to want that area developed until the whole problem is solved. They want the total thing brought into perspective today. And, they want it done at my expense."

Despite the easements around the property for the drainage facilities, Talley said the proposed plats have placed them on his property.

"I've tried to take my neighbors into consideration on everything I've planned," he said. "I was going to pay for all of the street improvements."

The suit claims the board's actions were "unreasonable, arbitrary and capricious."

"The delay caused by the defendants was unreasonable, and could be expected to cause the plaintiffs great expense and monetary damage," the suit says.

Talley declined to name the amount of actual damages he and his company have suffered.

"With plat approval, the land is very valuable. Without that approval the land is worth nothing. The defendant's action, therefore, denied a reasonable and beneficial use of the property, and amounts to taking of property without due process of law," according to the suit.

Talley said he doesn't have any solutions to the city's objections.

"They have three objections. And, I don't think I can work around them," he said. "I can't for the life of me figure out why they don't want me to have the use of my property. That's what all of this basically boils down to.

"This isn't even a difficult area to develop. It's unbelievable that it has come to this. Just think of all of the expense and time that has been wasted. It's ridiculous."

Carol Peak, planning board member, said the proposed plat did not meet all of the city's regulations. She refused additional comment.

Bill Frost, city attorney, also refused to comment on the pending case.

Lawsuits such as Talley's are infrequent, said Jim Pearson, assistant city manager. Pearson said he was unaware of a similar lawsuit being filed against the city in the 10 years he has worked for the city.

or pay for a college education, Ehrenreich said.

"You can't afford a middle-class lifestyle on that (income)," she said.

In order to stay within the middle class, two-income households are no longer an option, and multigenerational households are becoming more common, Ehrenreich said.

"The rich can't be trusted with money," she said.

That was the lesson America learned from Reagan's supply-side economics. Everyone waited for the wealthy to invest in something that would benefit the public. That money would then, in theory, "trickle down" to the lower classes, she said.

"I think we cannot only stop the trend toward classical polarization and racial polarization, but we could potentially reverse it and get back on the track toward those ideals we supposedly share as a nation which are equality, opportunity and social justice," she said.

Reagan says Navy will help victims

By The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — An Iranian speedboat shot up a Saudi Arabian-owned tanker in the Strait of Hormuz on Sunday after President Reagan said the U.S. Navy will no longer ignore attacks on noncombatants in the Persian Gulf region.

The speedboat fired rocket-propelled grenades and machine guns at the 37,011-ton Sea Trader in the strait, the southern entrance to the gulf.

An unexploded rocket dangled from the Sea Trader's hull after the attack but fell into the sea before the tanker reached the port of Dubai in the United Arab Emirates.

The Indian master, Capt. B.R. Pagarkar, reported his vessel sustained minor damage.

It was not known whether any U.S. warships were near the Sea Trader during the attack. Navy officials do not disclose warships' movements, but several U.S. frigates and destroyers have been in the southern gulf since last week, when U.S. and Iranian ships skirmished in the area.

Reagan warned Iran in his weekly radio broadcast Saturday that continued attacks on neutral parties, including gulf shipping, "will be very costly to Iran and its people."

On Friday, U.S. officials disclosed in Washington that the Reagan administration was planning to expand the U.S. naval role in the gulf by giving American commanders the right to intervene in Iranian attacks on non-U.S. flag vessels.

Explosion, fire strike submarine in water off east Florida coast

By The Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — An explosion and fire struck the diesel submarine USS Bonefish off Florida on Sunday, injuring 18 sailors and leaving 11 missing, the Navy said. It was not immediately known whether the blaze had been extinguished.

The Bonefish, one of the last diesel submarines in service in the Navy, surfaced 160 miles east of Cape Canaveral, Fla., where it was on a routine exercise, said Cmdr. Fred Leeder, spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet.

Eighteen injured crew members were transferred to the aircraft carrier USS John F. Kennedy, three in serious condition, said Lt. Cmdr. Bill Sonntag of the Atlantic Fleet headquarters in Norfolk.

Sonntag said the submarine, which was also being assisted by the frigates USS McCloy and USS Carr, was believed to have had 100 people aboard, only 89 of whom had been accounted for. Ships searched for crewmen, Sonntag said.

The 4:30 p.m. fire was believed caused by an explosion in the 30-year-old submarine's battery compartment, Sonntag said. Because of fire and toxic fumes, the commanding officer ordered the vessel evacuated, he said.

"We don't know if the fire is out at this point," he said. "All we know right now is that it is tied up next to the Carr."

AT&T gives computers to K-State

By The Collegian Staff

Two departments received $1.7 million worth of computer equipment from American Telephone & Telegraph Co. Friday, allowing them to take another step in the direction of high technology.

Clo Whitaker, AT&T branch manager for large business systems, called K-State "the best of the best" for being one of 46 schools chosen to receive the equipment grant. The grants were awarded based on proposals submitted on projects relating to the use of computers.

President Jon Wefald accepted the gift, which includes 80 personal computers, six minicomputers and two super minicomputers. Wefald said the University's partnership with AT&T will play a vital role in ensuring that K-State will have the state-of-the-art technology it needs for the next generation.

The equipment will be divided between the Department of Computing and Information Sciences and the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering. About 1,200 students currently major in the two departments.

Thomas Isenhour, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, thanked AT&T for the donation and congratulated the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering for attracting the grant. Computers, Isenhour said, are responsible for bringing educational disciplines closer together.

"I think when historians look back, they will decide that the single theme that brought scholarship together was computing — both in the hardware and mathematics that were developed to go around it," he

Council receives Van Zile renovation plans

Hall could connect with Boyd, Putnam

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

Alternatives ranging from demolition to renovations and additions were discussed Friday for the fate of K-State's oldest residence hall.

Skyler Harper, assistant university architect, and Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning, presented to the Housing Council four possible floor plans for returning the hall, which has been vacant since 1984, to a living area.

Their report focused on the possibility of constructing private or semi-private suites with restrooms shared between two rooms instead of community toilets that currently exist in residence halls.

Van Zile has been plagued with structural problems in recent years, including water leaks in the basement and roof, Garvin said. The building also contains asbestos in the insulation and roofing shingles, some of which has been knocked loose by vandals, posing a possible health threat.

Harper said the asbestos will have to be removed to comply with federal regulations, even if the building is to be destroyed.

"If the building is torn down, the asbestos will have to be addressed. If the building is renovated, it will still have to be addressed. If (the building) is left, especially with the laws changing as they are now, it will probably have to be removed," he said.

Harper and Garvin said they would be unsure of an exact cost for dealing with the asbestos until a more detailed survey could be done, but Garvin said it could run as high as $500,000.

Harper said if it was decided to renovate the hall, the cost could range from between $17,800 and $26,600 per bed, depending on the number of bed spaces. Bed counts in the four plans ranged from 60 to 120.

Thomas Frith, director of the Department of Housing, disagreed with the figures, saying he did not believe the plans were realistic.

He said he does not believe the hall could accommodate as many beds as the architects have planned.

"There isn't one square inch of that basement that is suitable for habitation," Frith said. "If I'm director of housing, I would not assign anyone to that area of the building — it's unsuitable."

The council also discussed whether there is a need for additional residence hall space.

Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said within a year, the current space in residence halls would be filled to capacity, creating a need for Van Zile.

However, Krause and other council members agreed that Van Zile's relatively small size and occupancy

Landon Lecture today

House speaker to discuss trade

By The Collegian Staff

Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives Jim Wright will deliver the 79th Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

The topic for Wright's speech is "International Trade," and the speech is open to the public.

Wright comes to K-State after overseeing House passage on Thursday of a controversial foreign trade bill designed to reduce the United State's record trade deficit. Last year the deficit was $173 billion.

The bill now goes to the Senate for final approval before going to President Reagan, who has said he will veto it if it still contains an employee protection amendment. The amendment requires manufacturers to give 60 days notice to their employees of planned layoffs or firings.

Wright said Thursday's vote might have been the most important vote this year.

International trade is only one area in which Wright has been active during his more than 30 years of congressional service. He has also authored major legislation in foreign affairs, economic development, water conservation, education and energy.

One such bill that he has supported is the School Improvement Act.

"With this landmark education bill, Congress stresses the four Rs — reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic and renewed commitment to educational excellence for American children," Wright said of the act.

Wright succeeded Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill last year as House speaker, and he currently presides over the 100th U.S. Congress. O'Neill was a Landon Lecturer in 1985.

Elected to the House at the age of 31, Wright is serving his 17th consecutive term as a Democratic representative from Texas. Before being elected Speaker of the House, he served 10 years as the majority leader.

Following the lecture, Wright will attend a noon luncheon with Landon Lecture patrons.

Alcohol task force to consider pre-party form for sororities

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to create a uniform alcohol code for sororities' parties, a Panhellenic Alcohol Task Force is proposing a Panhellenic Pre-Party Registration form.

The proposal will be voted on at 6:30 tonight at the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity house during a joint meeting between the Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils.

The registration task force is composed of the social chairwomen from each sorority.

Brenda Roach, chairwoman of the task force and senior in consumer affairs, said the form should help develop a precedent for all the houses, making the whole system stronger.

"Technically, it hasn't passed yet," she said. "But what was proposed was a contract that would state where the party will be, who is hosting the party, and how many people will be there."

The contract asks the sorority about the kind of drinks that will be served, how they will be served and how minors will be identified. In addition, the contract asks what kind of arrangements will be provided for transporting intoxicated members and guests home at the end of the function.

If the contract is passed, the social chairwoman of the sorority will be required to complete the form before a function or event and have it returned to the Office of Greek Affairs.

Someone from that office will look over the form, but it is not up to them to accept or reject the proposed event, Roach said. They are to help point out things that may need more attention.

The form should provide the sorority's social chairwoman with an outline to plan a safer party and provide a uniform structure for all of the houses to follow, she said.

"This is just something for (the sororities') own benefit," Roach said. "The important thing is that they, the social chairwomen, initiated and developed it themselves."

Each social chairwoman has had two weeks to discuss the proposal with her active chapter members.

"It's really not anything new," Roach said. "It's just an outline and some guidelines to follow ... and if it passes, I think it would have a good impact on the new classes coming in with the underage drinking laws."

Lebanon car bombing kills 69

TRIPOLI, Lebanon — The death toll from Lebanon's worst car bombing in three years climbed to 69 Sunday after 15 of the wounded died in hospitals. One man was dragged injured but alive from a wrecked building.

Tripoli's eight hospitals were filled to capacity with casualties and morgues were "packed with corpses," police said.

Local officials in the northern port city declared two days of public mourning for the victims of Saturday's explosion in a crowded vegetable market that knocked down buildings and set dozens of cars ablaze.

Police said 111 people were wounded from the blast in the low-income Tabbaneh district of Tripoli, the country's second-largest city. Radio stations broadcast urgent appeals for blood.

Civil defense rescue teams who clawed through the rubble during the night called off their search early Sunday.

Chernobyl receives bad reports

MOSCOW — Sloppy repairs, drunkenness and nepotism are rampant at the Chernobyl nuclear plant two years after the world's worst nuclear disaster, Pravda said Sunday.

The Communist Party daily said engineering jobs at the plant were handed out to medics, teachers, veterinarians and people without any higher education.

It also accused Chernobyl's managers of trying to "resolve at any cost" obstacles to full electricity production at the plant "to the detriment of the quality of repair and maintenance of extremely intricate equipment."

The scathing attack was a departure from the numerous articles appearing in the Soviet press before Tuesday's anniversary of the April 26, 1986, explosion and fire at the power plant 80 miles north of the Ukrainian capital of Kiev.

The explosion killed 31 people, spewed radiation around the world and forced the evacuation of 135,000 Soviets living near the plant.

Thief coughs up evidence

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — When police told a thief to cough up the evidence, he complied and gave them a gold chain he had swallowed after snatching it from a woman, a newspaper reported Sunday.

In a story headlined "There Is Gold in That Cough," the Sunday Mail said the incident occurred Saturday in Seremban, 50 miles south of Kuala Lumpur.

It said police detective Sgt. Mohamed Yaacob Shari, who was passing by, chased and caught the thief after a woman identified as S. Sakuntala screamed that someone had snatched her gold chain.

The newspaper quoted police as saying that the thief was taken to the police station, searched and interrogated, but no evidence was found on him.

But just before he was released, he coughed and out came the $310 gold chain, the report said.

The newspaper did not identify the thief.

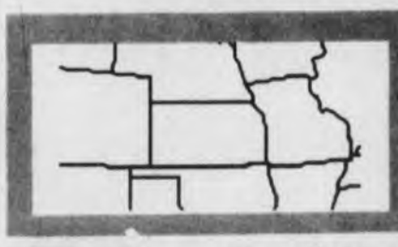
Self-inflicted burns kill man

MACON, Ga. — A man who set his gasoline-soaked clothes on fire and walked down the aisle of a church during a prayer service died Sunday from his burns, though worshipers tried to save him by dousing the flames.

The songs of a children's choir gave way to hysterical screams as worshipers at Friendship Baptist Church noticed Willie J. Boone, 41.

Saturday night's musical program was almost over when "I saw the children looking curious and I looked back" from the first row, said the Rev. Jimmy L. Mills. "I saw this young man coming up the middle aisle ablaze of fire."



"Most of (the children) went into hysterics," he said. "It was a terrible tragedy."

The pastor said he and deacons used a fire extinguisher to douse the flames on the man's clothes "and asked him to go out and sit on the front porch and that's where he went until the police arrived."

On the porch, Boone said, "It's all right," and collapsed, Mills said.

Boone suffered burns over his entire body except the soles of his feet, said patient representative Karen Hall at the Medical Center of Central Georgia.

Mills said Boone gave no clue to his motive .

Woman, son barred from church

TOPEKA — Church officials turned away a woman and her troubled 9-year-old son from services at an Episcopal church Sunday, enforcing a court order barring them because of the boy's disruptive behavior.

"This is God's church, not your church," Sheryl Geartz quietly told the half-dozen men who blocked their way at the doors of Grace Episcopal Cathedral.

Geartz prayed aloud before leaving the front of the church: "Dear Lord, we know this is your house. We ask you to open your doors to let us in. In Jesus' name, we pray." She then left and held a news conference with reporters before taking her son and 7-year-old daughter to another church.

The church obtained a restraining order in Shawnee County District Court last week that barred her and her son Jason on the grounds that the boy disrupts services and his mother will not control him.

The church's petition for a restraining order described Jason's "disruptive and dangerous activities," such as pulling the fire alarm, making loud noises, throwing objects and destroying property.

Eggs, tears hold special interest for professor

Staff/Rob Squires

Frank Cunningham, professor of animal sciences and industry, examines flasks containing bacteria in his lab in Call Hall. Cunningham is researching a natural enzyme, called lysozyme, that fights infections.

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

Brightly decorated eggs, a can of Japanese quail eggs, boxes of batter dips, and a sign that reads "Either lead, follow or get out of my way" adorn the walls and shelves of Frank Cunningham's office.

"I'm a doer," said Cunningham, professor of animal sciences and industry. "That sign says it all."

It seems to be an accurate description of Cunningham, who has taught at K-State since 1969. Cunningham has written or co-written more than 200 publications — including nine books — and he has been involved with nine patents.

These publications and patents cover a variety of fields, from pork to batters to a bacteria-fighting enzyme.

"I like to be involved with a variety of things," Cunningham said. "It keeps me interested."

The project with which Cunningham seems most involved lately focuses on a natural enzyme, called lysozyme, that fights infections. Lysozyme occurs in all body fluids.

"The highest concentration is in tears," he said. "We could have people cry commercially and get all the lysozyme we need."

Another source of lysozyme is egg whites. Cunningham said this is by far the most economical source of lysozyme.

"Most infections in the body are caused by staph bacteria, and lysozyme just wipes these bacteria out, and it also works on strep infections," he said.

Lysozyme works by breaking down the cell walls of bacteria that are susceptible to the enzyme.

One of the big problems in the poultry industry is controlling the bacteria salmonella. Cunningham said that although lysozyme is not very effective against this bacteria, he hopes one day it will be.

"We could just dip the chickens in lysozyme, and that would be that," he said.

"Industry is dollar motivated. You spend much of your time trouble-shooting, and you're very restricted in what you can do."

—Frank Cunningham, professor of animal sciences and industry

Cunningham has seen lysozyme used in trial runs of cold medicines, cough syrups and a Japanese-produced toothpaste.

Eggs hold a special interest for Cunningham. Besides the processing of lysozyme, Cunningham has worked on patents for different egg food products.

"We came up with a product not too long ago called Eggurt," he said. "It's basically yogurt, with eggs replacing the milk."

Another product he has developed is egg jerky, which he said tastes much like beef jerky.

Cunningham has also done work in the field of batter breading.

"You can take a relatively low-quality food and increase its potential by simply breading it," he said.

One of the products with which he has used his batter breading is "egg rings." He said this snack food would be made from egg whites and be very high in protein.

Cunningham said most people don't realize the problems associated with breading.

"You have to worry about the cohesiveness of the batter, how well it will stick and whether the consumers will accept it," he said.

Cunningham came to K-State in 1969 after working for several years in the private sector. Though he was making twice what he could make teaching by working in industry, Cunningham said he wanted to be able to control what he was studying.

"Industry is dollar motivated. You spend much of your time trouble-shooting, and you're very restricted in what you can do. I've always been inclined to do research, and I want to do what I want to do," he said.

He said the university setting allows him to do this.

"Besides, I've been a Wildcat for longer than I care to remember," he said.

Cunningham also sees a challenge in working with students.

"My biggest thrill is to see a student blossom into all that he can be,"

Parking council, ag college agree on fee for state vehicles

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

The Parking Council's final discussion Friday of the proposed changes in parking regulations resulted in one change being made in the original proposal.

The original proposal called for reserved stalls to cost $225 per year for state vehicles. However, the council accepted the administration's revised proposal of $100 per vehicle with a 6-0 vote.

More than 100 state vehicles are used by the College of Agriculture. At an April 15 public hearing, Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, expressed his concerns. Later discussions between Woods and members of the parking council and department of public safety resulted in the change.

"Since we were going to have to pay for state vehicles for parking on campus, I'm glad we could work out a compromise that would not increase our costs too much," Woods said.

The College of Agriculture uses the state vehicles for field trips and many other research activities. Because the vehicles are used throughout the day, Woods said, the faculty needs to be able to have quick access to them.

"The state vehicles are an integral part of our teaching and research," he said. "The availability of our state vehicles is essential."

No one at the meeting discussed the issue of charging conferences and seminars $1 per visitor per week or portion thereof. Currently, conferences are not charged for the number of participants attending the event.

"I think it is a bad public relations move," said Bobbie Flaherty, director of conferences for the Division of Continuing Education.

The approved proposal will now be passed on to the Kansas Board of Regents for consideration. The regents should make a final recommendation on the proposal within the next two weeks.

In addition to discussing the proposed regulatory changes, the council approved designated parking for the residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments in buildings H, I, M and N for a one-year trial period.

Digital audio tape threatens to destroy recording industry

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

Compact discs are the fastest-growing consumer entertainment product ever, but an even newer product — digital audio tape — looms in the future. Some people fear that DAT will destroy the popularity and profitability of CDs.

DAT is the same as CD except the technology uses tape instead of a disc. DAT cassettes are smaller than normal cassettes and can hold several hours of music. DAT machines will plug into any standard stereo system and should cost around $1,000 when they hit the market.

But DAT can record, and CDs cannot. This means you will be able to copy a CD to DAT without losing any sound quality. This means that CDs can be pirated.

Pirating is making copies of copyrighted products. Most of us are pirates. Probably half of my cassettes are pirated. Computer software and VCR tapes also get pirated a lot.

Naturally, the government will not jail any of us for taping friends' albums. The police concentrate on the big-time commercial pirates who supply stores with bootleg material to sell.

Private pirating, however, is big.

It is easy to pirate. You do not have to jimmy a window or sneak past a guard or lug a heavy TV down a dark alley. You just borrow an album, press a few buttons, wait a while, and give the album back.

Music is one of only a few things you can give away and still have for yourself. I feel like I have given someone a gift when I let them copy an album of mine, even though I still have my original album when it is all over.

It is also hard to find the victims of pirating. Some of the victims are the recording artists. Every song I copy instead of buying is that much more royalties stolen away from the artist.

I actually discourage the artists I like from making more music because pirating lowers their profits. But that hurt is so far away and so long term that I cannot feel it.

The honest people who do not pirate are also victims. Record companies raise the price of albums in order to make up for profits lost to pirates. Pirates claim they can pirate some albums because the record companies over-price the albums. In the middle are the honest people, who end up paying for other people's theft.

It comes down to honesty anyway. If no one pirated, prices would go down and there would not be so much motivation to pirate. If anyone pirates, everyone loses out due to higher prices.

Pirates have stopped DAT from crossing the Pacific Ocean to America. Japanese stores have sold DAT machines since the spring of 1986. So we are the biggest victims. We do not have DAT machines in American stores because we cannot be trusted.

American record companies fear that they will not be able to sell any new CDs or CD players if we can pirate CDs to DAT. Therefore, they are lobbying for new laws designed to discourage pirating. Japan is waiting to see what will happen before shipping DAT here.

The record companies have three basic proposals, each with its own problems.

First, we could put a tax on blank DAT tapes. This has also been considered for normal cassettes. The idea is for the tax money to go to compensate the record companies or to help out "starving artists."

But I do not see how the government can decide which record companies get hurt the worst by pirates and thus should get the most tax money. I also do not see how they will decide which artists are really starving.

Second, we could levy an extra-heavy tariff on DAT players when they enter the country and then use this money like we would the money from a tax on blank tapes.

But we will pay for this tariff in the form of higher prices for DAT machines. Also, the Japanese have hinted that they will not ship any machines if there is an extra tariff, and we do not know if they are bluffing or not.

Third, we could require that all DAT machines come with a gizmo called a "spoiler" which would prevent copying a CD to DAT. But spoilers on DAT machines have the same problems as catalytic converters on cars. They are an unwanted feature that jacks up the price. They also can be removed by anyone with a little patience. The professional pirates will always be able to get around spoilers.

This third proposal brings up the question of why we even would want DAT. DAT and CDs both have the same sound quality. But DAT must be rewound and fast-forwarded while CDs can jump randomly to any song on the album. Also, DAT is much more expensive than CDs.

In fact, the only good thing about DAT is that it lets you steal CDs. There is no reason to get DAT when the manufacturer takes away its ability to copy CDs, unless you have some wish to record your own voice with perfect fidelity.

This means that the only reason we would want to buy DAT is to steal. A DAT machine has one purpose, just as a skeleton key has one purpose. If Japan tries to sell DAT machines that spoil attempts to pirate, no one will buy them, just as no one would buy a skeleton key if they had to register their name and address.

Attracting black faculty must become priority

The eminent departure of William Sutton from K-State has once again brought up — and amplified — the immediate need for K-State to attract black faculty members.

Sutton, former vice president of educational and student services and current professor of biology, has accepted the presidency of Mississippi Valley State University. His decision leaves K-State with two black faculty members.

In a statement last week, President Jon Wefald said the University is committed to attracting top-quality minority staff members, and that the administration will be working even more diligently to attract additional minority staff.

The question is: When will we start seeing the top-quality minority staff members we have been promised? And exactly how are we going about attracting them to K-State?

Few promising solutions have been offered on attaining the latter, and it looks as if the administration is working in reverse and losing staff members instead of gaining them.

Such a conclusion is certainly warranted when one considers that Sutton's stint at K-State lasted only two years.

The University should take Wefald at his word and expect changes in the number of minority faculty at K-State.

But words are not enough.

Such a low ratio of black faculty on staff is an embarrassment to the University and could jeopardize the teaching atmosphere for the students.

It also seriously hinders recruitment of black students, another issue with which the administration has expressed concern. The realization that there are only two black faculty members at K-State won't do much to convince prospective black students to attend K-State. And if they do decide to come here, what kind of atmosphere of acceptance can they expect?

It is time for the University to take action on this issue. And it is time for us to start seeing some results.

Bringing up co-op bill again now isn't wise

The KSU Childcare Cooperative has petitioned Student Senate again to fund it with a student support fee.

However worthy the cause is, it is risky to bring up practically the same bill in front of the same Senate. Since senators did not pass the funding before, it is not likely they will pass it now.

Another problem with rehashing the issue during the same semester is the risk of the student body becoming bored with the subject of child care.

It would be better to wait until next semester to bring up the issue. The student body is likely to be more sympathetic, and Senate is more likely to pass it.

The new bill will offer more aid to students who have children enrolled in the co-op, but that is all that is different. Senate will probably defeat the bill using the same arguments it used three weeks ago to kill the first bill.

It is in the best interest of the co-op that the bill be brought up when it has the most support — and thus the greatest chance of passage. If Senate fails to pass this second bill, it is likely the entire issue will be dead forever.

And that would be unfortunate for everyone at K-State.

Shrub hazard

Editor,

On March 11, I reported the driving hazard caused by the growing-ever-taller shrubs at the south exit of the upper Union parking lot to a female voice with K-State Police.

As we spoke, I half-jokingly said that if the bushes weren't cut back soon, they would probably cause an accident, and she responded by saying there had already been at least one at that location!

She said she would try to notify the appropriate authorities, whoever that might be, to try to get something done about the hazard.

I then called and spoke with Tom Lee, head of the Grounds Maintenance Division of University Physical Facilities, to report the same hazard and to suggest that a little preventative maintenance in the form of some trimming would quickly alleviate the problem. He said he would "check into it."

Today is April 19, more than a month later. The same shrubs (except they are a little taller) are still blocking the view of drivers trying to exit the upper Union parking lot.

Yesterday, I witnessed an almost-collision, but defensive driving on the parts of both drivers avoided an accident this time. But how long should it take for a responsible administrator to direct someone to trim a few bushes and solve the underlying problem?

Terrorist knows

Editor,

The current Middle East situation has brought the terrorism issue out of the closet again. The weak run to make their accommodations with terrorists, who appear strong. The tempo is slack. The struggle against terrorism is now prolonged.

It is time when renewals are needed, but the will of determination is not equally deep in us all. We sit upon this land and see guns pour in for those whom we fight. Whatever allies we might have, they reach no hand to us. Terrorism is a vise that squeezes in our isolated lives.

We do not have space here. We live and move in the same space that the terrorist occupies. There is no place to retreat, no place that is not accessible, no question here of liberated areas.

We look at a map and wonder what to do next. We need a force structure that will allow us to go where we are not wanted. Remember, the terrorist has known you for more than 200 years. He knows who you are. You are an American.

That's the only reason why we will win.

Postage rates affect campus

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

The increase in postage rates that went into effect April 3 will affect K-State, but officials in the Dykstra Hall post office are looking for ways to lessen the impact.

"It is going to be an impact for the departments, but it won't be crucial," said Reba Snavely, administrative officer in Physical Facilities.

"We plan to help the departments decrease their postage cost," Snavely said. "If they use the presort first class mail, they will get a 4-cent discount."

The post office in Dykstra has handled more than 3 million pieces of mail this year, with 900,000 pieces of it being campus mail. Sixty percent of the mail was first class, and 15 percent was international mail.

The post office has handled $550,000 in postage for the business mail from the departments. Because it is sent first class, business mail will see a postage increase of 4 cents, as a result of the recent rise in postal rates.

Officials in the admissions office plan to offset the already implemented rates by asking for an increase in their budget. Admissions is responsible for mailing out admissions letters to students, enrollment packets, brochures and other correspondence with prospective students.

In the 1987 fiscal year, admissions allocated $36,000 of its budget for postage. This year, officials plan to ask for a 15 percent increase to cover the increase in postage rates, said Jill Adams, secretary in the Office of Undergraduate Admissions.

Ann Foster, office specialist for Student Publications Inc., said the postage rate increase will have a direct impact on the office.

"By 1989, we will almost have doubled our postage rate," Foster said. "We are over last year's postage by $3,000 already, but that has a lot to do with the extra mailings we have been sending out."

In the 1988 fiscal year thus far, Student Publications has spent $13,000 on postage. Student Publications mails out subscriptions to the Collegian, and the increase in postage will result in an increase in subscription rates.

"We spend about $1,000 a month postage just for subscriptions," Foster said. The future subscription rate for the Collegian has not yet been decided.

Foster said officials are also looking at increasing advertising rates to help pay for the postage increase. Student Publications sends out an average of 350 bills per month to advertisers, she said.

Allergy clinic in Lafene helps suffering students

By The Collegian Staff

Spring, the season of the suntan, the swimsuit and the Frisbee, is finally in full swing. But along with the season's benefits come the season's torments: the runny noses, itchy eyes and continual sneezing of allergy sufferers.

Allergy sufferers at K-State can find relief at the Allergy Clinic at Lafene Student Health Center.

"Most of the people who come in have seen an allergist in Topeka, Oklahoma or Kansas City," said Lafene's Dr. Daniel C. Martin. "They come in with a bottle of medicine and their instructions, and all we do is go over the instructions, just to double-check, and give them their shots."

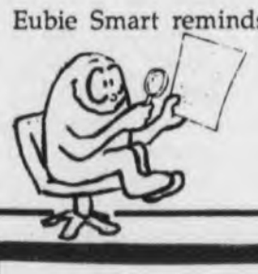
There is a charge of $10 per semester for the service, and a $5 charge in the summer. Last month, Lafene personnel gave 577 allergy injections, and they have given 4,460 allergy injections to date.

Not all allergy sufferers who go to Lafene have seen an allergist. Some are treated by the center's staff.

"The main reasons we treat some allergy cases by ourselves is experience," said Martin. "If you treat (allergies), you learn more (about) what to look for and watch out for."

Those who go to Lafene with allergy symptoms will usually receive a skin or a blood test, Martin said. Twenty percent of the time it is a fairly obvious allergy, but if isn't apparent what is causing the symptoms, the center compares the person's medical history with the tests, he said.

The symptoms are usually a runny nose, watery and itchy eyes, and sometimes lots of sneezing, which can be very disruptive, Martin said.



"Right now, the main cause of an allergy is tree pollen," he said. "This summer it will be grass pollen, and this fall it will be weeds."

Most allergy sufferers don't have an obvious reason for their allergy, Martin said. Someone's medical history can show a grass-pollen allergy and then have the skin and blood tests turn up negative.

'Cats post one win at Relays

Meet hampered by weather, cancellations

By Tom Perrin
Sports Writer

LAWRENCE — Anne Stadler didn't get the NCAA-qualifying time she was hoping for Saturday at the Kansas Relays, but she still had plenty of reason to smile after her winning performance in the 3,000-meter run.

Stadler was K-State's only event winner this weekend in a meet that was plagued by poor weather, pullouts by top competitors and one of the weakest KU relays fields in years. The adverse weather conditions played a big part in shaping the race plan Stadler worked out with Coach John Capriotti.

"I'm just happy with the way I ran," Stadler said. "Earlier in the week, I was looking to qualify, but this morning it was cold and fairly windy, so coach told me to follow."

And follow Stadler did, up until the last lap of the race — when she overtook Nebraska's Sammie Resh to win in a time of 9:32.74, slightly more than 10 seconds over the national- qualifying mark.

"We knew it would be very, very tough to run a qualifier today. If it was just cold, it wouldn't be that bad, but the wind was pretty strong, too," she said.

Three of the Wildcats' top athletes — Big Eight champion 400-meter runner Jeff Reynolds, distance runner Ron Stahl and triple-jumper/long-jumper Kenny Harrison did not compete at KU. Reynolds and Stahl were entered but scratched mostly due to the weather. Harrison wasn't in Lawrence because of a pulled hamstring. Even if Harrison had been 100 percent, it wasn't certain if he would jump at KU.

Other prominent no-shows included American pole vault record holder Joe Dial, who went 19-4 to win at KU last year, and Arkansas's NCAA-champion distance runner Joe Falcon.

KU's Scott Huffman was the meet's outstanding male performer after winning both the open pole vault Friday with 17-6 and taking the invitational pole vault Saturday at 18-0½ .

K-State received national qualifying marks from Kim Kilpatrick in the 100-meter hurdles (13.65) and Pat Allen in the javelin (228-6). Other top K-State performances belonged to Felicia Curry, second in the triple jump at 42-9; Kelly Abernathy, second in the discus at 163-1; Becky Ives, second in the 1,500 at 4:38.25; Angie Miller, third in the discus at 157-1; and Jacque Struckhoff, second in the 5,000 meters at 16:41.92. K-State's four-mile relay team of Brian Zwahlen, Todd Eggers, Stahl and Pat Hessini took second at 16:46.1.

"The ones that did compete did great," Capriotti said. "I can't complain."

A pair of former K-State athletes turned in winning performances. Pinkie Suggs took both the shot-put (51-9¼) and discus (174-2), while Rita Graves won the high jump with a leap of 6-0. 1984 Olympian Doug Lytle, another former K-Stater, wasn't able to clear the pole-vault bar in three attempts at 17-6.

Struckhoff led almost the entire way in the 5,000 before she was overtaken late in the race by Iowa's Renee Doyle. Doyle defeated Struckhoff by a mere .12 seconds.

"I was taken by surprise a little bit," Struckhoff said. "It was about all I had left."

Both Struckhoff and Stadler have their sights set on qualifying for the NCAA meet at this weekend's Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa. Struckhoff will run the 10,000 meters at Drake, while Stadler will compete in the 1,500 meters.

"Hopefully, I'll get a qualifier. That's the plan," Stadler said. "I'm confident that I can. It's just a matter of being prepared physically and mentally."

Women's golf team at conference meet

By The Collegian Staff

K-State golf coach Rob Sedorcek isn't expecting a miracle today and Tuesday from his women's golf team, but he is hoping for improvement in the Big Eight Conference tournament.

"It is going to take the women a year or two more to establish themselves and get used to playing in the Big Eight before they make a big move in the conference standings."
—Rob Sedorcek

Last year, K-State finished seventh among the Big Eight schools in the tournament. For the fifth consecutive year, Oklahoma State is favored to win the contest, but Sedorcek has good reason to believe K-State will pull itself out of the cellar.

"If we can better our current individual averages, we should be respectable," Sedorcek said. "It is going to take the women a year or two more to establish themselves and get used to playing in the Big Eight before they make a big move in the conference standings."

The tournament is being played at the par 72, 5,047-yard Stillwater Country Club at Stillwater, Okla. Teams will play 27 holes each day of the tournament.

K-State is coming off a 33-stroke victory over Southwest Missouri State Tuesday in the K-State/Pepsi Classic. Three K-State golfers finished in the top four individual spots with the medalist honors going to K-State sophomore Jill Zientara.

Zientara will be joined by freshmen teammates Chris Adams, Keli Blake, Beth Holmberg and Cory Harlow at Stillwater.

The team added more youth with the signing of Adena Hagedorn from Manhattan. She recently signed a letter-of-intent to join the K-State's program for the 1988-89 year.

Hagedorn helped lead Manhattan High to Class 6A state golf titles as a sophomore and junior while the Indians finished second her other two years. Individually in state competition, she placed 15th as a freshman, 10th her sophomore season, second as a junior and third this past fall.

In addition, she captured the state junior tournament last summer while finishing 30th in the junior world competition. The junior world tournament included participants from all 50 states plus some 50 countries.

"She is a good signee for us," Sedorcek said. "She is probably the best high school women's golfer in the state of Kansas right now."

K-State's men's golf team will return to action Friday and Saturday when it travels to the Midwestern Intercollegiate Invitational at Lake Geneva, Wis.

In their most recent play, April 18-19 at the Wichita State Invitational, the men placed second in a nine-team field. Wildcats Jeff Sedorcek and Chris Gomez tied for second in medalist competition, scoring 218s.

Prior to their second-place finish in Wichita as a team, the men had posted victories in the 16-team Creighton Invitational, the 21-team Nebraska Wesleyan Invitational and the 15-team Nebraska Cup.

Many surprises in first round of NFL draft Sunday

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — NFL teams went for needs in the annual draft Sunday, picking players to fill gaping holes rather than merely taking the best available athlete.

In addition to six wide receivers, five running backs, five defensive linemen, four offensive linemen, three linebackers, three defensive backs and one tight end were taken in the 3-hour, 29-minute first round.

Four schools — Oklahoma, Miami, Tennessee and Arizona State — each had two players taken.

The first eight picks went about as expected, save for the choice of Wisconsin tackle Paul Gruber by Tampa Bay with the fourth pick of the round.

The Bucs, who had said last week they wouldn't take an offensive lineman, were expected to go for a wide receiver — either Heisman Trophy winner Tim Brown of Notre Dame or Sterling Sharpe of South Carolina.

Jordan drafted by Phoenix in fifth round

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's Tony Jordan was selected Sunday morning by the Phoenix Cardinals as the first day of the National Football League draft was [illegible] pick overall. He said he got a call from the organization about 8:35 p.m.

"I'm excited about being drafted that high and getting a chance," Jordan said. "Not that many guys get the chance from K-State."

Jordan said he and teammates Ron Dean and John Williams, probable draftees today, kept in touch Sunday, updating each other about what was happening.

"It's been a weird draft," Jordan said. "You can't really tell what's going to happen."

Jordan said he was hoping to be drafted Sunday, but that he "really didn't know what to expect.

"I kept my fingers crossed, hoping for the best," he added.

Jordan said he does not know too much about the Phoenix team or organization, which moved from St. Louis earlier this year.

He said he is looking forward to going to there, however.

"I know it's a nice place," he said.

"He's one of the best big athletes I've ever seen," Bucs coach and general manager Ray Perkins said of the 6-foot-6, 290-pound Gruber despite being philosophically opposed to taking offensive lineman high.

"He's so gifted he can come in and play. He represents both a need and a value. Wide receivers come along every year," Perkins said.

This year was no different — six wide receivers were taken in the first round, breaking the record of five in 1973.

But they may not have anyone to throw them the ball. For the first time since 1985, no quarterbacks were taken in the first round, limited to 27 picks because Seattle forfeited its choice by taking Brian Bosworth in last year's supplemental draft.

But there were lots of surprises, particularly after the top eight bluechippers were gone.

In a draft deep in running backs, for example, none was chosen until the Los Angeles Rams took UCLA's Gaston Green with the 14th pick.

The Los Angeles Raiders, who took Brown with their first pick, sixth overall, went for cornerback Terrence McDaniel of Tennessee, who has a history of shoulder problems. McDaniel was taken as a potential replacement for the aging Mike Haynes and Lester Hayes.

Then the New York Giants, who normally go for the best available athlete, took tackle Eric Moore of Indiana, another player expected to go lower, with the 10th pick of the draft. Injury and illness on the offensive line was one reason New York fell to 6-9 last year after its 1986 Super Bowl season.

As expected, Dallas picked Miami wide receiver Michael Irvin.

But the Phoenix Cardinals, transplanted from St. Louis, continued their offbeat drafting history by taking linebacker Ken Harvey of California, earlier considered a marginal first-rounder.

And Miami, picking 16th, took 6-7, 257-pound Eric Kumerow, a defensive end from Ohio State who almost no one projected as a first-rounder.

Nor did any of the expected trades develop early. The Raiders used both their picks rather than trade them to Washington for quarterback Jay Schroeder. Green Bay, the Giants, Rams and Minnesota Vikings, all of whom were thought to be looking to trade up or down, stayed where they were.

The only trade of the first round was made by the San Francisco 49ers, who more often than not make a deal. They dealt their pick, the 26th of the round, to the Raiders, for wide receiver Dokie Williams and second- and fourth-round picks.

Rugby club splits games with intrastate-rival KU

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

It's become standard practice anytime K-State meets the University of Kansas in any sport that the ensuing contest will be a fight to the finish.

Saturday's rugby matchups were true to form, as KU's club side beat K-State's club side, 13-11. The tables turned in the collegiate side, with K-State winning, 11-10.

"We played good in the first half," said co-captain David Luchtefeld of the club side game. "But we kind of fell apart in the last 10 minutes of the second half."

In the early going, it appeared K-State was on its way to a victory. They drew first blood and took a 3-0 lead on a Xentho O'Hatton penalty kick.

KU responded with a penalty kick of its own, but Nat Bascom then scored a try for K-State and stretched the lead to 7-3 with about 15 minutes left in the half. Neither team was able to score in the remainder of the half.

K-State went up by eight, 11-3, on a try by Danny Blea. But then the momentum began to shift KU's way.

Kansas scored a try to pull within four, 11-7, with about 15 minutes left in the game.

"The whole second half until the last 15 minutes, we had them down in their end. They were able to push it back though," center Dave Todd said. "Their pack started playing a lot better."

Kansas scored another try with about a minute left to tie the score, 11-11. It then scored the conversion after the try and went ahead to end the game, 13-11.

"We outplayed them the whole game," Todd said. "Even though we lost, it was an encouraging game because it's been a lot of years since we've been competitive with the KU club side."

A weak kicking game contributed to K-State's defeat, as it missed two penalty kicks and two conversion kicks — 10 points combined.

"Kicking has been a thorn in our side," Todd said.

With the loss Saturday, as well as a previous defeat by the Kansas City Blues, K-State's record stands at 0-2 in the club side merit table.

Todd said this is not surprising because those teams are traditionally powerhouses, finishing in the Nos. 1 and 2 slots consistently.

K-State will continue merit table games in the fall, with matchups against Columbia, Mo., Johnson County and the Kansas City Rugby Club. Todd said K-State should prevail in these games and improve its record to 3-2 in merit table play.

K-State's club side record fell to 4-3-1, while the collegiate side improved its record to 5-2.

Saturday, K-State's collegiate side posted a come-from-behind win. K-State scored a try with about two minutes left in the game to record a 11-10 victory.

The teams' next action will be Saturday at Gorman Park in Manhattan. The collegiate side will play Washburn at 1:30 p.m., while the club side will play Garden City at 3 p.m.

Celebration in works for basketball team

By The Collegian Staff

For K-State sports fans who can't get enough of the Wildcat basketball team, a celebration is in the works for Wednesday.

Joe Wright, a former K-State basketball player from 1984-86, is coordinating an all-University social gathering to honor Wildcat players and coaches Wednesday evening at the Doug Out, located in The Old Town Mall.

"We want to show our appreciation to the players and coaching staff," Wright said of the Wildcats 25-9 season, highlighted by an appearance in the "final eight" of the NCAA Tournament.

Wright said members of the coaching staff will be on hand at 9 p.m. to greet people. Persons under the age of 21 will be admitted to the celebration, he added.

Wright said all the members of the team will also be present throughout the evening. He added that player and coach response to the gathering has been favorable.

"They were happy about it," he said. "They've never had a celebration like this for themselves."

Netters claim two Big Eight wins

Victory over Nebraska first ever for Wildcats

By Chase Clark

In what was perhaps the best weekend ever for the K-State's women's tennis team, the squad defeated Nebraska and Iowa State in dual matches to end its regular season.

"With the win over Nebraska Saturday and defeating Iowa State (Sunday), which we haven't done for three years, we are very pleased with the things we've accomplished," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "This is the highest point total for the team ever in two matches. We had consistent effort throughout all nine positions.

"I feel very good about the way our players have kept things together the past two weeks in what has been the toughest part of the season for us. The fact that they sustained their effort through some hard times really showed this weekend," he added.

Saturday afternoon, K-State defeated Nebraska, 6-3, at the tennis courts at the L. P. Washburn Recreational Area. The victory is reported to be the first time a K-State women's tennis team has ever beaten Nebraska.

K-State's Marijke Nel defeated Nebraska's Ildiko Guba in the No. 1 singles position in straight sets, 7-6 (7-4), 6-3. K-State also pulled off wins at the Nos. 4 through 6 single's positions and the Nos. 2 and 3 double's spots. All six of the Wildcats' victories came in straight sets.

"Marijke had a good weekend," Bietau said. "She played particularly well against Guba and will remember that day for a long time. She accomplished what she had wanted to do for a long time — to play very consistently and hit a great shot every time."

Nel received one more honor before the weekend was over. She was the recipient of a sportsmanship award given out by the umpires on Sunday. Bietau said her class and the way she carries herself played a major role in her getting the award.

"The most important thing is we played better at every position throughout the weekend. That's what creates the success for the team..."
—Steve Bietau, tennis coach

Sunday, K-State, 9-8 overall and 3-4 in the Big Eight Conference, easily defeated Iowa State at home, 8-1, in the last dual match of the season.

Iowa State got its lone victory at the No. 2 double's position when the Cyclone's team of Suna Bayrakal and Kris Stotler defeated Nel and Valerie Rive, 6-4, 6-4. For the second day in a row, K-State picked up six wins in straight sets.

"Sigrid Ivarsson did a nice job in her singles play," Bietau said. "She took a girl off the court in 25 to 30 minutes both days. It just starts the momentum rolling for the other matches.

"The most important thing is we played better at every position throughout the weekend. That's what creates the success for the team and has put us in the position we are in going into the conference tournament. We didn't have anyone play poorly either day," he added.

Royals hand Orioles 18th straight defeat

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Baltimore Orioles sunk to 0-18 Sunday and stumbled closer to the worst losing streak in history as Bret Saberhagen pitched a six-hitter and the Kansas City Royals won 3-1.

The Orioles' slide is the longest in the majors since Washington dropped 18 straight in 1959 and tied the Senators for the fifth-longest in American League history.

The modern major league mark is 23, set by the Philadelphia Phillies in 1961, and the AL record is 20, done three times. The Orioles extended their record for season-opening defeats and their team mark for consecutive losses — not including five straight losses to end exhibition play.

Mark Thurmond, 0-4, winless in the majors since Aug. 26, 1986, kept the Orioles in a scoreless game until Kurt Stillwell hit a solo home run in the fifth inning. Stillwell, the ninth-place batter, singled home the winning run in the ninth inning Saturday in Kansas City's 4-3 victory.

Danny Tartabull hit a two-run homer in the sixth and Thurmond left later in the inning. Baltimore starters began the game 0-15 with a 7.12 earned run average.

The Orioles, outscored 114-34 this season, did not move a runner past second base until Cal Ripken homered with one out in the ninth. The Orioles entered the day as the poorest-hitting team in the majors, batting .199 overall and .118 with runners in scoring position.

Saberhagen, 2-2, finished for the first time in five starts, striking out four. He is 4-4 lifetime versus Baltimore, having gone 0-2 last year.

The Royals completed their second three-game sweep against the Orioles this season. Kansas City had lost five straight.

Baltimore needs to keep faith despite losing streak

Commentary

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

At least we're not in Baltimore.

Although the K-State baseball team struggled to get things going this weekend and was swept in a key Big Eight Conference baseball series with Missouri, the Wildcats' four-game slide is nothing compared with the 18-game dive from a cliff that the Baltimore Orioles have taken to open this Major League Baseball season.

The "Woes" limped into Kansas City this weekend for a series with the Royals, still looking for their first win in 1988.

Kansas City looked to be a good place for Baltimore to get well. The Royals had lost five straight prior to Friday night's series opener, then the second-longest current losing streak in the big leagues.

A nine-run outburst in the first inning of Friday night's contest set the tone for the series, which saw the Royals move back into second place in the American League West with a series sweep and saw Baltimore sink deeper and deeper into oblivion.

Those bad, bad Birds are now 14 games out of first place in the American League East, and there are still six days left in April.

Ouch.

"We can't hit, we can't pitch and we can't field," Orioles manager Frank Robinson said after Sunday's contest, a 3-1 win by the Royals in which Bret Saberhagen went the distance for K.C., allowing only Cal Ripken's solo, one-out ninth inning homer.

"I didn't want to be the first one to lose to these guys," Saberhagen said. "I dreamt about that last night."

It's safe to say that Saberhagen won't be having those same nightmares tonight. That he had them in the first place is a bit puzzling to begin with.

Baltimore has today off before opening a three-game series Tuesday against the Twins in Minnesota. The Twins, whose 61-25 record at the "Homerdome" — oops, make that the Metrodome — was the best home mark in the majors last year, will start staff aces Frank Viola and Bert Blyleven in the first two meetings.

The off-day couldn't have come at a better time, as far as Robinson is concerned.

"Maybe the off-day tomorrow (today) will help us," Robinson said after Sunday's loss. "We'll probably play an intrasquad game and wind up in a 0-0 tie."

Baltimore's recent futility has left the Orioles just five defeats short of the modern major league mark of 23, set by the 1961 Philadelphia Phillies. The American League record of 20 may fall in Minneapolis if the Birds aren't careful.

Why have the Orioles stumbled onto such hard times just five seasons after their World Championship year of 1983?

There are several reasons.

Age is probably the biggest factor. Baltimore starts 14-year veteran Fred Lynn in right field and has yet another veteran probably past his prime in Scott McGregor in the starting pitching rotation.

Disgruntled Orioles don't make things any better. First baseman Eddie Murray has openly stated for the last three years that he has no desire to play in Baltimore, and if the Orioles traded him, they'd probably be a lot better off.

A weak farm system is the thing that has played the biggest role in this slow, painful death, however.

The Orioles once had one of the most respected minor league systems in all of baseball. Whether it was pitchers like Jim Palmer or Mike Boddicker, infielders like Mark Belanger, Ripken or Murray, or outfielders like Al Bumbry or Paul Blair, the Baltimore farm system, year in and year out, consistently produced athletes who could produce at the big league level.

Not anymore.

What can be done to turn things around? For one, owner Edward Bennett Williams needs to keep his hands out of the baseball operation. Former Orioles general manager Hank Peters, fired by Williams in a front-office shakeup, is one of the most respected administrators in the big leagues, and was hired almost immediately by Cleveland. Reactionary tactics like firing Peters just won't get things solved.

General manager Roland Hemond needs to be given free reign to do what he thinks is necessary to turn things around. He made the first move 12 games ago by firing then-manager Cal Ripken Sr. and hiring Robinson. Though that move hasn't paid dividends as of yet, I doubt that even someone who could walk on water would have helped this team win a game.

What Hemond needs to do — and Baltimore fans are likely to choke on this suggestion — is trade Murray and Ripken. Murray has wanted out for three years, and what this team doesn't need now are anymore negatives than are already there.

Ripken is in the last year of his contract, and it's a definite possibility that he'll seek greener pastures following the season. If Baltimore wants to get anything in return, it better act fast. Baltimore likely could get a bushel of raw talent if it were to unload Murray and Ripken.

The city of Pittsburgh almost lost its major league baseball franchise when the Pirates began unloading veterans in an attempt to re-tool for the future, but the city and the team hung tough and have been rewarded with the best start by the Pirates in recent history to open the 1988 campaign.

Baltimore needs to follow suit and have faith that Williams won't take its baseball franchise and move it away overnight like Bob Irsay did with the Baltimore Colts' football franchise.

Patience is a virtue, and it's what Baltimore needs to exercise now. The Orioles have nothing left to lose — except maybe a few more games — and things really couldn't be much worse than they are now, could they?

MU sweeps 'Cats in four-game weekend series

By The Collegian Staff

A possible trip to the Big Eight Conference baseball tournament was on the line this weekend for the fourth- and fifth-place teams in the conference.

Missouri, 6-6, occupied the fourth-place position in the Big Eight before a four-game series with K-State, 5-7, the fifth-place team. Missouri increased its stock in earning the trip to the tournament.

The Tigers swept the 'Cats in four closely-contested games at Frank Myers Field. Friday, they earned a 12-8 decision. Saturday, they took a double-header, 5-3 and 5-4. And the Tigers outgunned K-State in a slugfest Sunday, 17-11.

With the losses, K-State's record falls to 26-17 overall and 5-11 in the conference. Missouri is 34-11 and 10-6.

"Nothing went right," K-State coach Mike Clark said of the series. "I'm disappointed we couldn't come out and play better. We have to go out and concentrate on our next ballgame. We have to try to get our game back in focus."

Sunday, the 'Cats blew two big leads in the game before losing.

In the second inning, the 'Cats took an early lead by putting four runs on the board behind Mike Rosenboom's two-run hit, a double by Jim Donohue and an RBI single by Sean Collins.

K-State was leading, 7-5, in the top of the seventh when the Tigers exploded for seven runs on just two hits. The 'Cats used four pitchers in the inning, committed two errors, threw a wild pitch and issued six walks as Mizzou started to pull away.

"You stress all season long to stop the big inning," Clark said. "Not to make critical mistakes, to make the team come out and beat you and not beat yourself. In the situation today, we beat ourselves."

The 'Cats pulled within two runs in the eighth, as they scored three runs on three singles. But a three-run homer by Tiger Bobby Tye in the top of the ninth put the game on ice for MU.

The 'Cats used a total of six pitchers in Sunday's loss. Control problems hampered the 'Cats' throwers, as they issued a total of 17 walks.

K-State had a chance to blow Saturday's first game open in the sixth inning, but that chance never materialized. Instead, the Tigers used a two-run homer by Tim Clark in the top of the seventh to take a 5-3 lead.

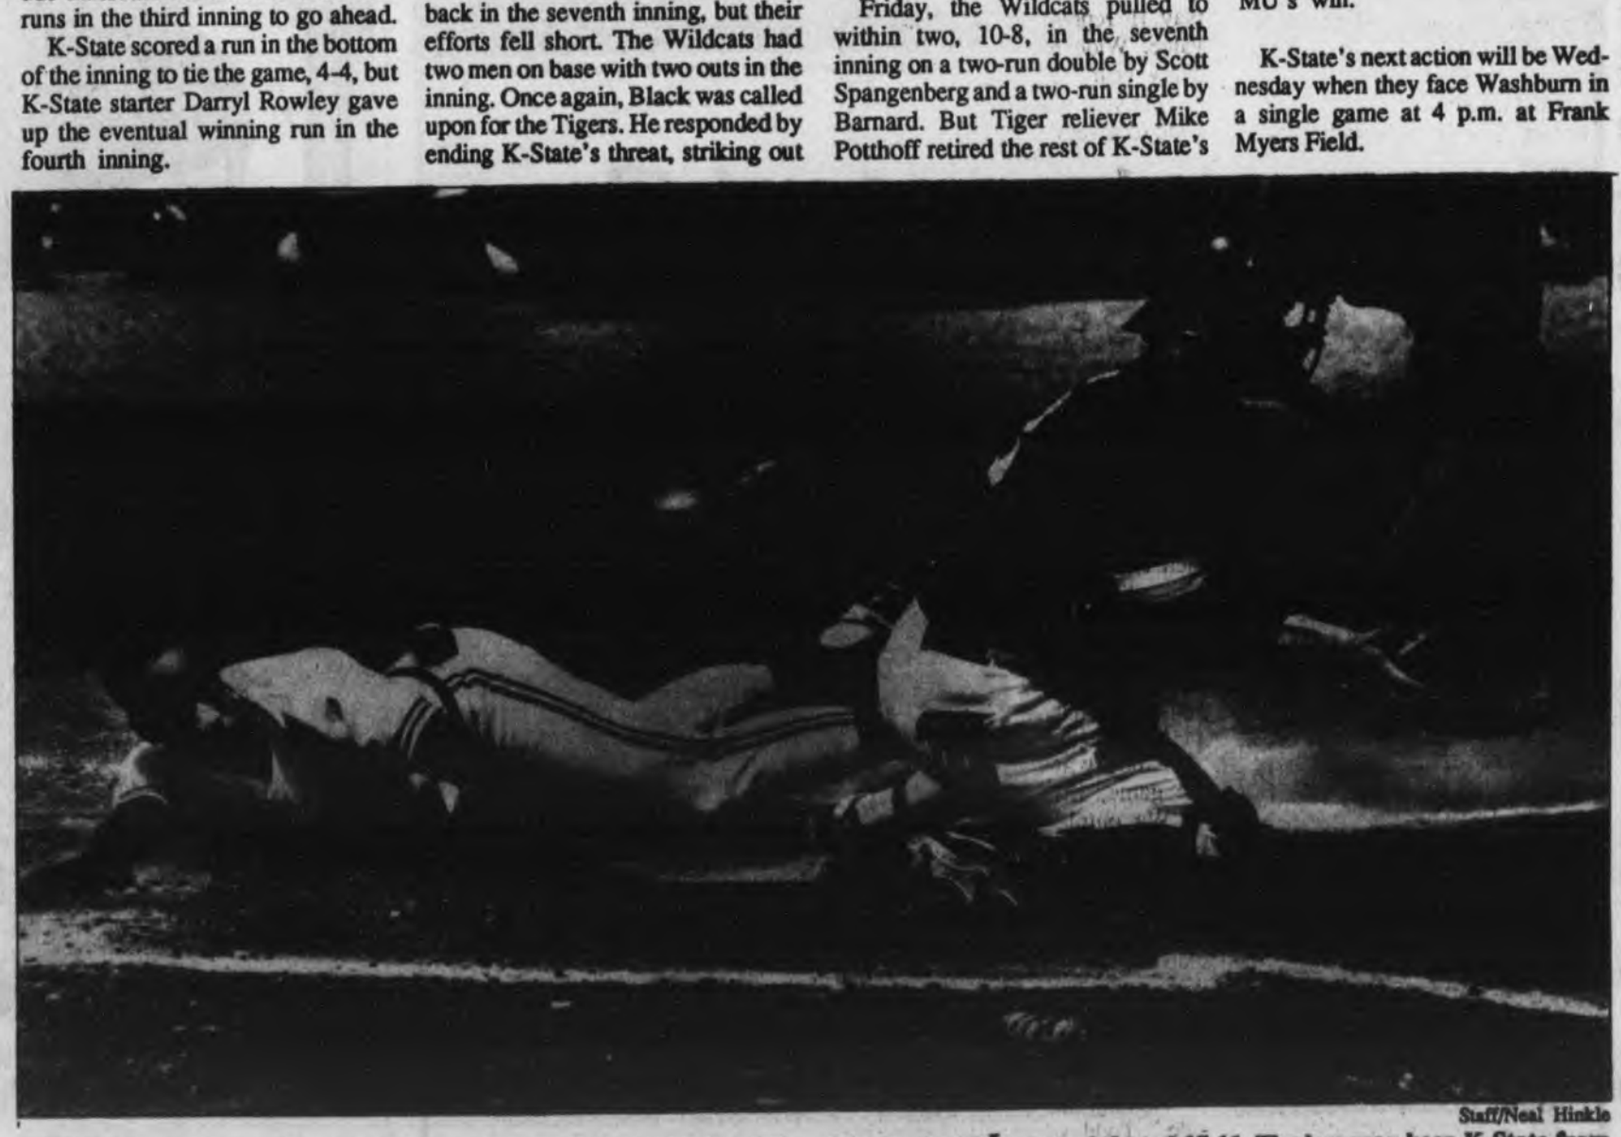
The 'Cats couldn't come back and gave Missouri the two-run win.

Missouri was leading in the fourth, 3-0, before K-State tied the score with two outs.

Jeff Hulse and Reese Beers singled in the inning, and Hulse scored on a double by Bill Barnard. Beers and Barnard scored on an error by the MU third baseman.

In the sixth, K-State loaded the bases with just one out. MU reliever Scott Black struck out Tony Braddock and enticed Sean Collins to ground out to third to end the threat.

Missouri also won the nightcap, 5-4.



K-State took a 3-0 lead early on, but Missouri rebounded with four runs in the third inning to go ahead.

K-State scored a run in the bottom of the inning to tie the game, 4-4, but K-State starter Darryl Rowley gave up the eventual winning run in the fourth inning.

The 'Cats tried to stage a comeback in the seventh inning, but their efforts fell short. The Wildcats had two men on base with two outs in the inning. Once again, Black was called upon for the Tigers. He responded by ending K-State's threat, striking out Beers.

Friday, the Wildcats pulled to within two, 10-8, in the seventh inning on a two-run double by Scott Spangenberg and a two-run single by Barnard. But Tiger reliever Mike Potthoff retired the rest of K-State's hitters in the game and preserved MU's win.

K-State's next action will be Wednesday when they face Washburn in a single game at 4 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

Staff/Neal Hinkle
K-State's Sean Collins slides across home plate a split-second before Missouri's catcher gets the ball. Despite two commanding leads over the Tigers, the 'Cats were defeated 17-11. The loss may keep K-State from competing in the Big Eight Conference tournament in May.

Feminists participate in weekend conference

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

The feminist movement has survived "eight very gloomy years" of the present White House administration, author Barbara Ehrenreich said Friday in opening the Midwest Women's Studies Association conference.

The conference, which continued through Saturday, attracted more than 175 participants.

Feminists have defeated the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Robert Bork as well as the Human Life Amendment and the Family Protection Act, Ehrenreich said. She cited a Gallup Poll conducted earlier this year that stated 56 percent of American women identify themselves as feminists, and only 4 percent identify themselves as anti-feminists.

Feminists have also survived the so-called "man shortage," she said.

"This was a clever scheme to convince heterosexual women that they ought to be happy with whatever they can get," Ehrenreich said.

"Of course there is no man shortage at all," she said. "You can look at the Senate or the House of Representatives to see that there is actually a 'man excess' in this country."

Ehrenreich called for women's studies representatives to take "the treasure of feminist scholarship to the general community.

"The next generation of feminists will not be all college educated, will not be all scholars, and will not be all white and all middle class," Ehrenreich said. "So the question is, what are we doing to open up the doors of the academy to the excluded?"

One group that has taken its message beyond college campuses is Women Against Racism, a group of students, faculty and community members from Iowa City, Iowa, said Papusa Molina. Instructors Molina and Mary Janell Metzger conducted two sessions for participants to examine their own prejudices and to realize that "we are all at one time the oppressed and at another time the oppressor."

For example, a Latin woman with a doctorate would be a member of the oppressed because of her ethnic heritage and sex. At the same time, she would be an oppressor, because her higher level of education gives her privileges that other people less educated might not have.

"Once we recognize our privileges, we have the power in us to change things," Molina said.

A conference participant who has been working to change things since the 1960s was Kaye Yoder. The 71-year-old is the president of the McPherson chapter of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and has been a peace activist since childhood.

Yoder was one of 64 protesters detained at Wichita's McConnell Air Force Base in February in a passive protest against the arrival of B-1B bombers. She was arrested on a charge of unlawfully entering a military installation and faces a fine of $100 or five days in jail.

Yoder, who doesn't consider herself a radical and is very active in her church, said the United States "has to change its perspective. The rich are getting richer and the poor are becoming poorer."

Poverty was an issue apparent in both performances by the "Split Britches Theatre Company" in Nichols Theatre. The feminist actors targeted that issue along with politics, racism and sexism in their comedic performances.

The conference ended Saturday evening with a dance at the Ecumenical Christian Ministries Building.

Play focuses on women's isolation

Audience lacks men

By Carrie A. Miller
Contributing Writer

"Split Britches," one of the two pieces presented this weekend by the feminist theater group of the same name, was well-received by its enthusiastic but seemingly narrow audience.

Play Review

The play was written by the entire troupe. Cynthia Baker manages the group, which includes Joni Wong, the troupe's lighting designer and technician, and the three actresses — Peggy Shaw, Lois Weaver and Deborah Margolin.

Their characters in "Split Britches" are Della Mae, Cora Jane and Emma Gay Gearheart, respectively.

Set in Franklin County in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia during the 1930s, this piece was a humorous portraiture of three of Weaver's female relatives who lived during this time.

In fact, the action and dialogue are contained within an innovative framework of family slides, set up and explained by Weaver. The effects are hilarious, as the actresses move in the darkness of a moving slide projector and then freeze in one humorous pose after another.

"Split Britches" is a look at women who are trying to cope with their separate yet collective isolation. For this reason, it does not tell one story, but many stories.

Emma Gay is an elderly woman who has been a nanny most of her life. Her part is played with humorous senility by Margolin.

Cora Jane, who is marginally retarded, has never found a man. She tells a story of one who came to her window to kiss her. The only thing that ever comes of it, however, is that she goes the next day to obliterate his footprints in the snow — so she wouldn't get a "bad reputation."

Della Mae, the third and most dominant character, takes care of the other two. She was driven from her job and life in town by the men who mocked her mannish looks and the women who sought to protect their daughters from her when she began to seek the company of women instead. Della's lesbian nature is revealed to the audience when she is alone onstage.

In this scene, her bitterness is revealed in a twist of the "coming out of the closet" cliche. Della seems to take off her closet, article by article of clothing which she is wearing layered to keep warm, until she stands in her men's long underwear and boots.

With each piece, we get a bit more of Della's history, marked by her mistreatment on account of her sex, and her sexual preference.

In another scene, or "slide," the repression of women in this time period is evidenced in Della's dream of flying an airplane. The other two urge her to give it up and come down from the clouds. Her theme is "I ain't never comin' down."

While the play did have some clever insight into the problems of women, it took no great pains to offer it to those who might best benefit from seeing it. The audience was all but barren of men. The group bills itself as "the professional theatre company with fire in their pockets." They assert that they are a feminist troupe, with two lesbian members.

I personally have nothing against this, or a little truth in advertising for that matter. I also have no quarrel with the play itself. It's tough, funny and meaningful. However, if the group's intention is to gain support for its views, or even to get people to take a closer look, trying to appeal to a wider audience would certainly be in order. From talking to people who knew the play was being performed, I gathered that the majority of people were turned off by the word "feminist," not to mention the word "lesbian."

Consumer Week features service

By Candise Leonard
Contributing Writer

Good service may be hard to find, but it's something more consumers are looking for with their purchases today.

"In fact, businesses are realizing that customer service can be the key to beating the competition," said Joyce Cantrell, instructor of human development and family studies. "Consumers appreciate good service and the businesses that pay attention to it will profit."

In recognition of the importance of the consumer to the American economy, President Reagan has selected the theme "Consumers Buy Service" for this year's National Consumers Week.

Reagan has proclaimed the seventh annual event for Arpil 24-30, and he urged "consumers, businesses, educators, community organizations, the media and government agencies to help further the public's awareness of its rights as a consumer in the marketplace."

As part of the observance, the Consumer Relations Board will have a table in the K-State Union today through Wednesday with information on consumer rights.

"Especially during this week, the CRB wants to inform people at K-State by offering free pamphlets, brochures and advice to them," Cantrell said. "These are the types of things the student workers do each day at the CRB, but we want to let more people know about our services."

Play features action, control

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

"Romeo and Juliet," which just might be the most popular play ever written or performed, is a story of romance and tragedy which has been told a million times in a million different ways.

Trying to pull off a successful production of this show is like telling a joke to an audience which has already heard the punch line. The success of the production hinges on inventiveness, originality and a dynamic delivery, and K-State Players' performance had all of these qualities.

Play Review

Just a few minutes into the production, the stage was filled with Montagues and Capulets discussing their mutual hatred while engaging in a bit of street fighting.

Only a few feet away from a wide-eyed audience, swords clashed and bodies flew through the air. All of this action was tied together by an ever-present thread of professionalism and control.

On this stage, every actor who handled a sword or threw a punch did so in a professional and realistic manner. Each "fighter" and fight director J. R. Beardsley deserve a pat on the back for helping to create the most realistic action I have ever seen on a K-State stage.

During the physically energetic beginning, dialogue was difficult to understand. Some of this confusion can be attributed to our 20th century brains trying to comprehend classical verse, but even after becoming adjusted to the language there were instances when the actors didn't seem to understand what they were saying.

The production contained a surprising number of sexual gestures, which do have their place in a Shakespearean play, but it seems unnecessary for an explicit pelvic thrust to accompany every line which contains the word "thrust."

There were many other characters besides the two lovers who contributed to the play's success. Matthew Mazur, a sophomore in theater, created a strong character in Capulet. He played the older man with realistic maturity and was one of the actors who was comfortable with the Shakespearean verse.

Friar Laurence was played by Thomas McLaughlin, graduate student in theater, who turned in a quality performance highlighted by a stylish delivery of verse and a relaxed stage presence.

Mark Hetrick, junior in theater, and Geoffrey Kaufman, senior in education, turned their energies and abilities into the most entertaining performances of the evening. Hetrick played Tybalt, the hateful, combatant leader of the Capulet gang. Kaufman combined with Hetrick for some of the best stage combat in the show. Kaufman's character was full of energy, and he handled the Shakespearean verse like a veteran of the stage.

Skip Grizzel, freshman in English; Roger Burns, freshman in radio-television; and Lara Dillinger, sophomore in education, also turned in solid performances.

Dwight Tolar, junior in applied music, and Tamara Grothaus, sophomore in music-theater played the lead roles of Romeo and Juliet. Tolar and Grothaus have devoted a large amount of time to K-State productions this semester.

Earlier in the season they were cast opposite one another in the production of "To Gillian on Her 37th Birthday." In "Romeo and Juliet," Tolar and Grothaus appeared to be comfortable with one another both emotionally and physically.

Grothaus creates Juliet with a conflicting mix of adult passion and adolescent emotion. Her portrayal was intense, but she avoided pushing this role to the point of over-dramatization.

Tolar was faced with a tremendously difficult role. He seemed to struggle with the Shakespearean dialect. At times his delivery was both rushed and breathy. His delivery might have been an attempt to emphasize Romeo's youth, but it served as a distraction from Tolar's otherwise excellent performance.

Tolar's character possessed a genuine innocence which served as a reminder that this person with the body of a man was still a boy.

The dual suicide of these two young lovers was an effective climax as the intensity of the scene was so great that the two lifeless bodies held the focus of the audience, even after the two families stumbled onto the scene.

The set was creatively designed and structurally sound. Director Charlotte MacFarland did an excellent job of blocking this huge cast on the many different levels of this set, as well as coordinating the show.

Week of activities promotes greek life

By The Collegian Staff

Saturday night concluded K-State's Greek Week activities, which are designed to promote camaraderie and increase awareness about greek organizations.

Mary Vanier, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said the sororities and fraternities that participated were divided into four groups for the events.

The overall winner was Group 3, composed of the Kappa Kappa Gamma, Alpha Chi Omega and Kappa Alpha Theta sororities and the Phi Kappa Tau, Phi Gamma Delta, Sigma Phi Epsilon, Theta Xi and Triangle fraternities.

The week began with a leadership banquet that included members of the Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils and the Order of Omega, a greek honorary, Vanier said.

Throughout the week, greek members participated in events such as the game of Pictionary and a knee volleyball tournament, she said.

"Friday was Aggie Day — all events were held in Aggieville," Vanier said. Events included a dance marathon, a swing dance, a pizza-eating contest, a lip-sync contest and an obstacle course in the park.

Greek Follies ended the activities Saturday night as sorority and fraternity members performed 20-minute skits designed to promote greek life, said Scott Giersch, Follies chairman and senior in animal sciences and industry.

A panel of four judges determined the winner of the Follies based on factors such as characters, acting and use of props, he said.

"The program is also a way to show possible recruits what greek life is all about," Giersch said.

Besides winning overall honors, Group 3 also won the Follies.

Rapist finishes parole

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A man who raped and savagely mutilated a teenage girl nine years ago will finish his parole Monday, paying his legal debt in full. But it's unlikely the crime will ever stop dogging him or haunting his victim.

"I never live in the past," Lawrence Singleton, 60, said in a recent television interview. But he continually argues that he was innocent, and public outrage follows him wherever he goes.

"I'll never get over this," says Mary Vincent. Singleton hacked off her forearms with an ax on Sept. 29, 1978, and left her for dead in Stanislaus County, east of San Francisco.

Acquaintances say both convict and victim feel oppressed by the public's continued interest in them; neither would consent to an interview.

Vincent, who lives in seclusion in the Pacific Northwest, has said in published interviews that her fear has been revived by Singleton's impending freedom.

Parole officials and Singleton's friends are concerned about his safety wherever he tries to settle. When he was released a year ago on parole, furious protests followed him from town to town when state officials tried to find a place for him to live. He wound up in a mobile home on the grounds of San Quentin prison, and last week officials moved him to an undisclosed location.

"Here's a girl who lost her arms and will never get them back, and here's the guy who did it. He got 14 years and he's out in eight," said Stanislaus County District Attorney Donald Stahl, who prosecuted Singleton.

"There ain't no justice — it's the thing I hear over and over and over from everyone," he said.

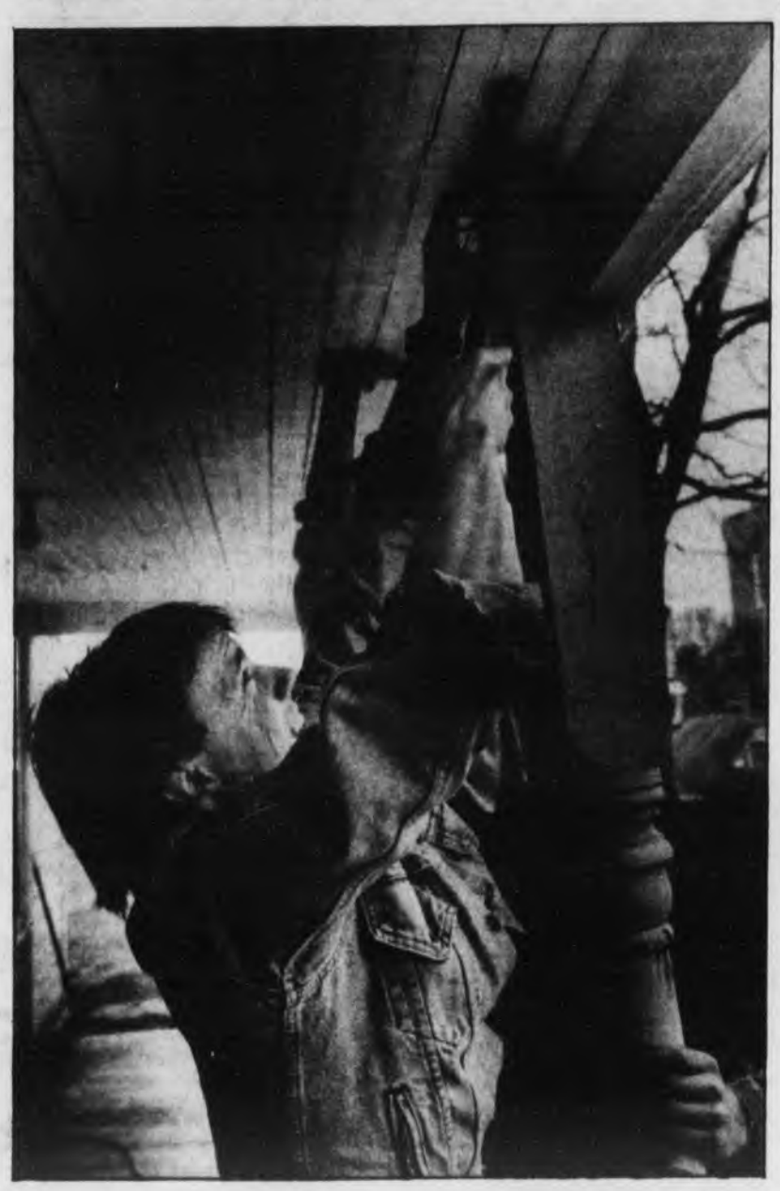
makes it difficult for the hall to meet its operating expenses.

Although long-range enrollment predictions show a growing need for residence hall rooms, Krause said he would rather not see a new, large-scale hall, but would rather see the renovation of the building.

Frith suggested that as an alternative, an addition might be built onto Van Zile, possibly connecting it with Boyd and Putnam halls.

Frith said connecting the halls would add rooms and allow Van Zile to serve as a central administrative building for the three halls, rather than having individual administration for each. The added rooms would solve the need for more residence hall space and make all three halls more economically efficient.



Frith also said a renovation involving Boyd and Putnam halls would allow some needed improvements to be made in those halls at the same time.

Garvin said his office would begin studying the possibility of renovation or addition to Van Zile and report back to the council in about one month.

LEFT: Scott Pashman, junior in construction science, works on a porch post on a house Saturday in Barnes, Kan., 60 miles northwest of Manhattan. The post was removed and the rotted ends cut off and replaced. About 50 K-State students painted, made repairs and did yard work in the community of about 250 as part of the Community Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort. The project gives students a chance to learn the rewards gained from volunteering and to assist in aiding the rural crisis in Kansas. ABOVE: Volunteers replace a roof. The volunteers, consisting of the SAVE group and citizens of Barnes and the surrounding area, performed tasks such as painting and repairing an old schoolhouse to be used for a meeting hall, yard work and outdoor house repair for several of the older residents and cleaning up the city park.

President Jon Wefald listens to Speaker of the House Jim Wright tell an audience of 1,220 that the trade bill passed Thursday by the U.S. House of Representatives provides "the rules and the tools and the schools to make us number one." Wright delivered the 79th Landon Lecture Monday.

Wright neutral in political race

By Jeffrey J. Bielser
News Editor

In a press conference preceding his Landon Lecture Monday, U.S. Speaker of the House Jim Wright said he believes Jesse Jackson would be a valuable vice presidential candidate for the Democrats.

However, Wright, D-Texas, insisted he's neutral in the race between Jackson and Gov. Michael Dukakis for the party's presidential nomination.

He said Jackson has shown a great amount of maturing since his 1984 presidential bid.

"Jesse Jackson has demonstrated a very broad appeal," Wright said. "Jackson talks to people where they live.

"I certainly wouldn't rule him out. I just think he's earned a right to be considered for some of our highest offices."

Although he acknowledged that Dukakis is the front-runner, Wright wouldn't predict the outcome of the race. But he said the Democrats probably won't have a brokered convention when they meet this July in Atlanta.

In his lecture, Wright told about 1,220 people in McCain Auditorium that America is neither ready for nor destined to achieve mediocrity. Wright's lecture, "International Trade," was the 79th Landon Lecture on Public Issues.

"(Mediocrity) is not our destiny — we don't have to settle for second best," he said. "As a nation, we're as big as our dreams, as strong as our values.

"America doesn't have to settle for just fair. We never have."

Wright, who has served 17 consecutive terms in Congress, was House majority leader for 10 years before being elected speaker after Rep. Tip O'Neill of Massachusetts retired in 1986.

Wright said he believes the United States can improve its competitiveness abroad by improving international trade. This will result in an improved standard of living in the United States, he said.

A trade bill passed Thursday by the House provides "the rules and the tools and the schools to make us No. 1" in the world market, Wright said.

"We're asking that other countries treat our goods on their markets the same way that we treat their goods on ours," Wright said of the bill.

The "rules" portion of the bill asks that international trade allow for equal competition for all countries, he said.

"We're suggesting that the time has come for all nations of the world (that) engage in trade, (to) respect the products of one another, and not use them as battering rams to tear down the economies of one another," Wright said.

The "tools" of the trade bill will help make America competitive in

Israeli court orders death sentence for 'Ivan'

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — A judge sentenced John Demjanjuk on Monday to die for Nazi war crimes and said the retired Ohio autoworker personally killed tens of thousands of people as the sadistic death camp guard "Ivan the Terrible."

Hundreds of spectators jumped to their feet and applauded. Some shouted "Bravo!" and others "Death! Death!" Survivors of the Holocaust, in which 6 million Jews were killed, cried and embraced each other.

Judge Zvi Tal said Demjanjuk's crimes at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland could "never be forgiven by the hearts of men or be obliterated from memory. ... The blood of the victims still cries out to us."

"Ivan the Terrible" operated the gas chambers at Treblinka, where 850,000 Jews were killed in 1942-43. Demjanjuk was convicted last week.

The judge, who was born in Poland and lost his parents in the Holocaust, said Demjanjuk "served as an arch henchman who with his own hands killed tens of thousands of human beings. He humiliated and degraded his victims."

Minutes before the sentence was read, Demjanjuk shouted in Hebrew: "I'm an innocent man!"

Demjanjuk, 68, was in a wheelchair because of back problems. He is a Ukrainian Orthodox Christian and crossed himself repeatedly and muttered, apparently in prayer.

The 14-month trial in a converted movie theater was only the second in Israel of someone charged with Nazi crimes. More than 250,000 people attended and sessions were broadcast live on radio and television.

Adolf Eichmann, who directed Adolf Hitler's program for exterminating Jews, was tried in Israel and hanged in 1962. He is the only person to have been executed in Israel since it bedcame a nation in 1948.

Court spokesman Yossi Hassin said Demjanjuk also probably would be executed by hanging "if the sentence is upheld on appeal."

John Demjanjuk Jr., the defendant's 22-year-old son, sobbed silently.

Supreme Court splits on civil rights case

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A deeply split Supreme Court said Monday it will consider throwing out a key civil rights decision used to fight racial discrimination.

By a 5-4 vote, the justices took the unusual step of expanding the scope of a North Carolina racial-harassment case to consider limiting the ability of minorities to sue private citizens for monetary damages.

Critics said the announcement could have a major psychological impact on minorities, raising fears that a newly solidified conservative majority on the court is willing to consider dismantling other civil rights victories.

In other action, the court:

■ Turned away the first "dial-a-porn" case ever to reach it, letting stand a ban on sexually explicit telephone message services in Arizona.

■ Agreed to decide whether wardens of federal prisons should have sweeping power to say what publications inmates may read.

The court said it will use the racial-harasssment case as a vehicle to weigh overturning a 1976 ruling that expanded the right of minorities to sue over alleged discrimination.

Justice John Paul Stevens, in a sharply worded dissent, said minority groups may feel betrayed by the court's willingness to consider discarding an important civil rights precedent.

He said the action is unwise activism and will "have a detrimental and enduring impact on the public's perception of the court as an impartial adjudicator."

He was joined by Justices William J. Brennan, Harry A. Blackmun and Thurgood Marshall.

In a separate dissenting opinion, Blackmun said, "I am at a loss to understand the motiviation of five members of this court to reconsider an interpretation of a civil rights statute that so clearly relfects our society's earnest commitment to ending racial discrimination and in which Congress so evidently has acquiesced."

The court's majority said the dissenters were making it sound like the court was overturning the 1976 decision.

"We have, of course, done no such thing," the unsigned order issued by the majority said. "It is surely no affront to settled jurisprudence to request argument on whether a particular precedent should be modified or overruled."

The North Carolina case, argued last Feb. 29, now will be held over until the court's next term beginning in October. A ruling is likely in 1989.

Voting to rehear the case were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White, Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.

Sororities to limit drinking

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to decrease underage drinking at sorority parties, the Panhellenic Council passed a Pre-Party Registration form proposal at its meeting Monday night.

"It's not anything drastic — it just ensures party preparation, (and reduces) liability and risk potential," said Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser.

The regulation will require sororities to fill out a registration form prior to a party and will also require members and dates 21 years old or older to wear wristbands at the parties.

Nine out of the 12 sororities voted in favor of the proposal, two voted against it and one sorority was not represented.

"It was a house decision," said Filza Hassan, junior in architectural engineering and Panhellenic representative of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, which voted against the proposal. "We wanted to be able to justify our vote for others who will be coming in after us."

The Thetas did a lot of research on the proposal, Hassan said. However, they were concerned about the possibility of two sororities having a party together and the potential conflict of women from one sorority enforcing rules on the other sorority's members.

Despite the Thetas' opposition to the regulation, Hassan said the members will follow its guidelines.

"We know now everyone is going to work really hard to make this work," she said. "This is something that will be with us a long time."

Sororities that don't fill out the Panhellenic Pre-Party Registration will be subject to the following sanctions:

■ The first time a registration is turned in late will result in a warning. The second time will result in a $50 fine, and the third time will cost the sorority $100.

■ If the registration is not turned in, there will be a $50 fine the first time and a $100 fine the second time.

■ If the regulation is violated in any way, such as if no security guard is present or if underage people are seen wearing wristbands, a formal complaint will result in an investigation to be conducted by the Panhellenic Executive Council. If the sorority is

Engineering magazine wins award

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

K-State's engineering magazine has been awarded second place in the National Engineering Magazines Associated annual contest.

The award was given in the Best Single Issue category for the December 1987 issue of the Kansas State Engineer. Marshall Henley, senior in nuclear engineering, was the fall semester's editor.

Every university that publishes an engineering magazine participates in the national contest held April 16, said Su Bacon, engineering extension editor. Bacon is responsible for emphasizing journalistic styles to the engineering students and selling advertising for the magazine.

The Engineer publishes technical and feature stories, Bacon said. While the technical stories do not require the writer to actually complete research, technical articles that have been written include cold nuclear fusion and the solid-state laboratory in the basement of Durland.

"The features address the more practical application of engineering," Bacon said.

In the December issue, one feature focused on the concept of "imagineering" as it applied to Worlds of Fun in Kansas City, Mo.

The "imagineering" — combination of imagination and engineering — concept included how the initial idea of the amusement park is formed, and the layout and safety measures taken in constructing the park.

The student writer for this article was required to interview the engineers in Kansas City who designed Worlds of Fun, Bacon said. A picture of a rollercoaster at the park was shown on the cover of the magazine.

The staff is composed of 14 undergraduate engineering students who are enrolled in the magazine production class. Most of the students receive one hour of credit for the class.

The magazine is partially funded by the Student Governing Association, with the remaining costs covered through advertising. National and local advertisers support the magazine.

The K-State Engineer has been in print since 1915 and has won almost 30 national awards in the last 10 years, Bacon said.

Judge warns Iran-Contra attorneys

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The judge in the Iran-Contra case barred defense testimony Monday at a pretrial hearing because lawyers for retired Marine Lt. Col. Oliver L. North and two co-defendants violated the ground rules of the proceeding.

Before beginning a hearing on whether Independent Counsel Lawrence E. Walsh impermissibly used the compelled congressional testimony of the three defendants, U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell sternly warned North, former national security adviser John M. Poindexter and businessman Albert Hakim about complying with his orders.

Since lawyers for the three defendants did not give Walsh's office timely notice of the testimony it proposed to submit at the hearing, Gesell said the defense would not be able to present a witness.

"The independent counsel complied with the letter to the order, the defense ignored the order" and "decided to engage in some kind of outreach program," the judge said, referring to defense attempts on Friday to subpoena documents from Walsh's office.

Gesell stayed the subpoenas 45 minutes after they were served on Walsh and eight members of his staff.

Gesell reminded the defendants that under the rules of criminal procedure he had "exclusive responsibility" to conduct the trial and pretrial proceedings.

K-State may have to pay waste site fee

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

K-State is only a small contributer to a Florida dumpsite that has to be cleaned up, according to the University's attorney.

The University received a form letter Feb. 29 from the Environmental Protection Agency stating that carcinogenic transformers removed from campus six years ago by American Electric Corp. were taken to Yellow Water Road waste site in northern Florida.

American Electric Corp. of Jacksonville, Fla., has since gone bankrupt, and any parties who contributed to the waste site could have to pay $700,000 for the site's cleanup, the letter said.

K-State is among hundreds of companies who could be potentially responsible for the cleanup, said Dorothy Thompson, assistant University attorney. In response to the letter, University officials requested information from the EPA on other potentially responsible parties.

"Our contribution is miniscule in relation to the other parties," Thompson said.

K-State had 31 transformers containing a carcinogen — polychlorinated bi-phenyl compounds, PCBs — removed from the campus in 1982. Of those, three were disposed of at Yellow Water, contributing a total of 198 gallons of waste. This is a small amount compared to other parties' contributions, Thompson said.

The February letter was notifying the second "wave" of potentially responsible parties, she said. The EPA notified the first group of parties two or three years ago.

The second group was based on information found in American Electric Corp. records, Thompson said. The list of other parties responsible includes multi-national corporations and municipalities, but only a few colleges and universities, she said.

Last month, George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, said K-State has been working carefully under EPA guidelines to remove all PCB-contaminated transformers from campus.

The University paid $7,000 to American Electric Corp. to remove the transformers, and the company was licensed by the EPA to transport and remove hazardous waste, Miller said.

Thompson said in March that while the University is willing to cooperate, it must also be concerned with its defense.

"As a state supported institution of higher education we have the desire to cooperate in environmental protection activities, while at the same time reserving all of our legal defenses," she said.

3 sailors still missing after sub explosion

By The Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — One of the Navy's last diesel-electric submarines wallowed helpless on the surface Monday awaiting a salvage vessel after an underwater explosion and toxic fire injured 22 sailors and left three missing.

The 30-year-old USS Bonefish, its remaining crew evacuated to shore bases, floated alongside the frigate USS McCloy about 160 miles off Florida, said Chief Petty Officer Terry D. Borton, a spokesman at Atlantic Fleet headquarters in Norfolk.

There was no apparent danger that the submarine, which carries only conventional weapons, would sink, he said.

"The decision made was that no one goes aboard" until a specialized submarine rescue ship, the USS Petrel, arrived later in the day, Borton said.

Specialists on the Petrel, based at Charleston, S.C., with the Bonefish, "will make an assessment when it is safe to board the Bonefish. They have the expertise and the equipment to test the toxicity of the air" inside the boat, said Lt. Fred Henney, another fleet spokesman.

It was not known if the missing men were aboard the sub.

USDA grant fuels clean grain study

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

Because grain-cleaning equipment directly determines grain quality, the importance of that equipment is increasingly being recognized for gaining an advantage in the competitive world market, according to Do Sup Chung, professor of agricultural engineering.

With the help of a $160,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, a study involving six K-State faculty members is being conducted to analyze the effectiveness of three newly developed laboratory models of grain-cleaning equipment.

The project is a cooperative effort by the Department of Agricultural Engineering, the Department of Grain Science and Industry, and the U.S. Grain Marketing Research Laboratory, Chung said.

A system called the Dockage Tester is currently used to clean grain, Chung said. The system, however, leaves residue in the grain, which causes the grain to be downgraded and to break down easily during storage.

"After they clean the grain with the Dockage Tester, the grain still isn't as clean as it could be," Chung said. "There is dust and particles in with the grain that could damage it (during storage)."

Since January, work on the project has included obtaining European lab models and experimental equipment, as well as performing tests on equipment currently being used by federal inspectors, he said.

"With testing procedures that are capable of better accuracy in the quality rating of grains, prices can be determined to coincide with the measured quality ranges," he said.

The idea of improved grain cleaners has come to the attention of Kansas legislators.

"Congressman (Jim) Slattery (D-Kan.) is introducing a bill that would make the Commodity Credit Corp. pay a premium for clean grain. It would reward producers who do a better job of cleaning their grain," Chung said.

"This would put us in a more competitive position with world grain-market sellers such as Canada and Australia," he said.

Investigators with Chung on the project are Charles Spillman, professor of agricultural engineering; Harry Converse and Steven Eckhoff, associate professors of agricultural engineering; and Elieser Posner, associate professor of grain science and industry. Also involved is Chul Rhee of Korea University, who is at K-State on an exchange program.

K-State's art useless unless it's displayed

No matter how skillful the artist is, no matter what the subject matter is, art will have no impact on anyone if it is not displayed.

That is the predicament which faces most of K-State's permanent art collection. Although some of the pieces are displayed in various places on campus, there is no place on campus to adequately display the entire collection.

Nor is there any place on campus with the necessary security and environmental conditions to display even part of the permanent collection's more valuable pieces.

One solution to this problem that quickly comes to mind is to build an art museum on campus. And, in fact, efforts are under way to raise the money needed to build an art museum.

But the financial situation at K-State is already strained, and an optimistic view is that construction of the building will not begin for several years.

In the meantime, something should be done so that K-State's artwork does more than sit and gather dust. Although it is impossible to display the entire collection, a way should be found to display at least part of the permanent collection in a place where the public can easily view the works.

If even a small area on campus could be remodeled — to meet the security and environmental needs required for part of the collection — then the works could be displayed on a rotating basis, so that in time the entire collection would have been displayed publicly.

There are, of course, problems with such a plan — namely, finding both the space to display the works and the funding to remodel the space once it is found. But such problems need to be overcome.

Artwork is useless unless people can see it, and at this point K-State has an extensive collection of useless artwork.

Wright gives Lectures some renewed spirit

There is hope.

After a less-than-inspiring Landon Lecture in February by associate justice of the Supreme Court Sandra Day O'Connor, it became a concern that the Landon Lectures were becoming notable not for their content but simply for their speakers. After all, O'Connor's lecture was nothing more than an extended history lesson that offered few insights.

However, all of that changed Monday when U.S. Speaker of the House Jim Wright came to town. Wright, D-Texas, used his time to address current issues with which everybody should be concerned, notably efforts to improve the U.S. position in the world trade market.

What made Wright's speech especially timely is that the House Thursday passed a bill that will provide what he termed "the rules and the tools and the schools to make us No. 1" in the world market.

Organizers of the Landon Lecture Series should be commended for selecting Wright.

Easing parole guidelines answer to overcrowding

The crime rate in Kansas has held nearly steady since 1981; however, the state's prison population has grown by almost 3,000 prisoners.

The reason for these seemingly contradictory facts is that, even though the same number of people are going into the prison system, a smaller number are getting out on parole.

A person committing a robbery today will spend more than two years in prison — almost twice as long as they would have served in 1983. That the parole board is stiffening the penalties for all types of crime is a reflection of the attitudes of the citizens of Kansas.

And even though it is a legitimate decision for Kansans to want criminals to spend a longer time in prison, there are consequences following that decision which must be addressed. The most pressing of those consequences is prison overcrowding.

The prison system in this state is already holding approximately 1,500 more people than its designed maximum capacity. Even if the 700-bed prison that has been proposed is actually built, the problem of overcrowding will still remain.

The fact of the matter is that unless people are willing to pay substantially higher taxes to build several more new prisons, more inmates will have to be released on parole — and considering the likelihood of people being unwilling to pay more taxes, there seems to be only one option left.

Recognizing this problem, the parole board must start granting more paroles. These should be especially concentrated on first offenders, inmates who have committed non-violent crimes, and prisoners who have shown good behavior.

Also, the correctional system needs to continue its effort to improve the education of the inmates. Forty percent of Kansas' prisoners have less than a fourth-grade education.

By improving the education of the inmates, the chances are better that they will not return to prison again — which not only benefits the prisoner and society but also helps to cut down on overcrowding.

Increase in world's population demands immediate solutions

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

Consider the following:

■ According to the non-profit Population Institute based in Washington D.C., there are more than 5 billion people in the world today, 80 percent of whom live in countries considered overpopulated.

■ In 1987 alone, 15 million infants younger than 1 year old died at the rate of approximately 42,000 each day — many because their mothers did not allow appropriate intervals between pregnancies.

■ As early as 2020, the combined populations of Africa and Asia will number between 6 billion and 8 billion people, at least 1 billion more than the entire world's population today.

■ Approximately 1,400 women die every day due to complications from pregnancy and abortion, a significant number of which could be avoided through efficient family planning.

These facts may not be startling to some, but many people may consider them sensationalistic or blown out of proportion. The sad truth is, however, that all of the statements are true — and there remain facts much worse that are still relatively unknown to the public.

Last week was World Population Awareness Week. More than 110 members of the U.S. House of Representatives sponsored a bill urging observance of the week by all Americans, and more than 200 colleges and universities conducted lectures and seminar discussions of world population issues. In addition, libraries and schools throughout the country displayed posters and exhibits highlighting challenges to reduce the astronomical population growth in the most humane manners possible.

And what was the University's involvement during this week?

None.

But Kansas is not unlike most of the rest of the country. While some government figures and certain institutions of higher learning have shown interest in tackling the problem of world population, such action has not been echoed on a national level. But is that surprising in a nation which in 1987 spent $220 million on family-planning programs? That breaks down to approximately 91 cents per person, while in the same year, our government spent $6.9 billion (30 times the first amount) to build to two new aircraft carriers.

If the United States, one of the richest and most well-developed nations in the world, creates such a discrepancy in its priorities, what of the rest of the world? What of a world in which 90 percent of the incredible growth in population takes place in developing nations which cannot even manage to feed all the people alive today?

With a planet of more than 5 billion individuals doubling in numbers within the next 40 years, does it not seem astonishing that there seems to be very litle effort, on the part of the people as a whole, to combat this population explosion?

Werner Fornos, president of the Population Institute, said the massive proliferation of humans is placing an unbearable strain on our global environment. With most of the growth occurring in Third World countries — which are the least able to accommodate such numbers — their ability to provide food, shelter, education, employment and basic health services is being increasingly overwhelmed. As a result, their social, cultural and political stability is being threatened and undermined.

Consider the unrest in the African continent, where internal as well as external pressures contribute to countless crises. Today the continent's population is approximately 585 million. How can the situation improve when, by 2025, the population will be three times larger?

Or what of a nation such as Egypt, which has more than 47 million people and a major role in Middle East politics? How will a nation with the economic problems Egypt faces today manage to care for its citizens in 2000, when the population is projected to be 66 million, or in 2020, with 91 million people?

And those are but a few examples of the potential for disaster in Third World nations. The World Population News Service reports that in the Southern Hemisphere alone, 800 million new jobs will have to be created by 2000. As far as agriculture is concerned, 65 countries that depend on subsistence farming will be unable to feed their populations by 2000, coupled with the fact that 25 billion tons of topsoil vanish from the world's cropland every year.

Famines in Africa and Asia are a direct result of the population explosion, which in turn depletes natural resources, pollutes the planet's lands and waters, and destroys the ozone layer. The situation is similar in most other developing countries, and it is worsening steadily. However, disasters can be averted through, among other things, the extension of family planning services to the more than 500 million people in the Third World today who are in need of such services but who lack the means to obtain them.

No individual nation is at fault for the scope of problems related to the population explosion. However, by remaining ignorant of the urgency of the situation, all nations share the blame equally for failing to act. Rich or poor, industrialized or developing, every single country in the world will suffer if nothing is done to remedy the problem of our skyrocketing population increase. And like most other urgent issues, much more can be accomplished if initiative is taken at the grassroots level.

Urgency, in this case, is an understatement.

Letters

Bike path blues

Editor,

I would like to respond to Clint Reynolds' letter "Stay off sidewalks" in the April 8 Collegian. Clint, what a great idea. I love the idea of riding all the way around campus on the bike paths to get to class just so all the people walking don't have to be bothered by us delinquents on bikes. However, I have a problem.

First, "sidewalk" — as defined in Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary — is a paved walk for pedestrians at the side of a street. Now, for the sake of argument, let's assume all the cement on campus, excluding parking lots, is considered a sidewalk.

Second, "path" in the same place is defined as "a track specially constructed for a particular use." Now, I'm going to assume that a "bike path" is "a track specially constructed for bike use." This being clear, I wonder why people ride their bikes on the sidewalk.

One reason could be that they're tired of people walking on bike paths (such as the one beside Durland Hall) which are just barely wide enough for one bike. One thing most people have the decency to do when they ride on the sidewalks is yield to pedestrians; I always do. However, people who walk on the bike paths completely ignore people coming up from behind them.

They walk really slow, they walk two and three abreast so you can't pass them — get the idea? I once was forced to run my bike into a tree and completely strip my gears to avoid someone who jumped into the bike lane from the side. Before people who ride bikes are condemned for wanting to get to class quicker, we should disgrace all those people who can't walk the extra five yards to get to the sidewalk and instead take the bike path.

Story inaccuracy

Editor,

As a Reporting I student, I've learned accuracy is the most important attribute to a reporter. It appeared to me that this was overlooked in the story concerning the K-State crew's dedication in the April 15 Collegian. Several times the reporter attributed quotes to the wrong people and misquoted others.

Although we appreciate the coverage, please be more careful.

Undergraduate gown a $14.58 'throwaway'

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

Before a student makes the last procession and receives the long-awaited diploma, the traditional cap, gown and announcements are purchased.

The only place to rent or purchase caps and gowns in Manhattan is the K-State Union Bookstore, said Jo Ann Blackburn, soft goods clerk at the Union.

Blackburn said the price of an undergraduate gown with a cap and tassel is $14.58, including tax. This gown is for those who will be receiving a bachelor's degree.

"At the undergraduate level, we recommend buying the apparel because it's cheaper that way. The (undergraduate) gown is pretty much a throwaway item," she said.

An undergraduate gown can be rented, but only if the renter is a speaker at commencement who already has only a bachelor's degree, said Cynthia Dunham, assistant supply department manager at the Union.

Rental apparel is available in the form of master's and doctoral caps, gowns and hoods, Blackburn said. The rental price for a master's cap, gown and hood is $21, and the price of a complete doctoral outfit is $23.25. The price for a doctor of veterinary medicine's cap, gown and hood is $26.25.

With these types of gowns for master's and doctoral students, many people decide to invest in the apparel because they will keep wearing it for university activities, Blackburn said.

The cost range when purchasing a master's or doctoral gown is determined from the quality of fabric used to make the gown, she said. The cost for a master's gown ranges from $88 to $146, and the cost of a doctoral gown is from $190 to $423.60. In addition, a cap and hood must also be purchased.

Reconditioned apparel that has previously been rented can also be purchased at a lower price, she said.

Dunham said she estimates 2,000 students will be graduating this year and recommends those students order the items now that are necessary for graduation.

Clothing is not the only item usually obtained for commencement.

Announcements are also purchased by the graduating student to inform family and friends of the event.

Unlike the apparel, announcements can be purchased at two locations in town: the Union and Varney's Book Store.

Blackburn said the Union sells two kinds of announcements: personalized and non-personalized.

The personalized announcement contains all of the information on one card, including the commencement schedule and the graduating student's name, college and degree, she said. The price for these is $19.50 for 20 announcements, $30 for 40, and $39 for 60.

The non-personalized style comes with a basic announcement, a copy of the commencement schedule, and a name and degree card. These are double-enveloped and sell at $5.75 for a package of 10.

The announcements sold at Varney's are non-personalized and have the basic announcement, commencement card and name card with a double envelope, said Julie Grant, supply manager of Varney's. They sell for $5 for a package of 10 or one for 65 cents.

Director seeks new assistant for Bramlage

By The Collegian Staff

The director of Bramlage Coliseum is currently looking for an assistant director to help manage the $17 million arena.

Charlie Thomas, director of the coliseum, said the opening requires someone with a bachelor's degree and previous arena management experience. The position is expected to be filled by July 1.

"Basically, we want a person with a lot of prior experience in dealing with large facilities — someone who knows what a promoter and a booking agent is, and would be able to take over my job for a week if they had to," Thomas said.

Some of the responsibilities include experience in lease negotiation, coordination of front and back house procedures, food services knowledge and control of a computerized box office, he said.

Thomas said the communication between staff members is very important when coordinating any type of special event.

"There's a lot of cooperation and planning that goes into a big event like this, especially (among) the director, assistant director, production manager and the entire staff," he said.

Friends of Library to make donation

By The Collegian Staff

The cutback in periodical subscriptions Farrell Library officials were planning on making may be partially offset by a donation the Friends of the Library group is expected to make today.

The group is expected to announce at 11:30 a.m. today in the Flinthills Room during its annual meeting that it will make a several thousand dollar contribution to the library, said Virginia Quiring, associate dean of library development.

The contribution was collected from individual donations and membership dues, said Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics and president of Friends of the Library.

Due to rising costs, the library may have to cut back on its number of subscriptions, lowering the library's number of volumes to below that of peer libraries.

Oldfather said that in addition to the announcement, today's meeting will feature a presentation focusing on being an author at K-State.

Three faculty and staff members who have been recently published will be speakers.

Steve Heller, associate professor of English, recently published "The Automotive History of Lucky Kellerman," a success among critics, Oldfather said.

Lee Killough, chief radiological technician at the Veterinary Medicine Center, is a science-fiction author whose recent publications include "Aventine" and "The Doppelganger Gambit."

Dean Zollman, professor of physics, has written several technical books and recently published the "Fascination of Physics," Oldfather said.

Quiring said Friends of the Library was established in September, 1984, by a group of interested faculty members who wanted to bring both monetary support and publicity to the library. Its current membership exceeds 200.

"The purpose of the organization is to bring visibility to the library, support cultural programs and provide resources beyond what the state provides," Quiring said.

Old, new to mix in concert

By Patrice Macan
Collegian Reporter

Both contemporary works and the "staples of band literature" will be featured at the K-State Symphonic Wind Ensemble's last program of the semester at 8 tonight in the Union Forum Hall, said Stanley Finck, assistant professor of music and director of bands.

A contemporary work for the program is "Music for Prague 1968" which depicts the invasion of the native city of the composer, Karel Husa. An "old staple" for the concert is "America, the Beautiful," Finck said.

The music for the concert is selected on the basis of several factors, he said. One factor is to offer students a variety of the band literature that has been written and another is to give area high school band directors the opportunity to hear different works, he said.

Finck said area directors are always invited to the concert, and he features works which are at the level they would be interested in. To attract these directors, Finck is opening the program with "Argentum: An Overture for Band" by Timothy Mahr, who Finck calls an "up-and-coming American composer" for high school band literature.

The difference between high school and college band literature is that at the college level there are more extreme ranges, the rhythm can be unusual and the music is more complex, Finck said.

The concert will conclude with John Philip Sousa's "Kansas Wildcats." This piece is sometimes played at football and basketball games, he said.

Sousa, a famous American composer, conducted two concerts on the same day at K-State in 1928 in Nichols Hall, and it was then that students asked him to compose a march in honor of the University, said Craig Parker, assistant professor of music.

Speaker warns consumers against fraud

By Candise Leonard
Contributing Writer

There's enough deception in the state to keep the Kansas Attorney General's Office busy — very busy, according to Gloria Corona, special agent for consumer protection.

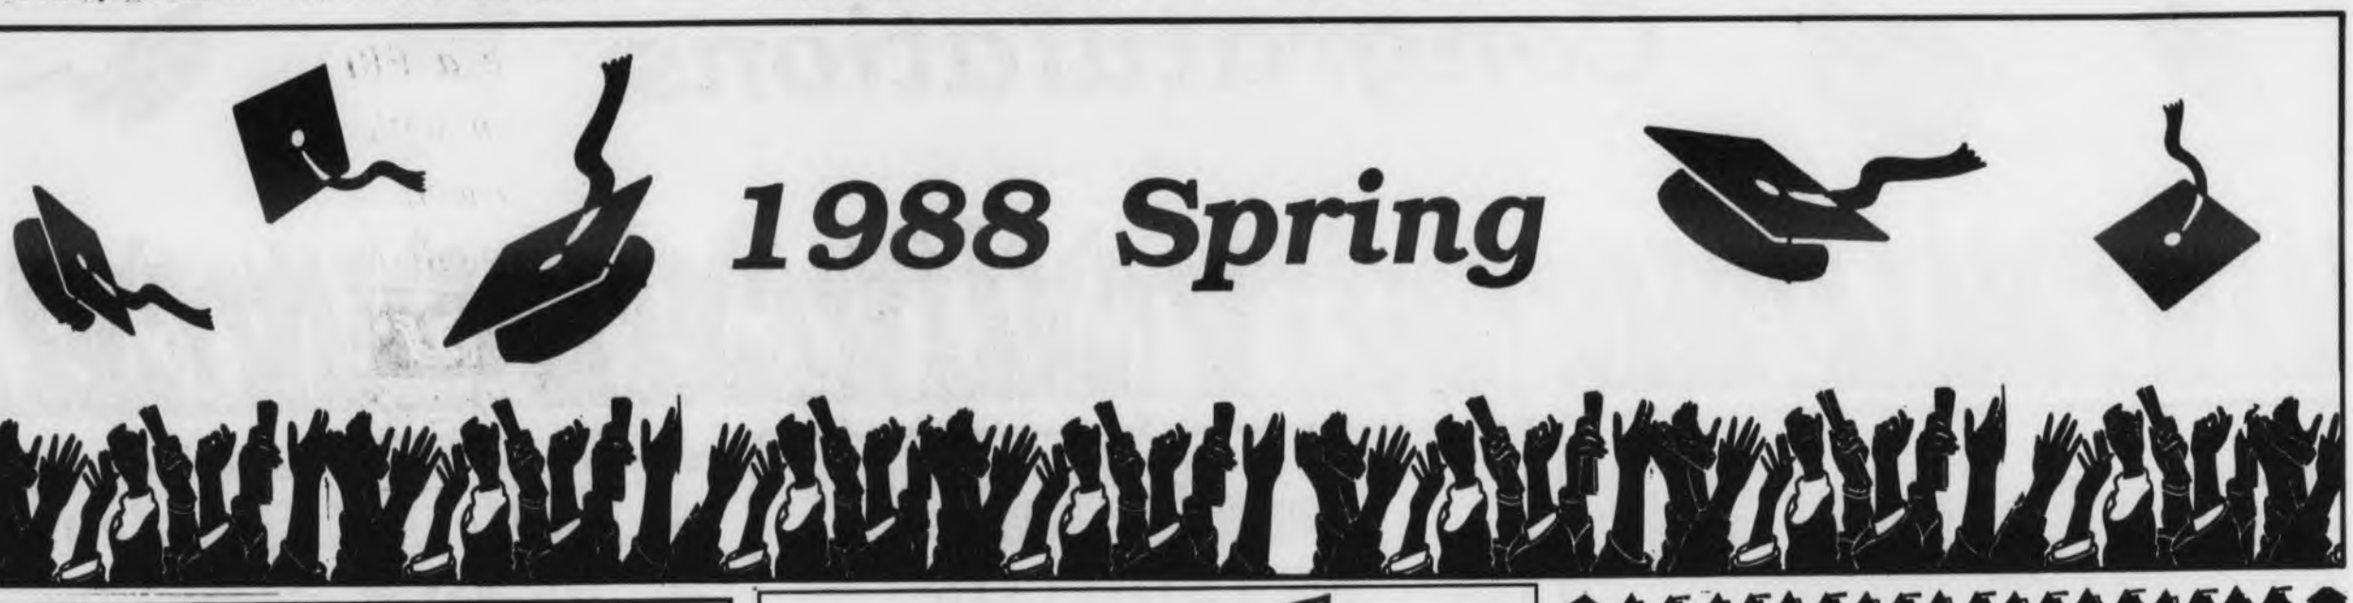
"We handle 4,400 complaints each year and average 250 phone inquiries per day among the four agents," she said.

Corona spoke Monday in observance of National Consumers Week, April 24-30, to a consumer law class about the deceptive claims she handles.

"Deception is representing something as new when, in fact, it is used," Corona explained. She showed examples of the frauds that have crossed her desk lately, including a "solar dryer for $29.95." It was a clothesline.

"Another was 'an item you could hang anything on' for only $19.95," Corona said. "You guessed it — a nail. I could buy one at the hardware store for a nickel, not $20."

Corona cautioned students not to give out their bank account numbers — not even as identification for cashing a check.



"I always give them my gasoline credit card for I.D.," she said. "Then they could only charge gas, tires and car repairs."

For credit card applications that ask for your account numbers, Corona suggested listing only the name and phone number of your financial institution.

"Let the charge card company call for your credit rating — it's safer that way," she said.

She also warned about reading the fine print in advertisements.

"If there's a guarantee in the ad that 'you'll lose 25 pounds in one month or your money back,' well, the guarantee is only as good as what you know about the company," Corona said. "Don't believe things that are too good to be true."

the world by providing incentives for reinvestment in American industry, Wright said.

Today, America's investment rate is the second-lowest in the industrialized world, he said. Only 1.9 percent of its gross national product is invested in non-defense research and development. Last year, Japan invested 2.8 percent of its GNP in the same areas.

In addition, the bill will form a National Institute of Technology to aid in the discovery of new inventions and research products to be marketed abroad, Wright said.

It also creates a position in all American embassies for a representative who will be responsible for promoting U.S. products, he said.

The "schools" portion of the bill might be the most important part of the bill, Wright said, because American education has caused U.S. industry to lag behind other world industrial powers.

Last year, American universities graduated 54,000 students in math, science and engineering disciplines, while Japan graduated 77,000 people in the same areas.

Also, Japanese firms have 10,000 business representatives, all of whom speak excellent English, selling their products in the United States, while America has about 500 people representing American businesses in Japan, few of whom speak Japanese.

"Unfortunately, American students do not do as well in math, science and several other practical subjects, and certainly not in foreign languages, as do students in other industrialized countries," Wright said.

The GI Bill of Rights was one of best investments the U.S. government has ever made in education, Wright said. The bill provides a return of $30 back to the government for every dollar spent on the program.

"(The return) educated an entire generation," he said.

Besides quality education for America's children, Wright said, the trade bill provides for about $900 million to retrain displaced workers.

Modifications have been made to the bill due to requests from the executive branch, Wright said. Because of one modification, the Employee Protection Amendment, President Reagan has said he will veto the entire package.

If this occurs, Wright said, an effort will be made to override it.

The amendment, which affects only about 5 percent of all manufacturers in the United States, will require employers to give their employees 60 days warning before any planned layoffs or firings.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

found to be in violation of the regulation, the house will be subject to fines determined by the Executive Council. Members will also be required to participate in a community service project, and social functions will be eliminated for a given time.

■ If there are habitual problems with turning in the registration, the chapter adviser, president and social chairwoman will meet with the Executive Council to discuss further sanctions.

Regulations also include that the Executive Council use the sanctions to educate sorority members and not to punish them. The fines that are accumulated throughout the year will be used to purchase wristbands for the following year.

Lisa Rock, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and Panhellenic representative for Chi Omega sorority, also voted against the proposal.

"We didn't totally agree with the sanctions, but (we) will follow them now that it has been voted on by Panhel," Rock said. "We didn't agree the sanctions were necessary for the policy."

A proposal which would have established an all-fraternity alcohol policy for date parties was presented to Interfraternity Council Feb. 29. However, Thomas Hemmer, junior in economics and president of IFC, said IFC is not going to put something down as a law regarding an all-fraternity alcohol policy for date parties.

"We are not a police force," he said. "We don't want to govern 25 fraternities' parties."

As a result of the Feb. 29 proposal, IFC has appointed an alcohol committee to put together a booklet with information pertaining to alcohol, said Tim Kubik, senior in business and committee chairman.

"We can't do what Panhel did because all of the fraternities are so diverse," Kubik said. "We are going to put together this booklet about alcohol with everything we can find in it."

Civil

O'Connor, Scalia and Kennedy were appointed by President Reagan, a critic of some high-court rulings he considers too liberal.

Brenda Patterson, a black woman, wants to use a post-Civil War law to force her employer, McClean Credit Union, to pay actual and punitive damages for alleged harassment.

Lower federal courts said the law, the Civil Rights Act of 1866, is designed only to ban racial discrimination in hiring, firing and promotion — not racial harassment.

Patterson still could charge racial harassment under a 1964 civil rights law. But the more recent law provides that those who win their cases in court may collect back pay, not potentially big awards as compensation for emotional and mental suffering.

Civil rights groups say the more limited 1964 law may not be a sufficient deterrent to harassment.

Arthur Spitzer, legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union here, said the court's action will have "enormous psychological impact."

"Basic civil rights decisions now may be considered open to attack," he said. Monday's action suggests there are five solid votes to reconsider key precedents, he added.

Jordan's luck on upswing

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Tony Jordan's luck may finally be changing.

The last time we visited with Jordan, he had just arrived late for K-State's fall football camp after his car broke down three times during the trip from his hometown of Rochester, N.Y.

His luck didn't change during the 1987 season either.

Hampered by injuries for most of the season, the 6-foot-3, 220-pound senior tailback picked up 692 yards on 169 carries. Jordan's longest rush of the year was 31 yards and he averaged 69.2 yards per game.

Quite a downfall for Jordan — who was featured on the cover of the 1987 media guide — after he rushed for 738 yards and picked up a single-game record 218 yards rushing against Iowa State during the 1986 campaign.

Then an expected invitation to the National Football League Scouting Combine Workout in Indianapolis fell through. Three hundred of the nation's top collegiate players are invited to the three-day camp in February to work out in front of representatives from all 28 NFL teams.

"At first I was told the invitation was sent out and that I didn't want to go. Then it was said the guy that was in charge of our area was in a fatal car accident and my information wasn't received from him. Some other people told me I was injured too much and that was the reason (I wasn't invited). I didn't know who to believe," Jordan said.

But Jordan maintained his patience, and has been running track for K-State to stay in shape. His perserverance paid off Sunday when he was drafted in the fifth round by the Phoenix Cardinals.

"I'm excited about being drafted that high and getting a chance," Jordan said. "It's a good situation. It's kind of a new start for (the former St. Louis Cardinals) and it's kind of a new start for me."

Besides the opportunity to start anew in the NFL, there was another reason he was happy to be selected by the Phoenix franchise — something that wouldn't have been possible if the Cards hadn't left Busch Stadium.

"The thing that I was pleased about was that I was drafted by a team that plays on (natural) grass," he said.

Still, Jordan — the 132nd selection overall — didn't know what to expect come draft day.

"If I would have went to the Combine, who knows what would have happened. And I know that a few of the games the scouts saw me at, I wasn't playing as well as I could have because of my injuries, Jordan said.

"But I can't say that things didn't work out for me because I still went pretty high in the draft."

What may be surprising to some people is that Jordan was selected in the draft ahead of wide receiver John Williams and tight end Kent Dean who attended the Combine workout.

"The draft was very strange," Jordan said. "I thought Dean would be a high draft pick and Williams would go in the middle rounds. I'm just fortunate I was picked as early as I was."

Another surprise is that Jordan was selected by the Cards. Jordan said he had talked to representatives from 20 NFL teams during the season, but the Cards weren't one of them.

"Somebody from the Cards called up the trainers to check on a hamstring injury I received in track. Other than that, they hadn't shown any interest," Jordan said.

Jordan will attend a mini-camp for rookies May 25-28 and will report for regular training camp sometime in July. After being selected, Jordan can expect a signing bonus of about $40,000 and could make up to $100,000 annually if he makes the team.

Former Wildcat tail back Tony Jordan will find a new beginning with the Phoenix Cardinals after being drafted in the fifth round Monday afternoon. Jordan was the 132nd selection overall.

Coaching pressures vary with positions

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

Editor's Note: This is the first in a three-part series on the pressures faced by those involved in major college athletics.

They gain all the laurels in the world when they win, and all the sour grapes when they lose.

Coaching: It's sugar and spice and everything difficult all wrapped up in one.

Dana Altman, assistant coach for K-State's men's basketball team, has seen both sides of the fence as a head coach and an assistant.

Before coming to K-State, Altman was an assistant at Western State (Colo.) College and head coach for Southeast Community College in Fairbury, Neb., and Moberly (Mo.) Junior College.

Altman has been involved in a winning program at every stop. But there is a lot of pressure to win, both from within himself and from his surrounding environment.

"There was a lot of inner pressure from myself," Altman said. "I put a lot of pressure on myself to win. Maybe that isn't a good thing to do, but I had some expectations and some goals that I wanted to meet.

"Obviously, people like to win," he added. "It's a lot more fun to win than lose.

"When people see you win, then all the awards come along. People are excited ... people have good feelings (and) the alumni have good feelings. Coaches' salaries are increased, along with other benefits. Those are the good times."

But the possibility of "bad times" always looms.

Altman said during bad times — losing — added pressure is put on a coaching staff.

"When the team wins, the head coach receives a lot of the credit," he said. "But the coach also receives a lot of the blame when the team loses."

This issue is something Altman feels is unjust.

"In some aspects the assistant coaches are to blame for a losing season," he said. "We are the ones who usually make the decision as to who we put out on the floor — new recruits, transfers, the players we work with during the season, seeing how they play in practice."

Altman pointed out that the pressure in the junior college ranks is much different than it is at the Division I level.

"There isn't the amount of support from the community (at the junior college level) as there is here or in other Division I programs."

Altman said the pressure situation to win at K-State is not that great.

"We've got a good program here," he said. "We've got good people who know how to respond to different situations.

"But I enjoy the game, maybe that's what keeps some of the pressure off me," Altman added. "I enjoy the competition and seeing my contributions go to work out on the court. If it became tougher to come to work and have a good time and have patience with the kids, that's when I would call it quits," he added.

Four tracksters sign with 'Cats

K-State track coach John Capriotti has announced the addition of four more signees.

The group includes two new jumpers, a distance runner and a sprinter.

Markeya Jones, a senior at South High School in Cleveland, Ohio, will boost the K-State sprint squads. She was the state runner-up in the 200 yard dash with a time of 24.1 in 1987. That mark, along with a 11.6 performance in the 100, are both school records. Jones also turned in the fastest indoor time in the 400 in the state of Ohio with a finish of 58.0. For two years in a row, she has been the most valuable performer at the Harrison Dillard indoor city track meet.

"Markeya is a real good sprinter," Capriotti said. "She should really boast our sprinters. We have some good talent, but she will add some depth to it."

Ron Smith, a senior at Shawnee Mission Northwest High School in Shawnee, Ks., is one of the premiere distance runners in the state. He won state competitions in the two-mile run in track and broke the 5,000-meter record in claiming the cross country title. Smith placed 13th in the Kinney Cross Country National and was named an All-American.

Capriotti considers Smith to be the one of the best distance runners in the midwest.

Connie Teaberry is a 5-10 high jumper and is a senior at Luthern North High School in St. Louis, Mo. She recently cleared 5-10 and broke her old record of 5-9¾ at Luthern North High School. Teaberry placed as a gold medalist in the high jump at the Junior Olympics.

"Before the season is over, she could be one of the top five high jumpers in the nation," said Scott Bennett, K-State's assistant coach for jumpers. "Where she is performing right now would already place in the Big Eight."

Chris Samuelson is a 6-7 high jumper and will be transferring from Cloud County Community College. His best mark has been 6-10. He is a native of Concordia, Ks., where he was a high school all-state performer in track.

"Chris is such a raw talent," Bennett said. "His jumping ability, along with his heighth, spells success. We are really excited about the fact that we could have a group of high jumpers where everyone can jump 7-0."

Kruger announces signee

Billy Ray Smith, a 6-5, 215-pound forward from Midland College in Midland Texas, has signed a national letter-of-intent to attend K-State, Wildcat basketball coach Lon Kruger announced Monday.

Smith averaged 13.5 points and 6.3 rebounds per game while earning all-Region V honors. Coach Reggie Franklin's Chaparrals finished 25-7 this season. Smith also received all-region honors last year when Midland raced to a 32-4 record and a second-place finish in the National Junior College Tournament at Hutchinson.

As a sophomore, Smith canned 52.6 percent of his field goal attempts and 72.5 percent of his free throws. He finished with 73 steals, 59 assists, 19 blocked shots and just 56 turnovers.

In a recent all-star game at Midland featuring Texas all-stars versus all-stars from other junior colleges across the country, Smith scored 16 points and pulled down 10 rebounds. He was named second-team junior college all-American by columnist Rick Ball in the most recent issue of Basketball Times. In the preseason rankings, he was selected as the 11th best junior college player in the country by The Sporting News and was a second-team All-American in the Blue Ribbon Basketball Book.

"Billy Ray does several things very well," Kruger said. "He's a strong, physical player, yet he has a good shooting touch. He's also an outstanding passer and an aggressive defensive player. He fits into our scheme perfectly."

Smith originally hails from Garland, Texas, where he attended South Garland High School.

Officials win game with students

SGA members lose, 10-5, to K-State administrators

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

Pizza was on the line Monday at a game in which age triumphed over youth at softball diamond number five at the Chester A. Peters Recreation Complex Monday.

The game between K-State administrators and Student Government Association members was a question of who would eat pizza pie and who would choke down humble pie. The administrators, led by President Jon Wefald, claimed the spoils, winning 10-5.

"Troy (Lubbers, student body president) and I came up with the idea of the softball game," said John Fairman, assistant vice president and vice president for institutional advancement and coach of the Anderson Annihilators. "I told him that I had noticed that not very many SGA members were in good shape so we decided to set up the game between the students and the administration."

"It's gonna be a crazy game," said Lubbers, head coach of the Selfish Elitists. "The losers buy pizza for the winners and the SGA team sure is hungry.

"We are going to try to prove that the administration just sits around and eats," he said.

The game resembled a celebrity bash. Stan Parrish, head coach of the Wildcat football team, officiated and Wefald and Lubbers pitched in the five-inning slow pitch game.

The administrators jumped out to an early 5-2 lead after the first inning and never looked back. Wefald was the winning pitcher and would also have to be a strong selection for MVP. He made three sparkling plays with his glove, snagging hot shots up the middle, and he went three for four at the plate to lead his team to victory.

A notable performance was also turned in by administration centerfielder Pat Bosco, associate vice president and vice president for institutional advancement. He made several key catches to end SGA rallies.

After the game, Lubbers presented Wefald with the traveling trophy — the game ball — in what can only be described as an informal ceremony.

"The administration team was awesome," Parrish said. "They played like a well oiled machine. They played a magnificent game. Once again experience triumphs over youth in a game of skill. This is a tribute to a bunch of finely honed athletes."

"It was rigged," said John McIntyre of the SGA squad.

After the contest, both teams retired to the lawn of the Wefald residence to enjoy their assorted pies.

Wait futile for two K-State draft hopefuls

By John La Barge
Collegian Reporter

Two K-State draft hopefuls anxiously awaited words that never came from the National Football League Monday.

Tight end Kent Dean and wide receiver John Williams sat by their phones and televisions waiting to find out who would be picked next in the NFL draft, which began Sunday. Neither was selected, and both have elected to try to enter the professional ranks as free agents.

"A lot of crazy things have happened to me today," Dean said. "I didn't get my first call until round 10, and then the phone rang off the wall."

Tom Condon, Dean's agent, predicted he would have a good shot to be selected in round five, and would probably go no later than the eighth round. Dean said K-State football coach Stan Parrish said he thought he would be chosen in the ninth or 10th round.

By 8:30 p.m., Dean had been contacted by 16 teams, but had not been drafted.

"I would have liked to have been drafted," Dean said. "When it came to ninth and 10th rounds, I decided to sign as a free agent. Now I have the chance to go where I want to and make more money than a lower draft pick."

Dean speculated on several reasons why he was not drafted.

"I was not able to catch (a lot of) passes this year. Because of the type of offense we ran, I was limited in my receiving," he said. "I (also) injured my knee against Iowa State (Nov. 14) which made it hard to test well."

Williams said he was also contacted by several teams throughout the day, but nothing ever materialized.

Even though he wasn't drafted, Williams is optimistic.

"I still believe I have a chance," he said. "I'm as good as the rest of them."

He said he thinks he will sign with a team by this evening, hopefully with the Dallas Cowboys, which needs to sign several receivers.

The Big Eight Conference had 27 players selected in the draft.

Oklahoma led the league with 13 selections, including two first round picks — Rickey Dixon and Keith Jackson.

Nebraska had six players drafted, while Missouri had three, Oklahoma State and Colorado had two and K-State had one.

Today's Best Kept Secret Is . . .

Who makes more student loans than any other bank in Kansas? The Bank of Horton! Who? Yes, that's right the Bank of Horton. I told you it was a well kept secret.

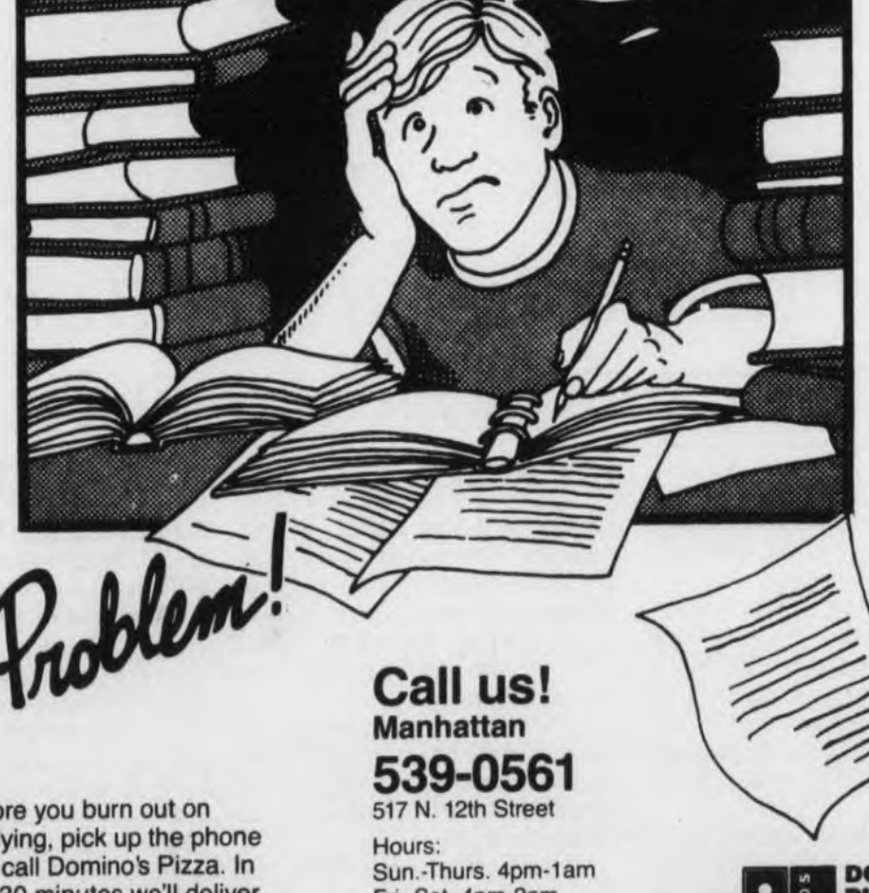
How can I get my student loan from the Bank of Horton?

It's quite simple! Upon receipt of your financial aid award letter for the 1988-89 academic year, you will be asked to select a lender for your Guaranteed Student Loan if you are eligible. If you did not choose a lender while completing the Family Financial Statement (FFS) form earlier this year, that's where we come in. With your award letter you will receive a list of lenders to choose from. Simply write our lender code (804346) on the form that is to be returned to the financial aid office and the process for your loan will already be started. No more hassles or worry about whether your check will be there when you enroll next fall. You will receive some paperwork in the mail this summer to complete your loan. Please make sure the financial aid office has your permanent home address.

What if I already have loans with another lender?

If you choose the Bank of Horton, we can purchase your loans from your previous lender. With your consent we will make the necessary arrangements to purchase your previous loans.

What if I have questions about obtaining a Guaranteed Student Loan from the Bank of Horton.



Simply give us a call at (913) 486-2851. What no toll free number? That's right, we have learned from past experience that you would rather call and get a quick and friendly answer to your question. No busy lines, no tape recorded messages, just a friendly voice to answer your questions.

So come on, get started today! Remember the Bank of Horton (804346) for your student loan. So you can worry about your summer vacation and not whether your check will be at school next fall!

Dukakis sweeps Pennsylvania primary

Bush victorious; Reagan to give blessing

DECISION 88

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Michael Dukakis routed Jesse Jackson in the Pennsylvania Democratic primary Tuesday night, certifying his status as presidential front-runner. George Bush won a resounding Republican victory and predicted the state would deliver the final delegates needed to clinch the nomination.

By their victories, Bush and Dukakis emerged as almost certain opponents in the fall general election campaign — survivors of a campaign marathon that once featured seven Democratic candidates and six Republicans.

Dukakis was gaining 67 percent of the vote with 43 percent of the precincts counted, and said his victory would be "very very helpful" in his quest for the White House.

Jackson was gaining 27 percent of the Democratic vote and said he intended to compete through the end of the primary season on June 7. "The race is not to the swift and the strong," he said. "I'm a long-distance runner. It's too close now to turn around."

Network polling place interviews contained news that was as good for Dukakis as his vote totals.

Though Jackson gained more than 90 percent support from blacks, ABC polling analyst Doug Muzzio said that for the first time in the campaign season, Dukakis was winning a majority of voters who cited the poor and elderly as their chief concerns — voters Jackson won in prior contests. He said Dukakis also was winning voters who cited strong leadership and ability to make a change, groups that Jackson usually won in earlier races.

Bush was gaining 80 percent to 11 percent for dropout Sen. Bob Dole and 9 percent for former television evangelist Pat Robertson. President Reagan agreed to drop his studied show of neutrality and bestow his blessings on his vice president in a White House meeting on Wednesday.

Bush achieved his status far faster than Dukakis, routing the Republican eld on a single Super Tuesday on March 8. Dukakis gained the upper hand week by week. Even so, both men fared better than seemed possible when the nominating wars opened in Iowa last February — and both men wound up third in the state's lead-off caucuses.

On Tuesday, both Bush and Dukakis already were pointing their campaigns toward the fall.

The vice president campaigned across Ohio during the day, declaring, "We're almost getting down to the main event. According to the AP, this evening I'll capture enough delegates in the Pennsylvania primary to exceed the 1,139 convention delegates needed for the nomination."

Philadelphia Mayor Wilson Goode had this advice for Jackson: "hang in there."

Students victims of fraud

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

Fraud is costing Americans billions of dollars each year and the college student population is one of the heavily targeted populations by practitioners of fraud, said Marilyn White, operations director of the Better Business Bureau in Topeka.

Quackery, or health fraud, is a common form of this type of crime, she said.

It attracts consumers by making promises for a slimmer body, tanning products and the availability of "look-alike" drugs, White said.

Quackery falls into three main categories: false claims about drugs or cosmetics; unhealthy food fads, fad diets and food supplements; and ineffective medical devices.

Recognizing quackery is the best way for college students to protect themselves, White said. They should look for phrases such as remedy formula, fast response, miracle and exclusive.

Other quackery clues are endorsements by famous people for products.

A common example is a famous person recommending the use of a business product. The person who is advertising the product may not have endorsed the product, but the business could be using a picture of the person to attract customers.

Money back guarantees should also be questioned. Some businesses offer their product on a trial basis for a length of time; however, the business may not be around after the product is sold and the buyers will not be able to get their money back.

She said to be wary of one single product promoted to be effective for a wide variety of ailments. Unlike professional scientists, quacks do not scientifically research their products, she said.

"Weight reduction is taking the most money among college stu-

Committee agrees on revision plan

$38.4 million of windfall to return to taxpayers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Senate-House conference committee Tuesday agreed to a tax revision plan that would return $38.4 million of the windfall to individual taxpayers.

The proposal is similar to one unveiled earlier in the day by Gov. Mike Hayden in a last-minute effort to build a consensus for a tax revision bill in the Legislature, which reconvenes today for its wrap-up session.

In a related issue, a conference committee agreed to a bill that would exempt manufacturing machinery from the state's 4 percent sales tax permanently and would exempt farm machinery from the sales tax for one year.

Senate President Robert Talkington, R-Iola, said the Senate would take up the two measures today.

The one-year exemption of farm machinery is seen as a compromise effort to placate rural lawmakers who want it included in the tax revision package. Hayden had included the exemption of manufacturing machinery, which will cost the state about $17 million annually in lost revenues, as part of his overall tax revision strategy.

The manufacturing exemption, long sought by Kansas industry, also is intended as an economic development measure that would create additional jobs by encouraging industries to expand.

Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, supported the tax revision measures but refused to sign the conference committee report that provides the exemption for farm machinery. She offered no prediction on whether the bill would pass in the House.

"It's purely political," she said. "There's no way you can rationalize it as sound public policy."

The income tax proposal would repeal the deduction for federal taxes paid and sharply lower tax rates for individuals, unlike the Senate version of the bill. It also does not lower the corporate tax rates, a major feature of the Senate bill.

Rep. Ed Rolfs, R-Junction City, chairman of the House Taxation Committee, said the measure should pass the House.

"It looks good," he said. "I think it's a good compromise."

The propsal includes a one-time double exemption for senior citizens and the blind, as Hayden proposed. It also excludes as income interest individuals earn on general obligation bonds they hold, if the bonds are purchased after Jan. 1, 1988. Hayden's plan would have excluded interest on all general obligation bonds as income, regardess of when they were purchased.

The conference committee agreed to delay implementation of the "alternative minimum tax," which would require those corporations that have no tax liability because of excessive shelters to pay some state income tax.

House members wanted to include the alternative minimum tax, while the Senate Committee on Assessment and Taxation had stripped that provision from the proposal earlier in the session.

Committee members agreed to delay imposing the tax while a special interim committee could study the impact changes in the federal tax law are having on state corporate income taxes.

The state is expected to receive $135 million in windfall from individual taxpayers as a result of those federal changes, but state officials have not determined the impact the new federal law will have on corporations.

Manhattan High may provide child day care

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Teen-age mothers in the Manhattan school district may soon have a new option for their children's day care.

The Carl Perkins Vocational Fund, a federally funded, state-administered program organized to provide day care for children of high school students, is the grant that will make the difference, said Beverly Eversmeyer, director of guidance at Manhattan High School.

One of the biggest problems high school-age girls have with pregnancy is providing day care for their children, she said. Consequently, many of the girls never return to school after the baby is born.

An average of 1,700 students to 1,750 students are enrolled at Manhattan High School. Of that number, at least 40 girls are pregnant each year, said Charlotte Doyle, English instructor at Manhattan High School.

In an effort to help the pregnant girls remain in school, Eversmeyer has applied for $35,500 from the single parent/homemaker category of the Carl Perkins Vocational Fund. She expects to know by mid-May, when the State Board of Education determines the 1988-89 recipients, whether Manhattan High school will receive the grant.

Don Strait, program specialist for vocational education, said the State Board of Education has received 600 to 700 requests from different Kansas high schools for funds. These aid requests all fall within one of the seven different vocational education categories covered by the fund.

"Since we only have $400,000 to $500,000 for the entire state, some schools won't receive the requested aid," he said.

The school must provide evidence of potential participants and the ability to disseminate information about the program in the community, Strait said. It must be able to identify and utilize existing training services in the community.

If Manhattan High School receives the grant, Eversmeyer said, the program will be advertised in the local newspaper to alert all former students of the educational opportunity.

Manhattan High School will have no problem finding enough participants for the program, she said.

"I've had (this year) at least two girls who aren't in school and would like to be, but have no child care," Eversmeyer said.

As the grant request was written, the participating girls will be required to enroll in a parenting class already offered at the high school, such as nutrition or baby care, she said, and this will fulfill the requirement for using already-existing services.

As the third criterion for the grant, the school must provide basic skills in vocational assessment.

To fulfill this area, the grant request requires participating students to enroll in at least one vocational class, such as home economics or business skills.

These classes provide the students with marketable job skills, Eversmeyer said.

Finally, the school must provide a transition into the work world in the form of information about job interviewing and further vocational education opportunities, Strait said.

If the program is instituted, all costs for student and child transportation and day care will be paid through the fund. Each morning the students and their babies will be provided with transportation from their homes to the day care center, and then the mothers will be taken to the high school. In the afternoon, the process is reversed with the mothers picking up their babies and returning home.

The grant was written for 15-20 students instead of 40 because, for a number of rea-

Dole says coverage 'negative'

WASHINGTON — Sen. Bob Dole, criticizing news coverage of his unsuccessful campaign for the Republican presidential nomination, said Tuesday that reporters were more interested in "gossip and nit-picking" than in covering the issues.

Dole, the Senate Republican leader, said in a floor speech that overall coverage of the 1988 presidential primaries was "issueless and negative."

The senator from Kansas said a predominantly liberal press corps gave Republican candidates "far more negative treatment than the Democratic candidates."

"What I witnessed generally on my own campaign plane was an aircraft filled with reporters who became each other's best audience," Dole said. "It was an ultrainsider's game of gossip and nit-picking that turned presidential campaign coverage into 'Trivial Pursuits.'"

Dole cited a recent USA Today newspaper study he said showed "network television coverage of the 1988 presidential campaign has focused 80 percent of its time on everything but issues."

Court finds Jagger innocent

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — A federal court jury on Tuesday found that Mick Jagger did not pirate an unknown reggae musician's song and turn it into his 1985 hit, "Just Another Night."

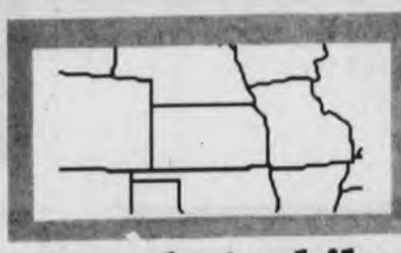
The six-person civil panel deliberated Tuesday morning and for 3½ hours Monday before reaching the verdict, listening to tapes of Jagger's song and a song of the same name written in 1979 by Patrick Alley.

At 7 p.m., the jury asked for a reading of testimony and a review of physical evidence, prompting U.S. District Judge Gerard Goettel to send them home and have them resume deliberations this morning.

The judge and attorneys drew up a special verdict sheet to help the jury decide the case.

The sheet asked the panel first to decide whether Jagger had access to Alley's song.

Worker killed at Disney site



LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — A water pipe burst during construction on the site of Disney World's new Typhoon Lagoon, killing one worker and injuring three others.

Disney officials and sheriff's spokesman Randy Means said the 22-inch pipe burst during a pressure test Monday.

The victims were installing underground pipes at the water attraction, which will feature pools for swimming and surfing and a man-made river.

Frank Irey Jr., president of the Frank Irey Construction Co., said the workers were in a trench, getting ready to pour concrete around the pipe, when a joint broke, knocking the pipe into the men.

Lawrence Hefner, 59, of Donora, Pa., died shortly after being rushed to Orlando Regional Medical Center. The other three workers were reported in stable condition at the same hospital.

Boy shot while riding bike

WICHITA — Police said a teen-ager was shot and wounded Tuesday, apparently as he rode his bicycle in a south Wichita neighborhood.

The boy, 15-year-old Shawn Landers, was in serious condition at Joseph Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said. He suffered a wound to his lower back, she said.

Police Lt. Mike Bruce said a man who lives in the neighborhood told officers he found the youth moaning while sitting on his bicycle. The man quoted the boy as saying he had been shot while riding his bike.

Bruce said some area residents told police they heard a shot as the youngster rode past a parked van. He said police were unsure where the shooting occurred.

Suspect appeals bail decision

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A man charged in a sexual torture case has asked the Missouri Court of Appeals to overrule a lower court decision that he remain in the Jackson County Jail without bail until his trial.

Pat Berrigan, an assistant public defender, submitted a written request to the appeals court Monday on behalf of Robert A. Berdella, 39, who was arrested early this month after a man wearing only a dog collar fled from Berdella's home and told police about four days of torture and captivity.

Berdella was charged with felonious restraint, first-degree assault and seven counts of sodomy.

Berdella's request to have bail set has been rejected in three previous hearings in Jackson County Circuit Court following testimony that human skulls and photographs of men being tortured were found at Berdella's house. No charges have been filed in connection with those discoveries.

Police look for beer provider

WESTMORELAND — Police were looking for whoever provided kegs of beer for about 300 teen-agers who held a party in a northeast Kansas pasture.

Acting on tips, sheriff's officers and Riley County police raided the party about five miles northeast of Wamego Friday night, Pottawatomie County Sheriff Dean Taylor said Tuesday.

Officers took the names of the youths, most of whom were students at Manhattan High School and ranged in age from 14 to 18, the sheriff said.

Six empty kegs and four partially full or full kegs were confiscated, along with several bottles of vodka, Taylor said.

County Attorney Henry Otto II probably will not prosecute the underage drinkers, Taylor said.

"Our main interest is to find out who furnished the stuff," the sheriff said. "I think the guy that buys it for them should be prosecuted.

"It seems like every spring either in our county or surrounding counties, some kid is killed in an alcohol-related car wreck," he said.

Authorities also were trying to determine who owned the pasture, Taylor said.

FFA contest 'motivating'
Events to be scheduled May 1-3

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

The state contest of the Future Farmers of America, May 1-3, will attract 157 high school students to K-State. The winning team will represent Kansas at the national competition in November.

Earl Wineinger, FFA executive secretary and instructor in adult and occupational education, said the contest is in part "a way for students to want to learn what they need to learn."

"The contests are a means to an end. The means is the contests as a vehicle for motivating students into wanting to learn and the end is the learning of the students," Wineinger said.

The events scheduled for May 1 include a test of the students' knowledge of agricultural economics theories and the meats contest, where students identify and judge retail cuts of meat. Students will take written exams involving problems with taxes, loans and interest rates, and will also analyze records to figure out how to obtain the most profit from a given operation.

Monday's events include a dairy judging contest and the agriculture mechanics contest which consists of three categories: agriculture construction and soil and water management, structures and electrification, and power and machinery.

In agriculture construction, students will be tested on their knowledge of welding and tool conditioning. Soil and water management focuses on terrace-building. Students will have to figure the most feasible elevation and slope that best prevents soil from being carried away.

The structures and electrification tests deal with building agricultural structures and the installation of electrical outlets and other electrical problems.

The power and machinery division will test students on their knowledge of farm equipment.

The dairy foods contest will require students to identify cheeses ranging from Swiss, cream, cheddar and mozzarella. They will also have to identify "off" flavors in milk that originate when odor is absorbed by the milk. The off flavors are determined by the aroma or taste of the milk.

Students will also have to score the clean condition milk. A written test will be given covering the marketing and production of milk.

The livestock contest, which Wineinger said is the most popular, allows students to evaluate live groups of beef cattle, sheep or pigs and justify their decisions.

Fun Night, which is sponsored by the Ag Ambassadors, will be held at Tuttle Creek Reservoir on Monday night and will include a picnic and games.

"This is one of the best recruiting devices for K-State because a good majority of the students will eventually come to K-State," Wineinger said.

Tuesday is the poultry contest where students will have to evaluate live laying hens to determine how many eggs they have laid in the past and how many they will lay in the future. They will also have to identify carcass parts and grade dressed poultry and eggs according to USDA standards.

Students participating in the crops contest will have to identify prohibited, restricted or common weeds. Crops they will also have to identify and grade according to USDA standards include grasses, corn, wheat, oats or barley. They will distinguish classes of wheat by seed or plant. Seed analysis will include specifying problems such as impurities.

The entomology contest involves the identification of insects. A written exam will test students on pesticides and safety practices.

The newswriting contest, to be judged by the journalism department staff, will require each student to hold an interview and write an article from the interview. The article will be sent to the student's hometown newspaper.

In the horticulture contest, students will have to identify fruits, vegetables, flowers and shrubs. They will evaluate the horticulture products on quality and determine diseases, damages, blemishes and ripeness. A written test will cover landscaping, herbicides and fertilizers.

Contest winners will be announced at an awards assembly program scheduled from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

Library receives $7,000 contribution

By Jeff Stead
Collegian Reporter

The Friends of the Library has announced it will contribute more than $7,000 to help temporarily save a number of subscriptions in jeopardy at Farrell Library.

"The 8,000 to 9,000 journals that we try to maintain for the faculty and students are facing a very large cancellation beginning July 1 because the state simply has not been able to keep up with the problem," said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.

Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics and president of Friends of the Library, said the donation is only temporary.

"We regard our gift for this year and the gift of a similar size for next year as temporary and (believe) that this organization does not intend to try to take the place of the Kansas Legislature in supporting scholarly work for faculty and students," Oldfather said.

Hobrock said the Friends of the Library had several ideas on what should benefit from the money.

"This seemed to be the most pressing need for the library right now and one place for this organization to truly make a contribution," Oldfather said.

Hobrock said the contribution is small compared to the total shortfall, which is expected to be slightly less than $600,000. "But every little thing you can do makes a difference."

The periodicals being affected are not popular magazines but are research publications that are used by faculty and graduate students, he said.

A similar cutback is being experienced at many universities across the country.

WHEREAS Senate made fool of itself, K-State...

The Collegian's editorial board would like to suggest that the following resolution appear on the next referendum ballot:

WHEREAS on April 21, 1988, the K-State Student Senate voted 28-16 to condemn the University of Kansas Student Senate for missing the annual intersenate basketball game two times, and

WHEREAS Student Senate deemed this bill to be of such great importance and the need for its passage of such urgency that it passed the bill under "special orders," allowing the bill to be passed after one meeting instead of two meetings as is normal for most bills, and

WHEREAS the bill states the KU Student Senate has only furthered the image of KU as "snob hill" and in section 2, the bill encourages the use of the phrase "snob hill" to refer to KU, and

WHEREAS the bill states the condemnation will be lifted when the KU Student Senate delivers an apology accompanied by two kegs of beer, and

WHEREAS passage of this bill by Student Senate only perpetuates the stereotype of K-State students as a bunch of drunken, riotous aggies tromping around in manure at Silo Tech envious of the elite at the Harvard of the Plains in Lawrence, and

WHEREAS passage of this bill only perpetuates the stereotype of student senators as childish, would-be elitists who are solely concerned with self-promotion, ignoring the best interests of their constituents BE IT RESOLVED THAT:

Section 1. Student Senate be referred to as Stupid Senate for the passage of a bill which does no service to the student body and itself.

Section 2. The name be changed back to Student Senate after such time as Stupid Senate apologizes to the KU Student Senate and student body as well as the K-State student body for its lack of maturity and judgment, expected of them as student leaders.

Of course, this is only a heartily endorsed suggestion.

All suspects deserve right to build defense

Everyone is innocent until proven guilty — even those suspected of drunken driving.

Last week, the Kansas Court of Appeals ruled that everyone suspected of driving under the influence has the right to request a second alcohol-detection test to verify the results of the first.

If the arresting officers deny the individual that opportunity, they are preventing him or her from constructing the best possible defense. They are preventing him or her from having a fair trial.

The case in question involved an individual who requested a blood test after he failed the breathalyzer test. The arresting officers denied him the opportunity because they contended he would no longer be intoxicated when he arrived at the hospital.

In the decision, the court reasoned that if the test was administered incorrectly, then the defendant would have no other method of recourse. In a sense, that person would be forced to prove his innocence instead of the state being forced to prove his guilt.

If the defendant requests — but is denied — the second test, the court ruled that the first test is inadmissible as evidence.

The court said, correctly, that individuals have the right to obtain as much evidence as possible to prove themselves innocent. Suspects are just that — suspects. No matter what crime they are suspected of, due process is essential.

Racism rejected

Editor,

Great men live, great men die, but not all great men get holidays dedicated to them. I do not believe the students at K-State are as racist as some may believe. What I do believe is two-fold. First, some students feel cheated out of a holiday which is known for a time to be spent with family. Easter also provides a final break before students nosedive into cramming for finals.

Secondly, giving a day off from school for Martin Luther King Jr. is like saying that he is more important than, say, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln or Jesus Christ? Without some of these people, King may have never been able to express his dream.

I do not believe students in general are against a holiday for King. What they are against is having a holiday taken away which allows students to travel great distances to see their families. Students do not need a day off in order to travel and observe a holiday honoring King.

Co-op concerns

Editor,

On Thursday, six speech students from Public Speaking II classes will present speeches about important K-State issues. The presentations will be at 12:30 p.m. in Nichols Hall Theatre. They are free and open to the public

I will be one of the speakers, and I will be taking this opportunity to express my concern about the KSU Childcare Cooperative. I am a returning student to K-State and I am the single parent of a child enrolled at the co-op. My concern is about the welfare of my daughter and her continued enrollment at the co-op. I believe the threatened extinction of the co-op is an issue of discrimination agaisnt women, children, single parents and lower-income students.

The co-op is an important asset to K-State because of the quality of the program, the type and number of students it attracts and serves, and the educational opportunity it offers. I am lending my full support to the issue of financial assistance for the facility, and it is my hope that something constructive can be done soon to stabilize the center's operating budget and allow for the suitable compensation of the instructors.

I think it is about time the administration gives this issue some serious consideration. I would like to extend a personal invitation to President Jon Wefald and his administration to come and listen to student opinions about the issues concerning K-State.

If you support the co-op, please take time to clip out this letter and sent it to President Wefald in care of Anderson Hall via campus mail.

Van Zile meeting

Editor,

In light of recent interest in the Van Zile Hall project, we, a group of individuals dedicated to this cause, have done extensive research on the subject. After numerous meetings with University officials and hours of data gathering, we feel that students should be interested and informed with the issues surrounding Van Zile.

Action needs to be taken now on this matter, and if K-State students would become actively involved with this issue, something could be accomplished. We will be having a group discussion at 9:30 a.m. Thursday in Bluemont 113 dealing with Van Zile problems, and we invite everyone to attend.

Warm thank you

Editor,

A warm thank you to the students who "shared the parking lots," opened doors for us and especially the K-State Singers who entertained us. It was fun to walk the old pathways again and see all the improvements in the buildings. Makes me glad I've continued to be part of K-State through donations to scholarships.

Poor word usage

Editor,

"Moslem hijackers release hostages from Kuwaiti jet." This was the headline in the April 20 Collegian. This is not the only place I have noticed the word "Moslem" used as an adjective to signify someone with a terrorist or militant mind. The media try to suggest that Islamic beliefs lead people to take people hostages and conduct terroristic activities. Such activities can be better explained by political reasons than by religious affiliations.

I hope our student newspaper will try to avoid the usage of words in this manner in the future.

Our 'charge-it' attitude will one day haunt us

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

It's that time of year — the end of April when students have a tendency to pay for everything with VISA or MasterCard instead of cash. The semester is winding down and we are all feeling the "charge-it" syndrome, caused by a few too many nights out earlier in the semester. We're talking cash depletion from patronizing Aggieville's drinking establishments and then attacking Country Kitchen's biscuits and gravy en masse, or buying that new outfit for summer that "I just had to have."

The use of credit can be beneficial in order to time one's cash outflow or to borrow, within reason, against one's future earnings. The problem is that credit is often misused and misrepresented in our society today.

We, as Americans, seem to be hooked on credit. College students are bombarded with applications for credit cards ("build your credit rating now"). The U.S. government borrows $180 billion every year to finance our fiscal deficit. We pay for a $150 billion to $180 billion trade deficit with borrowed money to the extent that we have become the world's largest debtor nation instead of the largest creditor nation in the course of seven years.

Total consumer debt in the United States is staggering $13 trillion and growing. Car manufacturers and waterbed outlets, among others, try to sell their products based on availability of credit, not on quality or features. (Crazy Bob says no money down, no interest for one year!)

The attitude of getting it all instantly is pervasive in our society. Advertisements say "yes you can ... have it all." What's further, we believe it. Most of the seniors graduating this spring will buy a new car almost immediately, on credit of course. Chances are, that car might be a Japanese import, which is ironic in some ways.

The Japanese have been kicking our tail economically because they do not overuse credit. Instead, the Japanese believe in savings and investment. The Japanese savings rate is about 13 percent, and the percentage of gross national produce invested in non-defense research and product development is about 2.8 percent. Contrast that with the United States, which is saving at about a 4 percent rate and investing in non-defense research at about a 1.9 percent rate.

In the final analysis, we save too little and the Japanese save too much. If they would spend more and save less, we could improve our trade imbalance with them, giving our economy a boost. On the other hand, if we would save more, we would be less dependent on foreign investment and our trade imbalance would improve due to a larger pool of investment funds here in America. Both actions would move the countries toward a more ideally balanced rate of savings of about 7 to 8 percent.

We have an economy that is balanced on a razor's edge. Our massive trade deficits, fiscal deficits and our tendency to be hooked on credit create a very unstable economic environment. One wrong move and we will be headed for a recession or depression in the next several years. This would result in "forced" structural changes in the debt relationship between our two countries.

We would end up defaulting on our loans from Japan, with the Japanese losing all their savings and us having the dreaded "bad credit rating." The whole world would feel the repercussions of this happening under the "forced" circumstances that it will if we continue our present course. That is why we need to alter our course by choice now, before it is too late.

We have lived and continue to live about 6 percent beyond our means during the 1980s. In other words, we borrow about 6 percent of our GNP every year from other countries, which we cannot do forever. Much of this has been a result of the Reagan administration's failed "supply-side" economic policies, especially the tax cut of 1981. It has been the cause of our fiscal deficits creating more federal debt, but it also gave people more money to use as they choose instead of paying taxes with it.

But instead of saving and investing the additional money, we the people have used it to increase our "consumerism." In other words, too many VCRs, pasta machines and Ralph Lauren shirts have been bought with VISA instead of that money being invested in keeping America No. 1 in the world economy.

"Reaganomics" has remained extremely popular, despite its failings, for one reason. Tax cuts mean more disposable income for wealthy individuals, meaning more money to buy imports that are made cheap by an artificially high U.S. dollar, meaning more consumption of goods, which we delight in as consumption-oriented Americans.

The chickens will come home to roost in the future. We will pay for the excesses of the 1980s in the 1990s. The Reagan campaign slogan of 1984, "It's morning in America," will be looked upon by history in the same light as Warren Harding's "two cars in every garage and a chicken in every pot" statement of the late 1920s.

Now that you've made it through all the complex economics reasoning above, you're probably wondering, "What's this got to do with me?" Simple. We are the generation of the future. Although the $500 credit limit on our own VISAs adds up to a very minute portion of a $13 trillion consumer debt figure, it nonetheless is a portion.

A voluntary restraint in consumerism practiced by everyone now will hurt a lot less than a forced restraint later on. Our generation can take the lead in prudent use of credit for the future, and I hope we do.

Former Truman recipient awarded law scholarship

Student to attend New York University

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

Lori Shellenberger, senior in pre-law, has been awarded one of the eight Root-Tilden-Snow Scholarships.

The national scholarship is given to students who plan to study law at New York University. It provides a minimum of two-thirds of full tuition costs and is initially given for a one-year time period, but may be renewed annually. Renewal is dependent upon satisfactory academic performance and full participation in program courses, activities and internships.

Shellenberger, who will begin her study at NYU in August, said the award came as a shock. The decision of where to attend law school, she said, was much easier to make after being selected as one of the scholars.

"I want to work in the field of Civil Rights litigation," Shellenberger said. "This scholarship is very advantageous, as it will provide a link to quality people whom I may have the chance to work with in the future."

The scholarship program is "designed to provide a unique educational opportunity for students of outstanding academic ability committed to using their skills in the service of the public."

Shellenberger said New York City provides many opportunities in the area of public service, because it offers a good environment in which to gain experience during law school.

"I'd eventually like to go into judicial work," she said. "The award enables a small group of people, or the eight scholars, the opportunity to know each other very well. Also, it will place us ahead in the class, giving each one of us an advantage."

The scholarship competition is open only to students who have already been admitted to NYU's law school. Of about 6,000 applicants to the univerisity , only 1,200 are accepted. About 600 students apply for the scholarship.

Of the pool of applicants, a group of 48 is selected for personal interviews in New York. The interview committee consists of a federal judge, a current Root scholar, a graduate of the law program, a distinguished alumnus and a faculty member.

"Among the eight students awarded the scholarship this year, one holds a doctorate and another has published 60 professional papers," said Nancy Twiss, pre-law adviser. "It was an extremely distinguished group."

As a member of the group, Shellenberger will be required to hold summer internships for two years, participate in supplementary courses at NYU in addition to the normal curriculum and meet with public interest lawyers weekly.

The program, Shellenberger said, is committed to the development of students who intend to use their skills in the service of the public. In the selection process, careful attention is paid to the applicant who has demonstrated a commitment to public service in the past, present and potential leadership in the area.

Shellenberger was a 1986 recipient of a $28,000 Truman scholarship which will help finance two years of graduate study.

Plastic guns spark debate

NRA opposes bill to require metal parts

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration and law enforcement groups agreed Tuesday on compromise legislation to ban undetectable plastic handguns, using an approach that has been staunchly opposed by the National Rifle Association and its legislative supporters.

Joseph A. Morris, director of the Justice Department's office of liaison, said the proposed legislation would be sent to Congress this week.

The compromise represents a change in position for Attorney General Edwin Meese III, who earlier endorsed the NRA approach. Meese now believes that the compromise language is more enforceable, Morris said.

The approach to dealing with plastic guns — which are not yet being manufactured — has generated the latest raging debate between the NRA and handgun control groups.

Gun control groups — joined by police organizations — have been lobbying for a bill that would require a minimum standard of metal in any gun, so that the weapon would trigger an alarm in today's metal detectors.

The NRA has supported a bill by Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, which would ban undetectable plastic weapons but would set no minimum standard of metal. McClure's approach, however, says that weapons must be detectable by existing magnetometers.

After several rounds of high-powered lobbying, full-page advertisements, fund-raising appeals and doomsday rhetoric by all sides, the administration has adopted the minimum metallic standard as the best approach.

NRA officials were not immediately available for comment on whether they would accept the new approach.

But last year, the NRA said a bill sponsored by Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio — which included a minimum metallic standard — would make a number of small, existing handguns unlawful and amount to "the first federal gun ban bill in America."

Morris said no currently made guns would be barred under the compromise standard, and said he hoped "everyone can claim victory."

Morris said neither the NRA nor the gun control groups were part of the negotiations.

McClure, commenting on the compromise, said he believes the proposal brings all sides closer together, although he stopped short of an endorsement.

But he added that if the new language would not ban any existing guns, there would be little substantive difference between the two measures.

"What we were trying to make certain of is that this is a detection bill and not a confiscation bill," McClure said.

State committee approves prison plan

Proposed construction to reduce overcrowding

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A special legislative committee Tuesday recommended — sort of — that the state build a new prison to reduce overcrowding in its penal system.

The Special Committee on Problems in Prison Overcrowding approved a plan to spend up to $500,000 to begin planning for construction of a new prison and to have another committee study possible projects over the summer, after the 1988 session ends.

Committee members saw the plan as a compromise with legislators who have expressed concerns about the cost of building new institutions. However, it drew negative reactions from Corrections Secretary Roger Endell and Gov. Mike Hayden.

"It would be the first step if one is built," Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Lenexa, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said of the plan, which he sponsored.

Proposed new construction is a key part of a $68.2 million plan Endell has advanced for reducing prison overcrowding. However, many lawmakers have said they consider the construction of 1,200 new beds too expensive.

On April 1, state prisons housed 5,856 inmates in buildings for which the desired operating capacity is 3,886 prisoners.

Also, U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers, of Topeka, has ordered the state to remove nearly 400 inmates from the Kansas State Penitentiary in Lansing by September because of overcrowding there. The order came in a federal lawsuit filed by penitentiary prisoners.

Endell has remained adamant in his belief that the Legislature needs to consider building one or two new prisons with at a total of 1,200 beds. He has said he would like legislative approval this session so that the state Department of Corrections can begin the projects as soon as possible.

After the meeting, Endell appeared upset with the committee's action, which he said he considers inadequate. In fact, the secretary said he felt as if lawmakers were questioning his professional judgment.

"It's important to be able to work with people who have confidence in your professional views," Endell said.

Hayden also said he did not think the committee went far enough, although he acknowleged he knew before the panel's meeting that he might have to settle for its plan.

"This is not a normal circumstance, and I don't think the court will settle for normal circumstances," Hayden said during a news conference.

Rogers is expected to schedule another hearing for September in the federal lawsuit that led to his order. Hayden warned that if the Legislature does not go further than the committee's recommendations, Rogers may order a solution that would force a special session of the Legislature.

He also said prisoners at the Kansas State Industrial Reformatory in Hutchinson could file their own lawsuit because of overcrowding there.

"If they found a basis to file a suit in Lansing, they'll find the basis to file suit in Hutchinson," Hayden said.

Some of the special committee's members, including its chairman, Senate President Robert Talkington, R-Iola, and House Speaker Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, said they thought the state needed to build at least one prison with 700 beds.

"I don't particularly prefer it that way, but I will go along with it," Talkington said of the committee's recommendation.

However, some of the committee's members said they were concerned about acting too quickly. Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston, D-Parsons, noted that the committee and the full Legislature already have approved other measures, such as expanding counseling programs and other institutions, to reduce prison overcrowding.

"I have not been convinced that this is something we have to do and have to do now," Johnston said. "We have before us an order of the court, and we've taken action to meet the order of the court, in my opinion."

Of the total planning funds recommended, $100,000 would be appropriated immediately, with another $400,000 available with the approval of the State Finance Council, which is made up of legislative leaders and acts for the Legislature when it is not in session.

"Does it dictate that we build?" Bogina said. "No, I don't think that it does."

The committee's action also received a mixed reaction from officials of cities that are interested in becoming the site for a new prison. So far, eight cities have active campaigns: Concordia, El Dorado, Horton, Newton, Pratt, Russell, Washington and Wichita.

About 80 Concordians traveled to the Capitol for the meeting, and afterwards, many expressed disappointment with the special committee's actions.

"Whether Concordia gets it or not, there's a failure to recognize the need," said David Retter, city attorney. "Wherever it's located, Endell's plan is the right one."

Honor society to hold initiation banquet

By The Collegian Staff

Phi Kappa Phi will have its spring initiation banquet at 6 p.m. today in the Union's main ballroom.

Phi Kappa Phi is an honor society which is open to juniors, seniors and graduate students from each college. Eligible juniors are in the top 5 percent of their class and have a minimum grade point average of 3.7, eligible seniors have a minimum GPA of 3.4 and are in the top 10 percent of their class, and eligible graduate students have a minimum GPA of 3.8 and are in the top 10 percent of their class.

The honor society is prestigious since it is recognized by both the business and academic communities as an organization which recognizes scholarship in all branches of learning, said John Riley, vice president of Phi Kappa Phi and assistant director of resident instruction.

Several awards will be presented at the banquet, including Phi Kappa Phi's Scholar Award, Artist Award and Meritorious Service Award.

The K-State chapter's nominee for the National Graduate Fellowship will also be recognized.

Riley said K-State's nominees have an excellent record for receiving this fellowship.

City includes property tax absorbtion in plan

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to save taxpayers money, city operations will be absorbing most property tax increases internally in the upcoming fiscal year.

The city's proposal was part of a six-year financial plan presented to city commissioners Tuesday.

Mike Conduff, city manager, explained tax implications of the Financial Plan and Capital Improvements Program.

Conduff said the financial plan will not show short-term results. About $565,000 will be spent on improvements over three years.

Although these may be lean years for the city, Conduff said, results will begin to appear by 1991.

"We have looked at every alternative for additional revenue that we possibly can," Conduff said. "We have to keep in mind that every other city is going through this, too."

Conduff said the city's departments will be absorbing all property tax increases. The only new taxes the city is planning to ask for, he said, are increases associated with the Riley County Police Department and the Manhattan Public Library.

"We will be using the property tax to balance funds. The property tax is only 16 percent of the budget," Conduff said. "Sales tax is 19 percent of the budget, which is our largest revenue source."

Conduff said sales tax will experience a "fairly conservative" 4 percent increase each year.

The plan also calls for a $10,000 contingency fund set up for emergency use by the city.

Some concern was expressed by Mayor Dave Fiser that the amount of money set aside was not adequate for an emergency fund.

"The actual amount used in the contingency fund can be changed, if possible, at a later date," Conduff said. "At the moment, we are only going over the process."

A cash reserve account was created in the plan, to be treated as an expenditure.

"A cash reserve account is needed for fiscal management and can also help to keep property taxes down," Conduff said.

The difference between a contingency fund and a cash reserve account is that the contingency fund may be considered for spending, while the cash reserve account is untouchable" said Commissioner Richard Hayter.

The Commission will meet again May 17 for a public hearing concerning the capital improvements program.

Cheap, but Effective

Cash machine overpays customers

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Your bank cash machine has gone berserk, giving out $20 bills as if they were fivers, yet your receipt shows no sign of overpayment.

Do you:

a.) Use the emergency telephone to alert the bank.

b.) Take the money and run.

c.) Call your friends to get down there, too.

If you chose the first option, you are a rare breed of cat, judging from an unintentional ethics experiment staged Sunday at a Manhattan bank branch.

Because some hapless employee loaded a canister of $20 bills into the slot for $5 bills, the First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Rochester's branch at First Avenue and 14th Street launched an accidental exercise in income redistribution.

Although the cash machine panel has a 24-hour telephone for reporting problems outside bank hours, the response was not overwhelming — "one or two calls," according to bank spokesman Robert Nolan.

Instead, a line of eager card holders quickly formed at the machine.

"I called everybody I knew," a writer, who asked not to be identified for fear of prosecution, told New York Newsday.

An actor named Chris, who asked for $40 and received $160, was amused by the range of reactions: "One person let out a holler of joy. Another barely raised his eyebrows and sneaked out. One woman went into a tirade about how she's getting back at the bank for money it owed her."

Nor did guilt apparently set in later. The bank received only one call on Monday reporting Sunday's malfunction. "I was really surprised the gentleman called," admitted Amelia Saavedra, the branch manager.

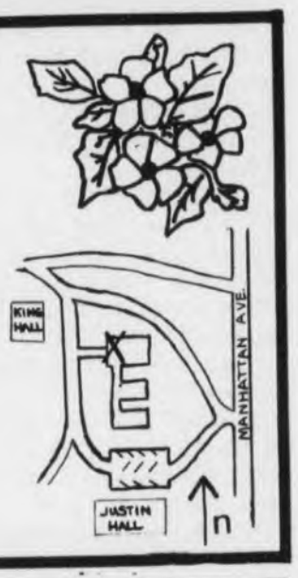
The most a customer could ask for was $200 — and get $800. Nolan said that although the bank's audit was not finished, it appeared the automated teller overpaid a total "somewhat less than $5,000."

Nolan said the bank was not dismayed by its customers' eagerness to profit from the foul-up. "I wouldn't want to characterize them all," he said of the customers. "I think some individuals were innocent recipients of the machine."

He said First Federal would learn the identities of those who reaped windfalls, once it determined how much was lost and who was making withdrawals during the time the machine was in the giving mood.

"We'll be able to determine who requested what, and what they really got," Nolan said, adding that customer accounts would be automatically charged for the amount overpaid.

The Manhattan district attorney's office said bank customers might be subject to prosecution for larceny. But it was unclear whether the bank would be able to prove that all the bills in the $5 slot were really $20s.



Bank cash machines in the city typically hold about $100,000, according to banking industry experts. Overpayments like Sunday's are said to be extremely rare.

Safety belt usage increases nationally

Kansas '87 fatality rate lowest in state history

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

More people have been killed in car accidents than in all the wars ever fought, said Sherry Wright, media coordinator for the Safety Belt Education Office, which is a joint project of the Kansas Department of Transportation and KSU Extension.

Safety belts have been required implements in cars since 1966 according to Mike Dix, project manager for the Safety Belt Education Office.

"It has been found in all states and countries that safety belt usage is increasing," Wright said. The safety belt use law, which requires that seat belts be worn, is in effect in 32 states and Washington, D.C.

People are careful immediately after the law is put into effect, but usage drops as enforcement tapers off, she said. It hasn't dropped off as much in Kansas as it has in other states, though, she said.

In 1986, almost 24 percent of automobile drivers and passengers wore seat belts. After the law went into effect in Kansas in 1987, about 42 percent of drivers and passengers started to wear them. Those who were caught not wearing them were fined $10.

Out of any 24-hour period, an accident would most likely occur between 6 a.m. Friday and 6 a.m. Saturday, Dix said.

In 1986, more than 19 billion miles were driven by cars in Kansas and the fatality rate was 2.52 per 100 million miles with 500 fatalities, Dix said. In 1987, more than 20 billion miles were driven and the fatality rate was 2.44 — the lowest in history — with 491 fatalities, he said.

In 1987, 90 percent of the people who died in traffic accidents and 95 percent who were seriously injured were not wearing seat belts, Wright said.

"Wearing safety belts does tend to make people safer drivers — you're in better control of your vehicle. People may just have safe behavior, which includes buckling safety belts," Wright said.

Adults aged 18-24 are considered to be at the highest risk for serious accidents because they have more accidents per miles driven, more deaths and more serious injuries, as well as lowest safety belt usage.

The 18-24 age group represents more than 74 percent of the car accidents with 32 percent of that involving fatalities, Dix said.

"The person most likely to have a fatal accident would be a male under 25 who has been drinking or using drugs because about half of the accidents involve alcohol or drugs," Dix said.

The victim would be with one or more companions in a rural area during the summer because 64 percent of the accidents in Kansas occur in a rural area, he said. The victim would also most likely be killed after 10 p.m. on a Saturday night and have a 3.5 percent greater chance of dying in an accident, Dix said.

"What's terrible is that they have a lot to live for. The life lost and dreams not fulfilled is devastating," Wright said.

"One of the biggest arguments against safety belt use laws is that it's an infringement on people's constitutional rights — (the argument being) people should have the freedom to decide if they want to wear their safety belt or not," she said.

"The person most likely to wear a safety belt would be a white female over 35 living in an urban area with a college education, a professional job and a high level income," Wright said.

In 20 years, we'll all be grateful for the safety belt use law because we'll realize it's saving lives, she said.

A Kansas legislator was saved by his safety belt and he started wearing it because of the law, Wright said.

"He says that when people complain about the law violating their rights and are guiding their vehicle on a public road, they're not dealing just with their own constitutional rights because if they have an accident and kill somebody, they're dealing with the rights of everybody around them," she said.

A Great Wall
An American Comedy Made in China
PG

"A Great Wall" (which gets its name from former Pres. Nixon's remark "The Great Wall is a great wall") is a good-humored comedy about a Chinese and Chinese American family reunited after a 30 year separation. Co-author, director and star Peter Wang portrays a Chinese American computer executive who quits his job and takes his family to visit his sister's family in Peking. The first American feature film to be shot in Communist China and a first-time collaboration between Chinese and American producers. "A Great Wall" is full of delightfully wry observations about contemporary life in China and many cultural differences between the two nations. (In English and Mandarin with English sub-titles.)

MUSHROOMS

They don't have to be truffles to be gourmet fungi

Mysterious, magical, marvelous — the mushroom. This creature comes in many forms and sizes, and can be found in many places. It may be delicious or deadly. Whether domestically cultivated or found in the wild, the mushroom is a popular food worldwide, cooked in a variety of ways.

Most people traditionally buy their mushrooms at the store, either fresh or canned. Yet some take the task of finding wild mushrooms and turn it into a sport. In Europe, hunting the gourmet fungus, the truffle, is a business. Dogs and pigs are trained to become "truffle hunters," and sniff out the fungus, which grows eight inches underground but has a powerful aroma.

Hunting for mushrooms is also considered a recreational activity in Kansas. Each late April and early May has Kansans, sometimes entire families, roaming the woods for the tasty morel, a fungus which resembles a sponge on a stem.

"It's a great way to get outside and enjoy nature," said Spencer Tomb, associate professor of biology. He said this year's morel season yield is not as plentiful as those in the past, however.

"It's just not as good so far this year," Tomb said. "We have had the moisture but not the warmth needed to bring the morels up."

Tomb said the wet soil and evening temperatures of around 50 degrees present the best conditions for the morel, which is not a true mushroom, but an ascomycete fungus. Tomb explained the differences between true mushrooms, which are only a type of fungi, and the morel.

"The differences are technical — they have to do with the reproduction process," he said.

Most mushrooms and puffballs contain a structure called a bosidium, which is where the spores in the fungus are located. The morel has a different type of structure called an ascus, which is its major reproductive mechanism.

The key in the growth of all mushrooms is moisture, Tomb said.

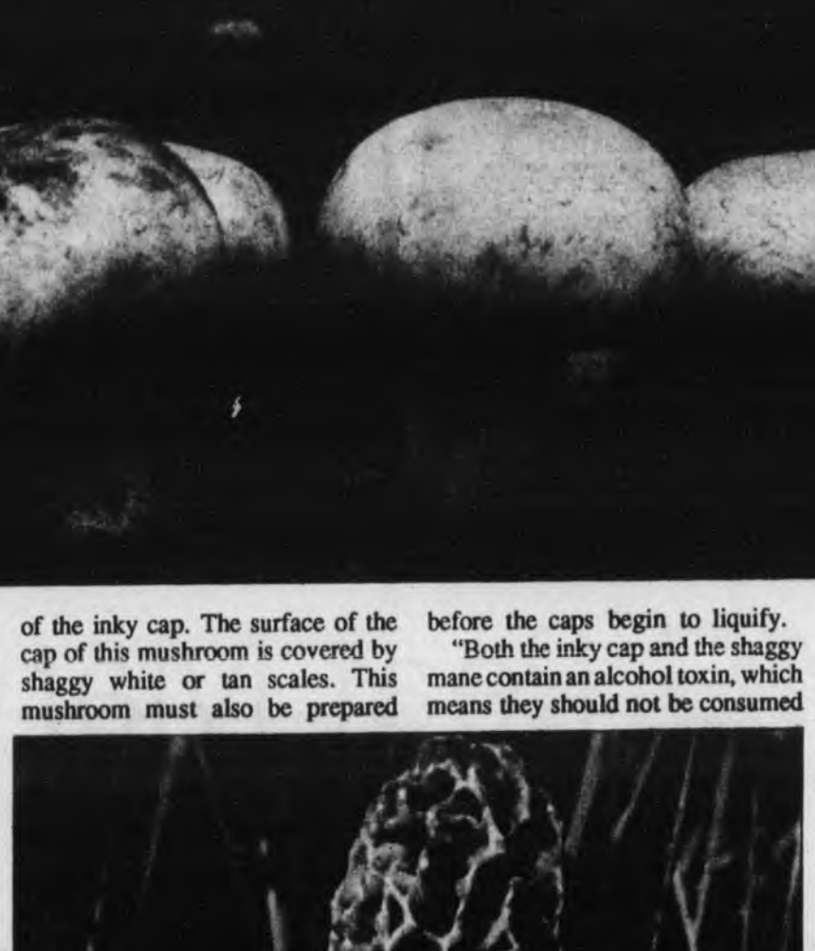
"Mushrooms and other fungi don't grow like plants," he said. The mushroom is already formed under the soil with all of its cells. It has to get moisture, which causes the cells to enlarge and forces the mushroom to 'pop' out of the ground."

When "hunting" mushrooms, Tomb said that "finding the first one is the toughest."

"It seems like once you find one, the others seem to pop up around you," he said.

Tomb said there are many wives' tales which claim to give advice to finding morels and the best times to find them.

"One saying is the morel is ready when an oak's leaf is the size of a mouse's ear," he said.



Besides the morel, which is the most common and popular type of fungus in the area, there are other types of edible mushrooms in Kansas.

"Oyster mushrooms, inky caps, shaggy manes, sulpher shelfs and puffballs are probably the main kinds of edible fungi in Kansas," Tomb said.

Oyster mushrooms are found in clumps on decaying logs, stumps and trees, and are found from spring until late fall. Inky caps appear in dense clumps around dying hardwood trees. Crops of this type of mushroom appear after every hard rain in the spring and summer. They should be picked while young and firm before they liquify.

The shaggy mane is a near relative of the inky cap. The surface of the cap of this mushroom is covered by shaggy white or tan scales. This mushroom must also be prepared before the caps begin to liquify.

"Both the inky cap and the shaggy mane contain an alcohol toxin, which means they should not be consumed with alcohol, as it brings out the poison in the mushrooms," Tomb said.

Sulpher shelfs appear in the summer and fall on both living and dead trees. They form layers of shelves, with white and fibrous flesh. They have a delicious flavor, and should be sliced or diced before cooking.

Another wild mushroom found and eaten in Kansas is the puffball. Puffballs are round, stemless mushrooms which grow in the late summer and fall, and vary in sizes up to 25 pounds. These mushrooms have a firm flesh and are delicious when sliced and fried or broiled.

Puffballs acquired their name because of the way in which they release their spores, said Charles Kramer, professor of biology.

"When the spores of the puffball are mature, they are released through the skin of the fungus in a puff when they are struck by wind or rain," he said.

Tomb and Kramer stressed the importance of identifying mushrooms correctly before eating them, as many varieties are poisonous and can be fatal. For example, there is a false morel, which is poisonous. It looks much like a true morel only it has a darker cap.

"There are supposed to be all sorts of different ways to tell which mushrooms are poisonous, but those usually don't work," Kramer said. "The best way to tell is to have the mushroom identified by someone who is experienced in identifying them."

"One way to learn to identify the difference between edible and poisonous mushrooms is to go out mushroom hunting with someone who is knowledgeable of the subject," Tomb said. "But a lot of times people are reluctant to let others know their secret hunting spots."

Tomb said there are also many good books which can serve as identification guides for mushroom hunters.

Even an edible mushroom can have ill effects on a person, Kramer said.

"It depends on the person. Sometimes an edible mushroom may make them sick. The only thing they can do is try one and see," he said.

Once found, wild mushrooms can be prepared in numerous ways. They should first be washed in cold water to rid them of any insects, dirt or debris. After rinsing the mushrooms, they may be cooked as desired. One of the most popular ways is to fry them.

According to "Mushrooms: Wild and Edible," by Vincent Marteka, mushrooms should be cooked quickly over low heat. Too much heat or cooking will make them tough. One of the best ways to learn how a particular mushroom tastes is to saute the caps in a small amount of butter or margarine.

To preserve mushrooms, methods such as drying have been used. Drying changes the texture of the mushroom, but the flavor remains. To freeze mushrooms, cut the mushroom into smaller pieces after cleaning, place in a freezer bag and put in the freezer. Many mushrooms may be kept frozen up to a year.

Stuffed Morels

4 large morels
Olive oil
¼ cup minced ham
1 small onion, minced
¼ cup pureed spinach
3 tablespoons butter, melted
Salt and pepper
Grated cheese

Slice the morels in half lengthwise, wipe the insides, dip the exteriors in oil, and place on a baking sheet. Mix onion, ham, and spinach with butter. Season to taste. Stuff hollows of the mushrooms with the mixture and sprinkle with cheese. Bake at 375 degrees for 20 minutes. Serves 4.

Morels in Cream Sauce

½ pound of butter
1 pound of morels, sliced
Pinch of salt
Juice of ¼ lemon
Salt and pepper to taste
¼ cup flour
2 cups heavy cream

Melt half of the butter in saucepan. Add morels with the lemon juice, a pinch of salt, and one twist of the pepper mill. Bring to a boil, tossing the mushrooms often. Cover and cook for 10 minutes. Drain morels, reserving the liquid. Melt the remaining butter in a saucepan and mix in sifted flour to make a smooth paste. Cook 3 minutes over low heat so that the flour doesn't burn. Remove from the heat and cool to room temperature. When cool, add the cream, stirring constantly with whisk, until the mixture thickens. Add enough of the reserved liquid to achieve the desired consistency. Add morels. Serve on toast or over rice. Serves 4.

Breaded Puffballs

1-2 large puffballs
2 eggs
Salt and pepper to taste
Cracker crumbs
Butter

Slice the puffballs about ¼ -inch thick. Beat the eggs slightly and add salt and pepper. Dip both sides of puffball slices in egg mixture, then into cracker crumbs and saute in butter until golden brown. Serves 4 to 6.

Videofest to feature former MTV announcer

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Music Television fans will recognize dark-haired Martha Quinn, former MTV announcer, at the video dance concert sponsored by the Union Program Council in the Union Ballroom Friday night.

Quinn will be a guest host at the concert as a part of the grand prize giveaway in an Agree Shampoo & Conditioner national sweepstakes contest.

Quinn, who was born and raised in upstate New York, said she had mixed feelings when she heard the grand prize winner was a student at K-State and thus entitled to a videofest dance at the campus.

"At first I said: 'Manhattan? All right — I'm going home!' And then when I heard it was Manhattan, Kan., I said 'Hey, that's a different story ... Where the hell is Manhattan, Kan.?,'" Quinn said.

But since then she said she has heard nothing but praise for the Sunflower State and more specifically, the city of Manhattan.

Quinn is working in California and taking acting lessons.

A friend in one of her classes was stationed for a time at Fort Riley and convinced her "how beautiful Kansas is," she said, adding that she hoped to experience the college nightlife in Aggieville while she was here.

Quinn attended college at New York University and graduated with a degree in broadcast journalism. She auditioned for the then-forming cable channel MTV about three weeks after graduation.

Her previous experience in the field consisted of working at a radio station in New York and doing televsion commercials while in college.

During college, she interned at a radio station where she said her job could be described as a "sub-gopher — because at least a gopher gets paid."

But Quinn emphasized that even those positions can pay off someday.

"You never know where your opportunities may lie," she said.

Quinn, who was one of the founding disc jockeys at MTV, offered some insight as to why the channel has obtained such popularity.

"It's an unbeatable combination," she said. "We all grew up with the rock 'n' roll radio and television — this (channel) just put them together."

Although Quinn said she enjoyed her time spent at MTV, she was ready to move on after six years of disc jockeying.

"MTV was a fabulous thing — a great way to start," she said. "But I was ready to move on and grow a little bit beyond hosting music."

California is her home now, where she has been working for about a year.

Christian rock band Petra to perform at Field House

By Becky Ives
Collegian Reporter

Christianity and heavy-metal rock will combine tonight in Ahearn Field House when Petra — a Christian rock band — takes the stage at 7:30.

Petra is on tour promoting its latest album, "This Means War." The band was founded by Bob Hartman, the only remaining original band member, in 1974. The band has released 10 albums, and has been nominated for Grammy awards in 1984, 1985 and 1986.

"Mark Posson and I worked on this a year ago, putting the concert together," said Doug Ingmire, director of student development at Manhattan Christian College. "It's good seeing it all come together."

Posson is a senior at MCC and is the student chairman of the MCC concert committee.

The concert is being sponsored by the Manhattan Christian College and Youth for Christ.

"There is a huge light show with it, and it is as big a concert as any that has been held in Ahearn," Ingmire said.

Members of the band include Hartman, lead guitarist and principal songwriter; John Schlitt, lead vocalist; John Lawry, keyboard player and songwriter; Mark Kelly, bass guitar player, and Louie Weaver, drummer.

Kelly is a former Assembly of God youth pastor, and Weaver once played with the Nashville Symphony.

In addition to the grammy nominations, Petra has been named the number one Christian band by Charisma Magazine, Campus Life, Contemporary Christian Music Magazine and by the Harvest Rock Syndicate Readers' Poll.

Petra describes its music as an effective way to reach non-Christians with its message. Members consider themselves as Christians with a desire to communicate the gospel first, and as musicians second.

Tickets are on sale in advance for $9.50 or at the door for $12.50. They can be purchased at S.M. Hanson Music Store, Manhattan Christian College, Christian Books and Gifts, Cross Reference Gift and Book Shop or Abundant Life Book Store.

Proceeds of the concert will be used to pay for the band, and the remaining money will be divided between the Campus Life fund and the Manhattan Christian College.

Sailors begin repairs on disabled submarine

By The Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — Sailors boarded the disabled submarine USS Bonefish drifting off the Florida coast Tuesday and began testing and pumping out what they said appeared to be toxic gases inside, a Navy spokesman said.

Earlier Tuesday, 19 of the 22 sailors injured in Sunday's explosions and fire were discharged from a hospital in Jacksonville, Fla.

The five-man boarding crew planned to continue its work throughout the night before any effort was made to enter the submarine, said Lt. Fred Henney, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet in Norfolk.

"Initial reports indicate the air contained high concentrations of toxic gases," Henney said. He said he could not identify the gas.

"They're pumping air through the ship to get the toxic gases to leave," he said.

The Bonefish was submerged when the explosions and fire began Sunday during a training exercise. The crew was able to get it to the surface and the skipper ordered it evacuated because of heavy smoke and toxic fumes.

The frigate USS Carr and the aircraft carrier John F. Kennedy, both of which were on routine exercises with the Bonefish, evacuated 89 of the 92 crew members.

The boarding crew did not enter the sub and had no report of the condition inside the vessel and nothing further on the three missing sailors.

Earlier Tuesday, Navy salvage crews briefly boarded the Bonefish to close an open hatch and prevent water from getting in the vessel, but high winds and rough seas prevented them from beginning testing.

With winds of 21 knots, seas were running 6 to 8 feet and washing over the deck, Henney said.

"The decision was to close the hatch to eliminate the chance of water getting in," Henney said.

A civilian submarine expert said the explosions and fire that disabled the diesel-electric submarine were typical of such pre-nuclear subs.

"It's the classic way the diesel-electric submarines go down the tubes in peacetime," Norman Friedman, author of "Submarine Design and Development," said in a telephone interview from his New York City home.

dents," White said.

When selling a diet plan, quacks usually focus eating in only one food group and quick weight loss without any work, according to the March 1988 Better Business Bureau newsletter.

Some pills that promote weight loss may cause nervousness, nausea, diarrhea, vomiting and insomnia, and may also be addictive.

"These pills don't work. People who are subjected to these pills think just taking some magic potion will take off weight, but it doesn't happen this way," she said.

Quack devices are also sold promoting weight loss and body toning. For example, electrical muscle stimulators can be used for physical therapy treatment; however, they have been seized when advertised to promote weight loss. According to the newsletter, these devices can be dangerous when used incorrectly.

"These diet promotions gear toward the obsession to be slim. They really focus on the needs and desires of people," White said.

Tanning pills have also recently hit the market. Businesses advertise these pills to produce a healthy tan that lasts year round. The newsletter said these pills have been recognized as an unsafe alternative to outdoor or indoor tanning.

They generally contain a color additive to color the body, but the FDA has not approved this ingredient for use by the public. Furthermore, according to the FDA, these pills may cause fatty deposits in the blood, liver and skin.

"Look-alike" drugs are sold as a substitute to illegal street drugs, White said. These pills look like the illegal street drugs.

They are sold in shops and by mail, the seller often implying that the pills are the illegal drugs they resemble, according to the newsletter. The pills, though, contain congestants, caffeine and other stimulants.

The FDA calls these "dangerous, illogical combinations." The newsletter said most states have banned the marketing and manufacture of look-alike drugs. However, the availability of these drugs is still looked upon as a health and safety threat.

"A dramatic reaction — even death — can happen by taking these look-alike pills with alcohol," said White. "The best thing to do is to stay away from all drugs.

"They are only out to get money, so be careful," she said.

People who feel they have been a victim of quackery should report it to the Better Business Bureau in Topeka by calling (913) 232-0454 and the Food and Drug Administration in Washington, D.C., White said. Victims should also check with a doctor to make sure whether any type of drug they have taken is harmful.

sons, not all mothers wish to return to school, Doyle said.

Due to confidentiality, no specific figures are kept on the number of high school students in the Manhattan district who become pregnant each year, Eversmeyer said.

When Doyle is approached by a student who suspects she is pregnant, she said she emphasizes open communication.

"I discuss it with her and keep her as calm as possible," Doyle said. "I also give her what she needs to know about whether or not she is pregnant."

Pregnancy information is first provided to the student for her to determine whether she is actually pregnant.

Doyle said in many cases the girl is not actually pregnant.

If she does not want to go to a private doctor for pregnancy testing, information is provided about the county health agency where the tests are performed without parental consent.

Doyle said she encourages the girls to talk about the situation with their parents. She also provides any information the students ask for on abortion, adoption or keeping the infant.

"I don't encourage anything (any alternative) except to talk to the parents," she said. "I just give them the information."

Almost 50 percent of the girls Doyle has counseled about their pregnancy decide to keep the baby.

"They see it (keeping the baby) as a way out, and they usually weren't happy at school anyway," Doyle said.

Environment plays a large role in the girl's decision, Doyle said. Often the girl's parents covertly agree with her decision not to go back to school because they are sympathetic, having experienced the same problem when they were teen-agers.

Also it just seems the easiest way out for their daughter, she said. However, the mother's decision in keeping the baby is frequently quite different from her parents'.

"The kids tell me, 'I've had such a rough life, and I don't want my child to have one too. If I keep it, I know I can give it a better life,'" she said.

Reynolds dominating runner

400-meter sprinter trying to qualify for Olympic Trials

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

One of the best talents on K-State's track team keeps a low profile, but turns in first-place finishes and record-setting performances.

This talent is Jeff Reynolds, a senior from Akron, Ohio, who has been dominating the Big Eight Conference in the 400-meter dash.

Reynolds has captured three Big Eight titles and set two school records in his two seasons in a Wildcat uniform. During the 1988 indoor and outdoor seasons, Reynolds has only one blemish on his otherwise perfect record, as he has finished in the top spot in six out of the seven meets he has competed in.

Reynolds captured his first conference title in the 400-meter dash at the outdoor meet in 1987 with a time of 46.21. That time ranks fourth on K-State's all-time list. He also ran the anchor leg on the winning 1,600-meter relay team at that same meet.

This past indoor season, he grabbed his third Big Eight title when he won the 600-yard dash with time of 1:09.97, the sixth best mark in K-State history.

Reynolds recorded his personal best in the 400-meter dash this spring as he posted a mark of 45.8 at a meet with UCLA and Houston April 16 in Westwood, Calif. That time, which moved him into third place on the all-time list, also qualified him for the NCAA Championships in June.

"I'm feeling pretty good right now," Reynolds said. "I'm healthy, and this is the first time I've been healthy in a long time."

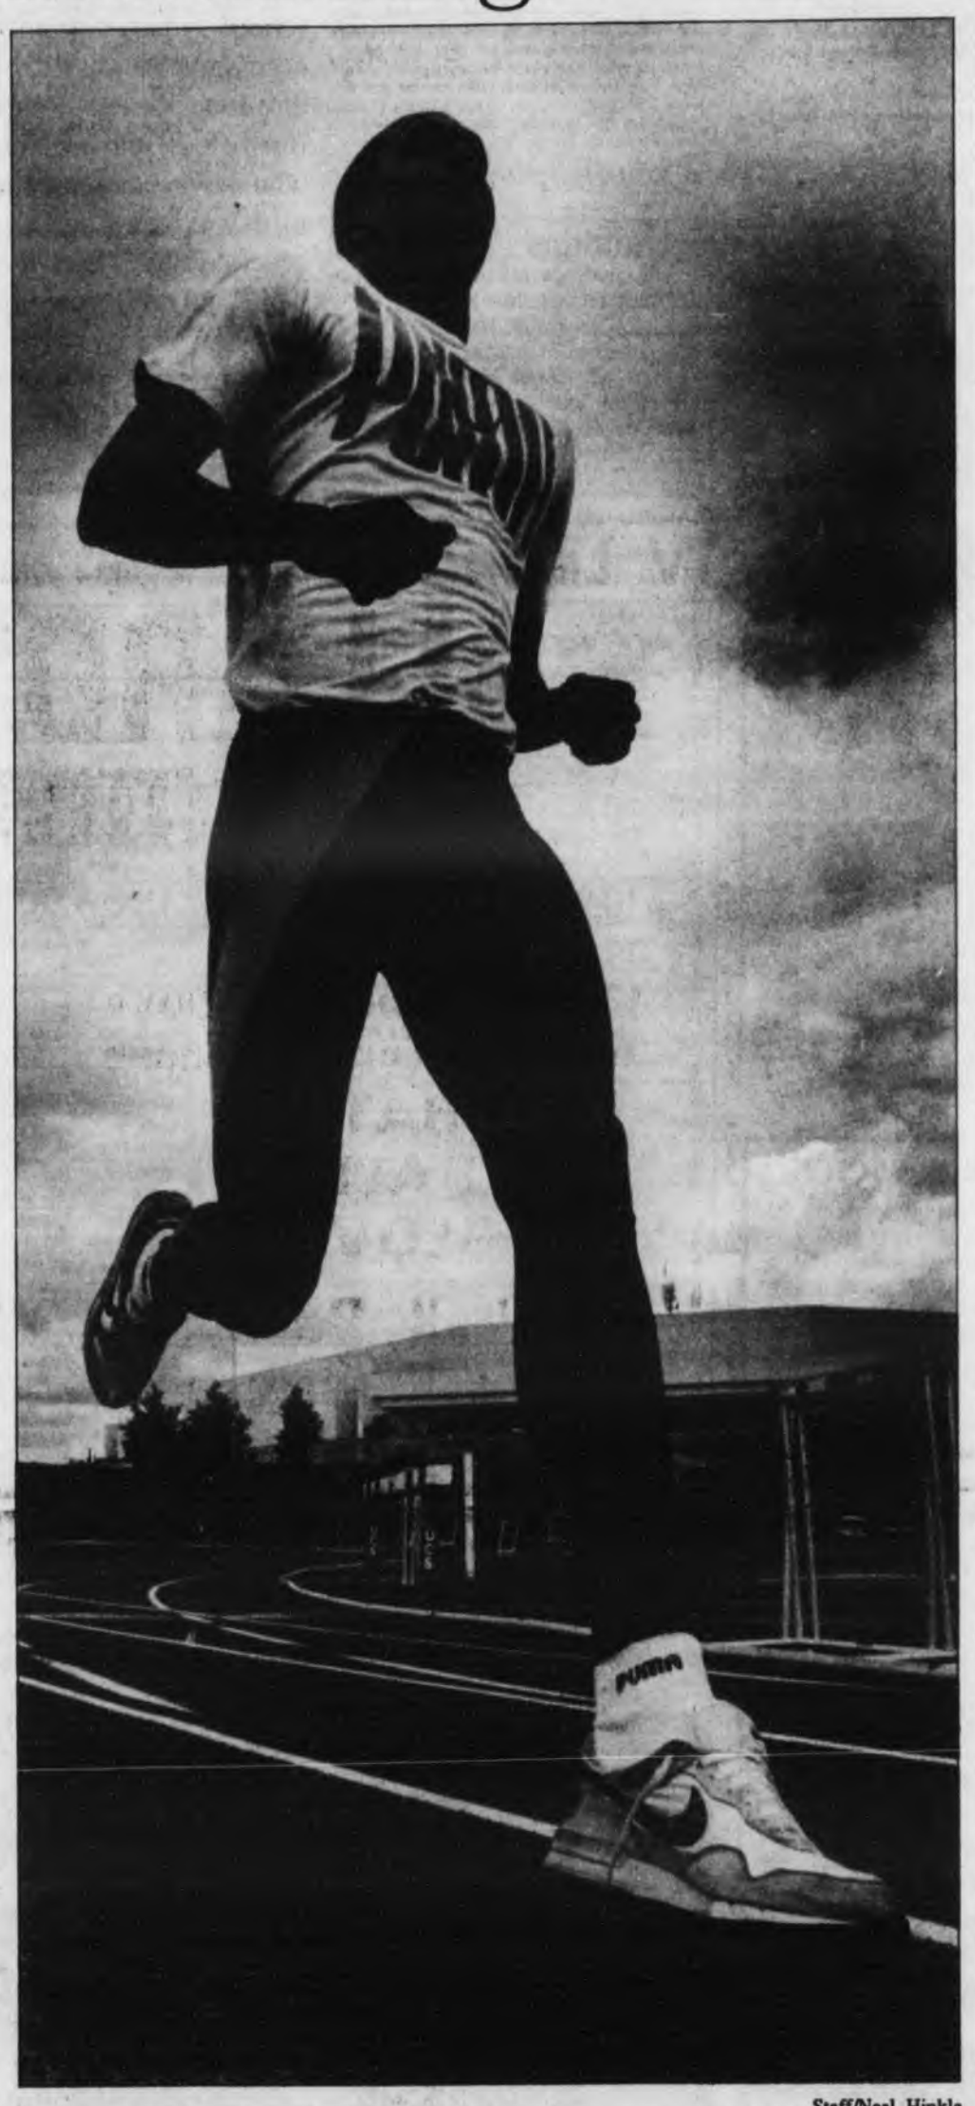
Reynolds transferred to K-State from Butler County Community College where he was an All-American in the 400-meter dash. His running talent is not the only talent in the his family, either.

His older brother, Butch, is the ranked as the top 400-meter sprinter in the world. The younger Reynolds has no problem answering the question about a rivalry between the two.

"Yes, because he's the best in the world and he's my brother," Reynolds said. "If I can beat him, I would be beating the best in the world and also my brother."

Training has been a very important aspect of Reynolds' success. His training regimen includes lifting weights two days a week for his upper body and then taking to the track for his running and stretching workout. His track work consists mostly of running 300- and 500-meter sprints and also working at the 65-meter length to help strengthen his performance down the final stretch.

"I've really been working hard," Reynolds said. "The beginning of the week is really hard work and then toward the end it gets a little better. If I can stay healthy, I can be more selective with my meets and pick the good ones."



Reynolds will be looking to defend his outdoor season 400-meter dash title at this year's Big Eight Championships. His sights are set on repeating, but he said the competition he will be facing is be top-notch.

"I'm going for it," Reynolds said. "There is some good competition in the Big Eight and people are going to be giving me a challenge. I want to perform when it counts."

Reynolds is a social sciences major and expects his degree in May 1989. But, this is only one of Reynolds' goals. He is looking forward to the Olympic Trials set for July.

In order to make the trials, he needs to post an automatic time of 45.82. His current best of 45.8 is a hand-held time which converts to a 46.04 automatic time.

"I'm just shy of the Olympic Trials," Reynolds said. "I just want to qualify for the trials and do my best. If I make the Olympics, that would be that much better."

Staff/Neal Hinkle

Jeff Reynolds has been dominating the Big Eight Conference in the 400-meter dash, finishing first in the event in six of the seven indoor meets he competed in this season.

Ichabods next foe for K-State, 26-17

By The Collegian Staff

After falling to the Missouri Tigers in a four-game series last weekend, K-State's baseball team will look to get back on track today against Washburn in a 4 p.m. contest at Frank Myers Field.

The 'Cats, 26-17 overall and 5-11 in the Big Eight Conference, will be trying to rebound from the mistakes that took them out of the Missouri series over the weekend.

"We're not really competing against Washburn as much as we're emphasizing taking care of ourselves," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "We didn't play up to our capabilities last weekend (against the Tigers)."

K-State lost to Missouri 12-8 Friday, 5-3 and 5-4 Saturday and 17-11 Sunday in a series in which K-State wins would have enabled them to move into fourth place in the conference.

"We had (Monday) off to regroup in our own minds. (Tuesday) we had a great practice and emphasized the importance of concentrating on the way we are playing, no matter who we are playing," Clark said. "The kids played in practice with a lot of enthusiasm and showed a lot of pride in their work."

This afternoon, the Ichabods will be trying to avenge last year's 19-10 loss to K-State.

"(Washburn) is a good offensive team. Defensively, I don't know a lot about their pitching," Clark said. "We're in the mid-week thing and will probably throw a couple of pitchers at them."

Today's game is the first of six consecutive games. Thursday, the Wildcats will travel to Wichita to play the Shockers. Friday, they return home for a four-game conference series with Iowa State.

'Cat shortstop confident in playing capabilities; wants chance in pro ball

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

The 1988 season has been one of ups and downs for the K-State baseball team. Senior shortstop Scott Spangenberg has been riding that same yo-yo for much of the season.

Spangenberg, who is from Milwaukee, Wis., is enjoying a very solid year at the plate as he is hitting .387 with eight home runs and 50 runs batted in.

But when he has taken to his fielding position, the success has not been as sweet. After committing only 15 errors in 49 games last season, he has already tallied 21 miscues in 43 games this season.

"Last year, I worked real hard at (fielding) and it payed off for me," Spangenberg said. "This year I came out and got a couple of errors early and then I starting thinking about it. I think it's with my mechanics. I'm confident now and I want the ball hit to me."

But his fielding play should not overshadow his performance at the plate. His RBI total, along with 11 doubles, ranks second on the team this season. His eight home runs is the fourth highest on the squad. During a series sweep of Kansas April 15-18, the first ever by the Wildcats of another Big Eight Conference school, Spangenberg knocked out three home runs, two of which were grand slams, and drove in 12 runs in four games.

"At KU, I don't know if it was the small park or the air was thin or what," Spangenberg said. "As a team, we hit the ball really well: I got a couple of balls up in my wheelhouse and just made good contact."

Spangenberg had another banner game in a non-conference contest with Creighton April 19, the day after the Kansas series, K-State trailed, 11-10, going into the bottom of the ninth inning. Spangenberg came to the plate with two runners on and promptly hit the first pitch out of the park for a game-winning three-run homer.

"(Spangenberg) could very easily be the third-best shortstop in the nation," baseball coach Mike Clark said. "The problem is that the two ahead of him are in the same conference."

Those two players are Monty Fariss of Oklahoma State and Dave Silvestri of Missouri.

Spangenberg came to K-State from Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, where he played under Clark. He was recruited to K-State by former Wildcat coach, Gary Vaught. Spangenberg had already signed when he found out Vaught was taking the head coaching job at Oral Roberts University.

"I got recruited by (Vaught) and signed my letter," Spangenberg said. "Vaught then called and said he wanted me to go to ORU."

But then Clark was named head coach at K-State, and the benefit of being able to continue playing under the same coach was too great to ignore.

"It's a lot easier sticking with the same coach because you already know his system," Spangenberg said.

His nickname "Rat" also followed him to K-State.

"I got it in high school the summer of my senior year," Spangenberg said. "My roommate at NEO was from Milwaukee and he told everyone just to call me 'Rat.' I don't think many people even knew my real name."

Spangenberg would like to get a chance in the professional ranks after he leaves K-State, but said he would not be disappointed if it doesn't happen.

"I really think I have a chance," Spangenberg said. "I'm not getting talked to by a whole lot of people. I just want to go out with some good stats, I don't want to press. If it (go pro) happens, it does. If it doesn't, I feel I did my best."

Positive attitude helps Funk adjust in losing season

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

Editor's Note: This is the second in a three-part series on pressures faced by those involved in major college athletics.

To Elyse Funk, the 1987-88 season was the worst in that the women's basketball team established the first losing season in the history of the program.

Funk entered the season tabbed as the Lady Cats' starting point guard and was expected to guide the team to another winning season.

It never happened.

The women's team finished the season with a dismal record of 8-20 and won only one Big Eight Conference game.

"All that losing made the whole year difficult," Funk said. "It made it difficult both on and off the court.

"If you start losing, then everything else starts to go down the tubes. If you have some studying to do, it's difficult to open the books. Everything just gets that much harder to do."

She said that at the beginning of the season, the pressure to win games existed, but midway through the season it was gone.

"Everybody seemed to give up and look to next season," Funk said. "Everybody was saying that we were a young team and that we would struggle all season long.

"About midway through the season people started saying, 'wait until next year,'" she added. "If that was the case, then why didn't we just stop there and practice until the opener next season?"

Funk said that even though the pressure to win lessened during the course of the season, the self-pressure to become a better player was as strong as ever.

"We (the team) didn't give up, because we put pressure on ourselves to improve with every game," she said. "I think we made some improvement near the end of the season, and it'll go over into next season."

Funk said the pressure to succeed next season shouldn't be taken as such — yet.

"I don't see the pressure being applied to succeed next season as pressure," she said. "I see it more as excitement for an upcoming season."

The youthfulness of the Lady Cats, comprised of six sophomores, four freshmen and one junior transfer, added to the responsibility put on Funk and the other "senior" players on the team.

"The sophomores were asked to be seniors," Funk said. "I just don't think that we were ready for that kind of change."

Pressure from coaches' expectations was also a factor for Funk.

When asked if Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman did add a lot of pressure toward being successful, Funk's response was short and simple.

"Yup," she said. "But you have to understand that she's always been with winning teams.

"Last year we established the first losing season in Lady Cat history. We didn't reach her goals and we didn't reach our goals. She didn't put direct pressure on us, but you could feel it when she started to apply it."

Academic eligibility is another concern for all athletes.

"For the younger people — the ones who are just coming in — they have to adjust and learn to discipline themselves," she said. "I know I struggled quite a bit at times last season. I was used to doing well in high school, but (at K-State) it's a lot tougher.

"The younger kids have to learn the meaning of time management," she added.

K-State finishes seventh in championships

From Wire Reports

After the first day of the Big Eight Conference Championships, K-State's women's golf coach was optimistic, despite the fact his Wildcats were in last place.

"We didn't play all that well, but not all that bad either," said Coach Rob Sedorcek said after his team combined for a score of 535 after the first day of play. "(Tuesday) is a new day, so hopefully we'll improve."

Things didn't improve Tuesday, as the Wildcats finished seventh among the seven-team field at the tournament, which was played at the Par 72, 5,047-yard Stillwater (Okla.) Country Club.

The Wildcats carded 18-hole rounds of 364-351-375 for a 54-hole score of 1,090, finishing 146 strokes behind winner Oklahoma State.

Oklahoma State captured its fifth consecutive league title with rounds of 315-310-319 for a final score of 944.

OSU, which dominated the championships, had a first-day total of 464 and was 15 strokes ahead of runner-up Oklahoma, which shot a 479 Monday. The Sooners finished 48 strokes behind Oklahoma State with a 992.

Freshman Chris Adams topped K-State's individual scoring with rounds of 88-84-95 for a 267 total which placed her 29th in the field. Other Wildcat scorers were Jill Zientara 96-87-86—269; Keli Blake 85-94-96—275; Beth Holmberg 95-86-98—279; and Cory Harlow 106-108-112—326.

Oklahoma State's Eva Dahloff claimed medalist honors for the second straight year. She tallied rounds of 76-76-82 for a 54-hole score of 234.

The medalist title by an Oklahoma State golfer marked the eighth straight year that a member of the school's women's golf team gained the honor.

The tournament marked the end of the spring season for K-State's women's team.

K-State's men's team returns to action this weekend. It will be playing in the Midwestern Intercollegiate Invitational at Lake Geneva, Wis.

The men will be looking to return to the top spot in the tournament. After three consecutive first-place finishes, the men finished second in the Wichita State Invitational last week.

Senate approves trade bill

Veto threatened due to amendments

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved a sweeping trade bill, 63-36, on Wednesday and sent it to the White House, but supporters failed to muster the two-thirds support needed to override a threatened presidential veto.

"I believe that this bill is dead," Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., said after the vote. But he and other supporters said a more moderate version still had a chance of passage later this year if Reagan's veto is sustained.

Sponsors said the bill's main downfall was a plan to require employers to give notice of plant closings and major layoffs.

Democratic leaders also were unable to unsnarl a dispute over the bill's curbs on Alaskan oil exports and thus failed in an effort to win over that state's disgruntled Republican senators. In the end, 11 Republicans defied the White House and voted for the measure.

One Democrat voted against the bill, retiring Sen. William Proxmire of Wisconsin, who said he was concerned over the bill's easing of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

The White House itself brought heavy lobbying pressure to head off any recurrence of last week's defeat in the House, where the measure passed by more than a veto-proof margin. Most wavering Republicans ended up opposing the bill.

Deputy White House Press Secretary B.J. Cooper said that "based on today's vote, the numbers are there" to sustain a veto, but added, "We will continue working with both houses to make sure that when the veto goes up that it is sustained."

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton K. Yeutter said: "I am encouraged by today's Senate vote and optimistic that the president's veto of the omnibus trade bill will be sustained." But he added that it "would be tragic" if lawmakers did not try for a more moderate version.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, told reporters he would work to override the president's veto. But he said it was "obvious that the odds are against us."

Arts and Science's Carpenter accepts Memphis State post

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Officials from Memphis State University in Tennessee have selected William "Jack" Carpenter, associate dean of arts and sciences, to be the dean of their College of Arts and Sciences.

Carpenter, who has had his current position since 1974, will take over at Memphis State on Aug. 21.

Carpenter moved to Manhattan from Long Island, N.Y. He said he was expecting to stay three or four years and then move on, but decided to stay when he fell in love with Manhattan and K-State.

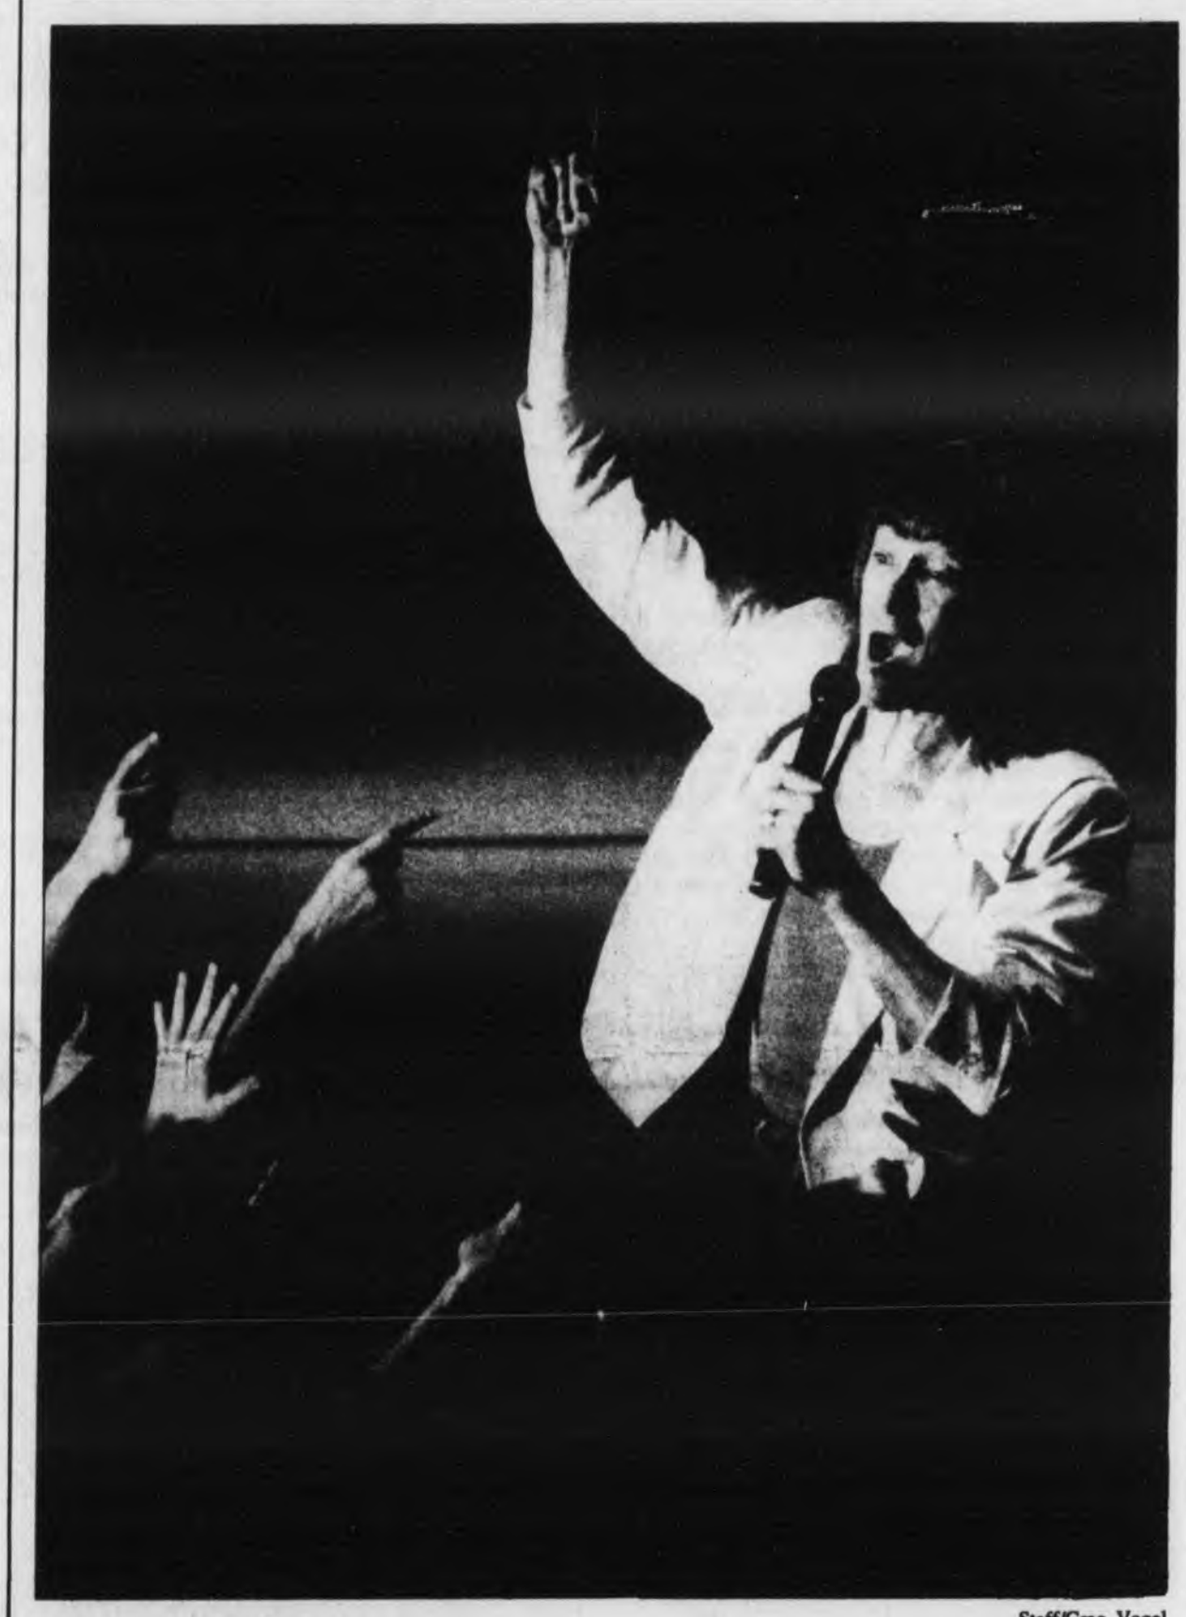
"K-State is a place where you can work hard and have an impact," he said. "You can see your ideas realized and have fun doing it.

"Every year when I help with the arts and sciences budget, I realize more and more that we give a great education here for the money we get.

"We have a fine bunch of students getting a fine education and a fine bunch of faculty giving a fine education," he said.

University President Jon Wefald said he was happy for Carpenter.

William "Jack" Carpenter



"This is a real opportunity for him, and I know he will do his very best," Wefald said. "He has served superbly at K-State, not only in the College of Arts and Sciences, but University-wide as a teacher, a scholar and an administrator. He is one of the best administrators K-State has ever had and I wish him the best."

Carpenter is a movie and drama critic for the Manhattan Mercury and KKSU radio. He has also written several journal articles and books, including a textbook for short story writing, "Elements of Fiction."

Thomas Isenhour, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said, "Jack's been a great contributor to K-State. We'll miss him greatly.

"We must wish him well. We know he will do an outstanding job."

Carpenter began his tenure at K-State in 1973 as an associate professor of English and was promoted to associate dean the following year.

Committee agrees to pay $9 million on MOE

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Legislature sent about three-quarters of the state's next annual budget to Gov. Mike Hayden on Wednesday, the first day of a brief wrap-up session.

The House and the Senate passed eight appropriations bills containing close to $3 billion in spending. Hayden had proposed a $4.2 billion budget for the next fiscal year, which begins July 1.

Hayden praised the Legislature for tackling major appropriations bills on the first day of its wrap-up session. House-Senate conference committee negotiated the compromises before the wrap-up session began.

The bills include financing for the state's universities and hospitals, welfare programs, many major state agencies and general government operations.

"Their actions today in passing all but three of the remaining regular appropriations bills hopefully signifies a readiness to bring this session to a timely and orderly close," Hayden said.

Among major bills were money for the so-called Margin of Excellence program for State Board of Regents universities, the 'KanWork' welfare reform program and salary increases for judges.

However, the Senate rejected a compromise spending bill containing general state aid for the state's 303 public school districts, sending it back to a House-Senate negotiating committee.

The Senate rejected a conference committee report that deleted an additional $7.5 million from school financing that the Senate included in its version of the bill.

Senate Minority Leader Michael Michael Johnston, D-Parsons, urged rejection of the report to include the additional funding. Inclusion of the additonal money would bring the appropriatons for schools up to $481 million.

Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Lenexa, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, pointed out that Johnston had already amended another, final omnibus appropriatons bill to include the $7.5 million for general aid to schools.

"That was done as a back-up measure," said Johnston, who replied that the Senate overwhelming approved increasing school aid by $7.5 million.

The Margin of Excellence program was proposed by the regents as a way of making state universities more competitive with their peers in other states and to increase faculty salaries.

A conference committee agreed to spend a total of $9.1 million to fund the program, $5.3 million for salary increases and $3.8 million to improve other academic programs. The regents had requested a total of $10.8 million, $6.3 million for salary increases and $4.5 million for other programs. The extra money would increase faculty salaries by an average of 7.5 percent.

Rep. Robert Vancrum, R-Overland Park, urged his colleages to reject the conference committee's compromise on the regents budget. The House had voted only to fund the salary increases.

Also approved was an appropriations bill for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services that earmarks $5 million to KanWork, a program intended to put welfare recipients onto pay rolls.

'Uncle Jack' retiring after 34 years

Durgan sees many changes

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

Uncle Jack is saying goodbye.

Jack Durgan, professor of interior architecture, referred to as "Uncle Jack" by his students, is completing his 34th and final year at K-State. He is head of the Department of Interior Architecture, which he founded in 1972.

Profile

A licensed architect, Durgan has been teaching at K-State since 1954 and has seen many changes during his tenure.

During Durgan's early years at K-State, Architecture and Allied Arts was a department within the College of Engineering.

The dean of the engineering college, Dean Fischer, proposed that a separate college be developed for architecture, and several meetings were conducted to determine the areas of professional design the college should address, Durgan said.

Fischer had a vision of an architecture college which would comprehensively offer degrees in different, adjunct areas of architecture, including landscape architecture and interior architecture, he said.

Additionally, Durgan said a number of students, who were enrolled in architecture at the time, expressed a desire to receive more interior design experience. As a result, Durgan began teaching elective courses in the area.

Professional practitioners, he said, expressed a growing need to intitiate a full program in interior design. They saw a need developing in the professional world.

"Thus, the Department of Interior Architecture in the College of Architecture was born," Durgan said. "The first year, I was the only faculty member of the department, which was comprosed of two students. I taught everything."

By the third year of the program, he said, enrollment had grown to 12 to 15 new students each year, and along with the growing number of students came more faculty members. Now, the department has five faculty members.

"The faculty we have been able to bring in over the years has been, for the most part, retained," he said.

Discussion focuses on rural life, stress

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

The belief that life on the family farm is all green pastures and blue skies may be correct in some cases, but a closer look often reveals the opposite.

The Rural Special Education Teacher Training Project on Wednesday sponsored a brown bag discussion on role transitions and relationships in rural families, focusing on the stress and challenges faced by a farm family.

"On the average, farm families support higher levels of stress than most business executives," said Charlie Griffin, a rural family support specialist.

Farm families face limited economic opportunities, bad weather, long hours, no days off, high accident rates and market changes which directly affect their income, Griffin said.

While the lure to choose such an occupation may not seem apparent, geographic isolation often plays a role in determining why farm families stay with the lifestyle. They choose the isolation, are pleased with it and don't want to give it up, Griffin

Robbers impersonate police

TOULOUSE, France — Robbers disguised as police officers entered a Brink's depot in this southern city Wednesday, broke open strongboxes and stole an estimated $2.7 million, police said.

According to police, the robbery took place in two stages. Armed men went to the homes of two Brink's officials, taking them and their families hostage overnight.

At 6 a.m., the officials were taken to the central Brink's depot. The robbers, believed to have numbered eight, disarmed employees, opened the boxes and fled with the money about two hours later in two vans.

It was the second Brink's robbery in eight months. On Sept. 2, armed men wounded two Brink's employees at Toulouse airport and got away with about $4.4 million.

Around The Nation

Man to be tried in Argentina

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal judge on Wednesday approved the extradition to Argentina of a general charged with mass murders of civilians during the former military government's "dirty war" against suspected leftists.

U.S. District Judge D. Lowell Jensen ruled that Carlos Suarez Mason, 64, could be tried in Argentina on charges of 39 murders allegedly conducted by soldiers under his command. The maximum sentence is life in prison.

He rejected Suarez Mason's claim that the actions were political and therefore exempt from extradition, saying the exception for political offenses does not apply to "deaths that occurred to disarmed prisoners."

The crimes took place during "a time in the history of a nation where the rule of law was abandoned," Jensen said.

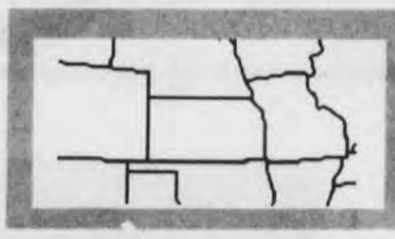
Fewer request tax extensions

WASHINGTON — Maybe the new federal tax law isn't so confusing after all.

The Internal Revenue Service said Wednesday that the number of taxpayers who asked for automatic four-month extensions of the April 15 filing deadline was 18.4 percent below last year's mark. Slightly over 5 million extensions were requested last year, and because of the new law, the IRS had anticipated 6.2 million this year.

"We don't know how to interpret that 18.4 percent reduction," IRS spokesman Jeff Krasney said. He added, however, that since the agency was concentrating on processing returns before handling extensions, statistics on the number of extensions may not be up to date.

Bodies of 3 sailors found



NORFOLK, Va. — Navy salvage workers found the bodies of three missing sailors at their work stations aboard the drifting submarine USS Bonefish on Wednesday, nearly three days after explosions and fire forced the evacuation of the vessel.

The Navy's top officer said the three crewmen may have died at their posts while their 89 shipmates evacuated the vessel, filled with smoke and toxic fumes from an explosion in a forward battery compartment.

"Shortly after midnight, the salvage crew went aboard and discovered the bodies," said Chief Petty Officer Terry D. Borton, a spokesman at Atlantic Fleet headquarters here. "Two of the victims were discovered in the control room and the other in an administrative compartment."

The crewmen were identified as Lt. Ray Everts, 30, of Naoma, W.Va.; Petty Officer 1st Class Robert W. Bordelon Jr., 39, of Willis, Texas; and Petty Officer 3rd Class Marshall T. Lindgren, 21, of Pisgah Forest, N.C.

The cause of death would not be known until a medical examination was complete, he said.

Around The Region

AT&T forced to reduce rates

TOPEKA — The Kansas Corporation Commission ordered AT&T Wednesday to reduce its in-state rates by $5.56 million, beginning May 1.

The order results from a reduction in the charges AT&T pays local telephone companies, primarily Southwestern Bell, for access to their lines.

AT&T recovers the cost of the access charges through its rates.

Man sentenced for shooting

TOPEKA — A Shawnee County District judge has sentenced a soldier from Fort Benning, Ga., to 15 years to life in prison for shooting a Fort Riley soldier earlier this year.

Judge Thomas Regan sentenced Pvt. Greg D. Brown, 20, on Tuesday for wounding Sgt. Albert L. Rogers of Fort Riley on January 3 in west Topeka. Rogers, 27, was shot three times in the head with a small-caliber handgun by a man who claimed to have car trouble and asked for a ride.

Brown, who had been absent without leave from Fort Benning since March 4, pleaded guilty March 17 to aggravated robbery in connection with the incident.

Senate to vote on AIDS bill

TOPEKA — The House approved a compromise AIDS bill Wednesday, and the bill is scheduled for a Senate vote today.

The House approved the measure, 124-0, although it has often proved controversial this session. If the Senate approves the bill, it would go to Gov. Mike Hayden.

It would require doctors to report the names and addresses of people with AIDS or people who've died from the disease to the State Department of Health and Environment.

Agenda full for last meeting

Co-op among issues facing senators tonight

By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

Bills creating a student fee for the KSU Childcare Cooperative and revising of the SGA constitution are two items included in the agenda for Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

The 7 p.m. meeting is the last one of the semester. Doug Folk, Student Senate chairman and junior in electrical engineering, said Senate has a full agenda for the meeting.

The first item of business is the revision of the judicial and student rights section of the SGA constitution, and the revision of the judicial code contained in the SGA by-laws.

Another bill up for vote defines the athletic ticket sales policy.

Folk said the bill is a proposal by the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force.

The bill would rename the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force as the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee. It also fixes the date for the beginning of basketball ticket sales as Oct. 14.

The proposal also would continue the tradition of locating the campout for basketball tickets on the east side of Ahearn Field House. Under the bill, 6,000 seats would be held open for student seating in Bramlage Coliseum and 1,000 seats would be provided to ICAT.

Senate will also consider the establishment of a student fee for the KSU Childcare Cooperative.

"The bill asks for an additional dollar to be tacked onto tuition fees," Folk said.

Another bill up for consideration by the Senate would make a special allocation to Oz magazine.

"Oz magazine is a journal put out by Architecture and Design students," Folk said. "They always start each semester in the red. They are working through the Finance Committee to get an allocation for some start-up money."

The final bill on the agenda is the revision of the Student Conduct Code.

Folk said this document is not a part of the SGA constitution.

Judge: Iran-Contra documents withheld

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Iran-Contra trial judge accused the Reagan administration Wednesday of intentionally holding back classified documents needed by the defense, and warned that charges would be dismissed if the stonewalling continues.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell blamed the dilemma not on independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, but on an interdepartmental task force that has control over hundreds of thousands of secret documents that may be needed in the case.

"A stone wall is being built up between this court and the trial."

Noting that Walsh has tried to get the documents for the defense, the judge said, "The responsibility lies with the attorney general and the White House."

Don't expect miracles from Panhellenic forms

In another attempt to combat the problems of underage drinking at sorority parties, the Panhellenic Council has passed a proposal that requires all sororities to pre-register their parties with the Office of Greek Affairs.

This pre-party registration basically requires sororities to fill out a form before a party to state what types of drinks will be served, how they will be served and how minors will be identified. The contract also makes the sororities specify how arrangements will be made to transport intoxicated partygoers home.

Another part of the contract specifies that all sororities must have all members and their dates who are 21 years of age or more wear wristbands at parties, so as to identify legal drinkers.

Sororities will then submit an outline of their party for approval. However, as long as a sorority fills out a pre-registration form, there isn't a lot the Office of Greek Affairs can do — even if it finds the party plans are flawed. Sure, officials can encourage the sororities to change their plans, but they can't actually force them to do so.

This provision lacks substantial force to make major changes in the way that parties are conducted. The wristband rule is about the only real stipulation resulting from this regulation. The only other thing it mandates is that sororities take the time to plan their parties out ahead of time, although most do that anyway.

However, the sororities should be commended on making an attempt at self-regulation where underage drinking is concerned. Although the proposal is fairly lax, it will have served its purpose if it heightens sorority awareness of alcohol problems.

Perhaps the Interfraternity Council should take a look at the sororities' sanctions and develop a policy of its own. Although an all-fraternity alcohol policy was proposed at the Feb. 29 meeting of IFC, it was not adopted. Instead, IFC decided to put together a booklet containing information regarding alcohol.

Seriously, an informational booklet isn't going to make a significant change in alcohol policy at parties. If IFC is using this in lieu of a specific policy, it is making a poor choice.

AT&T grant obtained by departments' work

"The best of the best."

That's the description Clo Whitaker, AT&T branch manager for large business systems, assigned K-State when awarding the Department of Computing and Information Sciences and the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering a $1.7 million equipment grant last week.

The grant, which was awarded on the basis of proposals submitted on projects relating to the use of computers, is the third of its kind K-State has received from AT&T. It brings the total value of equipment donated to K-State by the company to $3 million.

The personnel in the two departments are to be commended for their efforts in bringing such resources and technology to the University.

The grant — consisting of 80 personal computers, six minicomputers and two super minicomputers — will greatly contribute to the University's research and teaching capabilities. Certainly, the equipment will help K-State maintain its competitiveness in research in the two fields.

And let's not forget the effect of the grant on students. About 1,200 students are enrolled in the two departments and will use the computer labs for research and classwork. With such a grant, students will have access to some of the latest advancements in computer engineering and technology.

Any way you look at it, the people who secured the grant from AT&T deserve appreciation for their work and thanks for their contribution to quality research and education at this University.

Letters

Short preparation

Editor,

Re: the editorial "Even parking concerns fail to raise interest" in the April 20 Collegian. There were employees who were interested and very concerned. The earliest notice faculty and staff had was in the In-View dated April 14, and for students the earliest was that morning, April 15, in the Collegian.

Within a seven-hour period, we had compiled a list of 277 names, which I turned in to Mr. Charles Beckom before the meeting (as requested in the Notice of Hearing on Proposed Traffic Regulations at K-State, Page 3). I have included a copy of that list with my letter. As you can see, there were concerned people out there but with only a one-day notice, one morning for most, it's very hard to get together a group of well-organized proportions.

During the course of the meeting, I did hear some very good ideas presented by fellow employees. While they were all very general, a number of them could have been developed into a workable as well as feasible solution to our present parking problems.

The other concern I share that was also brought up was the $1 fee per participant per week for conferences and seminars on campus. There can be no doubt that this will greatly damage the ambiance of K-State to past as well as prospective organizations that have their conferences and seminars on campus.

Due to a letter writer's error, the time for the presentations by students in the Public Speaking II course was wrong in a letter appearing in Wednesday's Collegian. The presentations will begin at noon today in Nichols Hall Theatre.

West's definition of terrorism an ugly exercise in hypocrisy

Commentary

TALAT S. RAHMAN
Guest Columnist

More than a week has passed since a leading member of the Palestine Liberation Organization — the second in military command to Yassar Arafat, Al Wazir, popularly known as Abu Jihad — was assassinated by a death squad in Tunisia. It is no longer a secret who the assassins are.

They belong to the Mossad, which is the Israeli equivalent of the CIA, and to commando units of the Israeli Armed Forces. The murder was approved by the Israeli cabinet, as a calculated move in connection with the Palestinian uprising of the past five months in the occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza.

This is a fitting occasion to reflect on the common usage of the word "terrorism" in discussions in the West, and on how it relates to what is actually going on in Israel/Palestine.

The murder of Abu Jihad is not the first. Nor is it the last. When 13 Palestinians protested the murder, they were shot dead by Israeli soldiers in the occupied territories. Since then, Palestinians continue to be killed by Israelis at the rate of two a day.

Forty years of attacks and counterattacks between the Israelis and Palestinians began with the establishment of the state of Israel. As we know, this country was created against the wishes of the majority of the inhabitants of the region and in order for Jews all over the world to escape the anti-Semitism of the West.

Millions of Palestinians were made homeless and nationless so that European Jews could have a home and a nation. It was in the interest of the United States and Western Europe that Israel survive. The odds were, therefore, greatly against the Palestinians.

Nevertheless, when an entire nation is turned into homeless refugees, when you watch others take over the land that your forefathers had toiled on, when you see your own destiny is to lie in confinement in refugee camps with handouts from the United Nations Relief and Welfare Agency, there still remains a choice.

You can elect to be passive and be obliterated from the face of the earth. Or you can organize and struggle for your rights in whatever manner is available to you. With the latter, you've nothing more to lose. With the former, you lose everything. It is to the honor of the Palestinian people that they have made the decision they have.

Quite simply, if it were not for the Palestine Liberation Organization, the question of Palestinian homeland would in no way be such an imminent one. To put that question on the world geopolitical agenda has required a tremendous amount of sustained political and military effort. It is a crude reality that what brought home the Palestinian issue to many Europeans and Americans were the early hijackings of the 1970s.

The crudity lies, however, with the moral hearing apparatus of people who are deaf to any less repugnant appeal and who persist in supposing the skyjacking of a plane of innocent civilians to be a horror, while remaining blandly complacent at the hijacking of an entire nation of innocent people.

This may be put another way: It's an outrage when it happens to a select few, but it's no big deal — maybe even "business as usual" — when it happens to millions of others.

It is hard to avoid the conclusion that a sensibility that issues such a judgment has lost its title to moral respect. When it goes further and lays claim to superior righteousness in its condemnation of this sort of response to oppression and social injustice, it becomes positively ugly and grotesque.

To observe this is not to recommend terrorism. It is to insist that when one views "terrorism" through myopic eyes, one is avoiding the main issue. How is it that the word "terrorist" is, in Western political and media culture, associated with guerrilla activists and members of such organizations as the PLO — but not connected in the least with the likes of Ariel Sharon, Menachim Begin and Yitzhak Rabin?

What are the conditions under which a nation comes to define itself and its security in such a way that state-sponsored terrorism "must" be accepted for the protection of the "national security"? Why is it not "terrorism" when refugee camps are incessantly bombed by a national air force or an official army blows up entire villages, but is when a handful of guerrillas blow up a building? Why is it that the shooting of unarmed civilians at the rate of two to three a day doesn't register as "terrorism"? Is this hypocrisy? Or is it blindness to reality?

We need to appreciate the irony that the individual whom the Israeli government decided to gun down was the very person who had a reputation as a moderating and conciliatory force within the PLO and who was advising the civilians in the occupied territories to protest against their oppression with stones and not with guns.

The larger Palestinian strategy that is developing at this moment is the topic of a presentation which will take place at 7:30 tonight in the Union Little Theatre. Phyllis Bennis, Middle East correspondent for the biweekly Frontline, has just returned from the occupied territories. Her analysis will be of interest to all who want to know what the civilian uprising is leading to and why.

VA, Court slam door on alcoholics

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

Just when you thought the Supreme Court had done it all, it comes up with something new and something that is so screwy that it demands public comment.

On April 20, the Supreme Court ruled by a 4-3 decision that the government may disqualify military veterans from receiving some benefits by considering their alcoholism to be "willfull misconduct" instead of an uncontrollable disease.

However, the Court would not just come out and say whether or not alcoholism was a disease, just that the Veteran's Administration could view it any way it wanted to without fear of retribution.

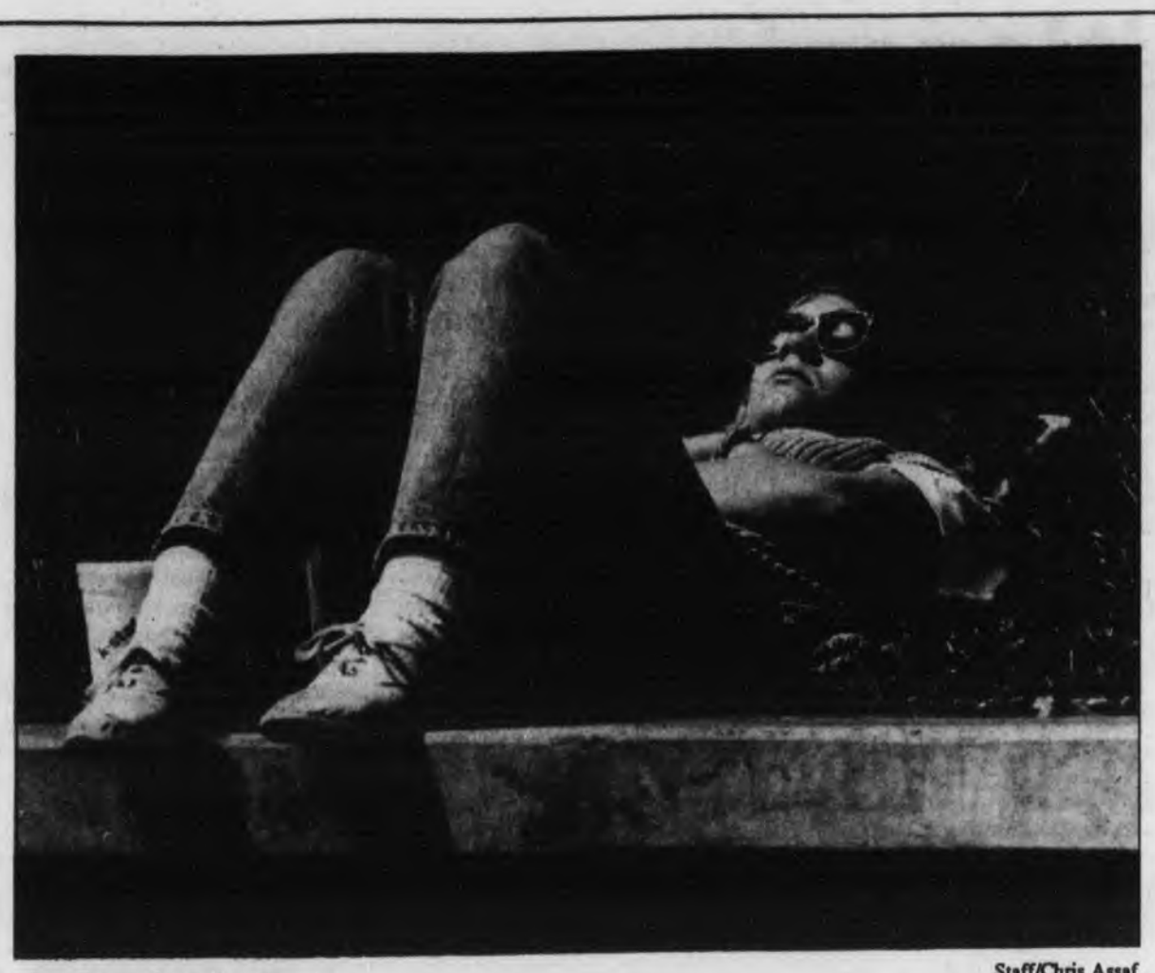
Therefore, if alcoholism is later found to be a disease, there may be hundreds of veterans who have been denied benefits.

The specific benefits requested in the Supreme Court case by Eugene Traynor and James P. McKelvey were educational benefits that they were denied after being honorably discharged from the Army in the late 1960s. Although they have abstained from alcohol since the early 1970s after undergoing treatment, they did not receive the educational benefits, since the benefits are only awarded to veterans within 10 years of their discharge.

However, the VA allows benefits to be paid after 10 years if the veterans can show that they were suffering from a physical or mental disability which was not the result of his own "willful misconduct." Unfortunately, the VA is now allowed to regard alcoholism as willful misconduct, thereby withholding all benefits.

This does not make a whole lot of sense. The Supreme Court admitted that it couldn't really say if it was a disease or not since there was evidence pointing in both directions. However, most literature today seems to lean toward the view that alcoholism is a disease. Maybe that's why people who are alcoholics go to clinics to receive treatment. If it was willful misconduct, then how would a person ever enter treatment and become cured?

If they were misconducting themselves on purpose, they certainly wouldn't enter treatment because they wouldn't need it. They would be able to stop all by themselves, since it is willful. Perhaps what the VA is trying to say is that we don't need alcoholism clinics or counselors since alcoholism is all done on purpose. In fact, if it is done on purpose, then maybe the punishments should be really high. So high that it keeps people from abusing alcohol. (Or it will make them hide in the closet, if it actually is a disease after all.)



The VA seems to think that alcoholism is something that an individual can control, but for anyone who has been or has known an alcoholic, that is not the case.

This ruling will have several major impacts on society.

First and foremost, it may change the way that we, and society, view alcoholism. Just when we were trying to overcome the social stigma of alcoholism and get alcoholics to come out of the closet and get treatment, the VA and the Supreme Court have effectively slammed the closet door in their face. There is no reason to rehabilitate alcoholics any longer since they are doing it on purpose.

The three judges who dissented in the case did so on the grounds that the VA should not be allowed to treat all alcoholics in the same way and automatically disregard their benefit claims on the grounds of willful misconduct.

This policy destroys all of the progress that alcoholism treatment had made in the last 20 years. If the Supreme Court and the VA have decided that alcoholism is, in effect, intentional on the part of the victim, then society has taken a giant step backwards in its treatment of alcoholics.

Bands donate time, concert to benefit human rights group

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

After a postponement two weeks ago, a concert benefiting the Manhattan chapter of Amnesty International is planned for tonight at Charlie's Party Dome in Aggieville.

Five bands are donating their time to raise funds for the organization, which works on behalf of human rights.

The concert begins at 7 p.m., and admission is $3.

The bands participating are Dalai Lama, Broken This Broken That, Moving Van Goghs, Lonesome Hound Dogs and Mr. Ed. A theater improvisational group called Theatrix will also perform.

"It's for a very good cause, and we all believe in it," said Mike Kinney, sophomore in theater and Theatrix member.

Amnesty International is a non-political and impartial group that is concerned with people whose rights are violated, said Debbie Paap, senior in fine arts and group coordinator of K-State's Amnesty chapter.

The organization is based in major cities throughout the world and is very established, she said.

"It is not just some flimsy radical group," Paap said.

The organization is concerned with the rights of individuals and the wrongful imprisonment of people because of what they said or believe, Paap said.

Amnesty works for three specific goals:

- The release of prisoners of conscience — men, women and children imprisoned for their beliefs, color, sex, ethnic origin, language or religion — provided they have neither used nor advocated violence.
- Fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners.
- An end to torture and executions in all cases.

The proceeds from the concert will help the Manhattan chapter of Amnesty International, Paap said.

Some of the money will be sent to the Manhattan chapter's prisoner of conscience, who was released last November. It will aid his family while he searches for a job, Paap said. The remainder of the money will be used to print newsletters and help run the group.

The group's prisoner of conscience is from Yugoslavia and was adopted in 1985. He was arrested for something allegedly overheard in a restaurant and was charged with slander against the government, Paap said.

After he was released, his family still needed help.

"Our group is trying to supply the family with after-care funds to help them become self-sufficient again," Paap said.

Device controls air conditioner

KPL program will reduce peak electrical demand

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

This summer, Kansas Power and Light Gas Service customers have the chance to participate in a new program that will help reduce peak demand for electricity.

The program, called C.A.S.H. (conservation at selected hours), consists of attaching a device to an air conditioner that automatically shuts off the compressor in the cooling unit when outdoor temperatures reach a certain temperature, said Marvin Rodriguez, marketing representative for KPL.

To be eligible for the program, a person must own the home or business the device is installed in, he said.

The program is designed to reduce summertime peak load on residential customers, Rodriguez said.

Power plants are built for handling air conditioning capabilities in the summer, and when the demand for electricity drops off in the winter, the larger plants aren't needed, he said.

"By shaving the peaks, this will curb the need for expanding power plants in the near future — we hope," Rodriguez said.

The device, which is installed at no charge by KPL, attaches to the low voltage connectors on the air conditioner. When the outdoor temperature reaches 95 degrees, the device automatically shuts off the compressor for 7½ out of every 30 minutes of cumulative run time, Rodriguez said.

Since the fan on the air conditioner will continue to run, circulating the cool air already in the home, the device will not affect comfort by any noticeable degree, he said.

Besides saving energy, the program offers another incentive to customers — $24 in credit.

KPL will credit the customer's July, August and September electric bills by $8 each month for participating in the program, he said.

"The customer can save money on utility bills and shave our summertime peak," Rodriguez said.

Response to the program has been overwhelming, he said.

This year, KPL will be installing 720 units in the district that includes Manhattan and Junction City, he said. About three-fourths of these available units have been installed.

Depending on the response this year, the program could be conducted again next year, he said.

"We feel certain with the past experience of other utilities (using a similiar program), we will probably be doing it next year," Rodriguez said.

Reporter to deliver lecture on uprising

By The Collegian Staff

Views of the Palestinians living in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza region will be heard tonight.

"Eyewitness to the Palestinian Uprising on the West Bank" will be the topic of a lecture by Phyllis Bennis, reporter for Frontline, a California-based newspaper which focuses mainly on the Middle East and Southeast Asia. Bennis, who works out of New York, covers United Nations activities and events in the Middle East and Southeast Asia.

Bennis' lecture, sponsored by the the Coalition for Human Rights, will be at 7:30 tonight in the Union Little Theater and is free to the public.

Bennis recently returned from a trip to the West Bank and Gaza region where she was on assignment for Frontline.

English instructor Lyman Baker said Bennis will probably speak about the background of the Palestinian people and how their strategy now differs from what it has been in the past.

Consumer Relations Board assists students

Service organization's record proves 'soundness' of investment by SGA

By Candise Leonard
Contributing Writer

After 17 years, the Consumer Relations Board at K-State still assists students with consumer problems and complaints.

"I think the Consumer Relations Board was a sound investment by student government," said Richard L.D. Morse, professor emeritus in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

The history of consumer protection at K-State goes back to 1970, when Robert H. Flashman was a student enrolled in classes in family economics who wanted to bring the consumer movement to the student level.

Morse said Flashman checked into the possibility of organizing a Manhattan branch of the Consumer Education and Protective Association (CEPA). Flashman happened to read in the Dec. 3, 1970, Collegian that student senators John Divine and John Ronnau were sponsoring a bill for a consumer organization.

"Bob high-tailed it to the Senate that night and the bill passed," Morse said. "They appointed him to head the group."

Flashman used the ideas he received from the CEPA to establish the policies of the CRB office, and Senate approved them Jan. 28, 1971.

He proposed a board of directors, an arbitration board and grievance committees. The board of directors was comprised of one volunteer from each college and the Graduate School.

The grievance committee members worked with the individual complaints, and the arbitration board (made up of three students and three members of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce) met to "review cases and dissolve differences," Flashman said.

The First Year

By Feb. 24, 1971, every position on the CRB was filled. The Board's first major case was a complaint about the duplicate car tax paid by out-of-state students. Through correspondence with the attorney general and the lieutenant governor, the CRB learned that "property tax is not assessed on students from out-of-state.

"Graduate students, however, who teach part-time are classified as faculty and are required to pay property tax in this state," the March 16, 1971, Collegian clarified to the student body. Some graduate students had to pay the tax twice.

Another case during CRB's first year resulted in a picketing by the students, Morse said. A student had come in to complain about car repairs.

"They had put in transmission fluid instead of brake fluid," Morse said. "When he complained, they refused to listen to him or make amends."

The students finally organized a picket, and Morse said that within 24 hours the owner came from out of town, "took care of the situation and did what was right."

At the end of its first year of operation, the CRB estimated that for the $50 worth of semester student fees it spent, it had saved students between $30,000 and $40,000.

National Conference

After Flashman wrote his booklet about the CRB — titled "University Consumer Protection" — the interest of other student consumer groups led to the First National Conference on Consumer Action on the K-State campus in May 1972.

"Students came from as far as Michigan and Texas to hear the well-known speakers," said Joyce Cantrell, instructor of human development and family studies who teaches the class Consumer Relations Board Practicum.

Speakers included Betty Furness, special assistant on consumer affairs to President Lyndon B. Johnson; and Morse, who served on the Consumer Advisory Council of both Presidents Johnson and Kennedy.

Manhattan Consumer Center

In the fall of 1973, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce revealed its plans to establish the Manhattan Consumer Relations Center. According to a Collegian article, the center would "operate on a trial basis for four months."

Morse said the CRB students volunteered to work at the center, hoping the chamber would take over eventually.

"Over time, the center was never incorporated into the chamber's budget, and the program was dropped," Morse said. "The students did not want to support Manhattan on SGA money."

Today in Manhattan, the Department of Human Resources works with consumer complaints.

"The department assists both tenants and landlords with their rights, remedies and general assistance," said Cornell Mayfield, director of Human Resources and Personnel at Manhattan City Hall. "We also help people with housing problems and provide information about possible remedies available."

Because his duties are split between two departments, Mayfield said he does not have time to give advice, but will provide information, give referrals and answer questions about consumer problems.

Publicity of CRB

"The main barrier to our assistance of K-State students is that we need them to know about the CRB's services," Cantrell said.

Over the years, several Collegian editors implemented a weekly consumer advice column. One such example is Paul Rhodes, Collegian editor in the fall of 1978. His editorial on the first day of classes said, "Manhattan has been dubbed the 'rip-off center of the Midwest,' so we'll try to provide our readers with some information on what to watch for and where the big rip-offs are."

Beginning its 18th year this spring, the CRB is still operating with the support of students.

"Some student things come and go, but the CRB has endured," Morse said. "There's still going to be consumer problems as long as new students are coming to town."

The CRB has not had to result in picketing as it sometimes did in the 1970s to handle consumer complaints, said current CRB director Beth Galbreath.

"The Consumer Relations Board works with anyone who has a consumer problem they have not been able to resolve," Galbreath said. "Most of our cases involved landlord-tenant disputes, but we also get business complaints, mail-order fraud, difficulties with auto repairs and product failures."

The first step is for the CRB to educate complaintants on what actions they are able to take. If that fails, Galbreath said the CRB will try to intermediate and get both sides of the story. A letter is usually sent out to inform the other party about the complaint that has been filed against them.

"Hopefully, the dispute can be resolved after they receive our letter," she said. "Most of the time it's a lack of communication, or people need to know what their rights really are."

Although the board members cannot give legal advice, they will contact the attorney general's office or refer the person to the student attorney if they do not know the answer to a consumer's problem.

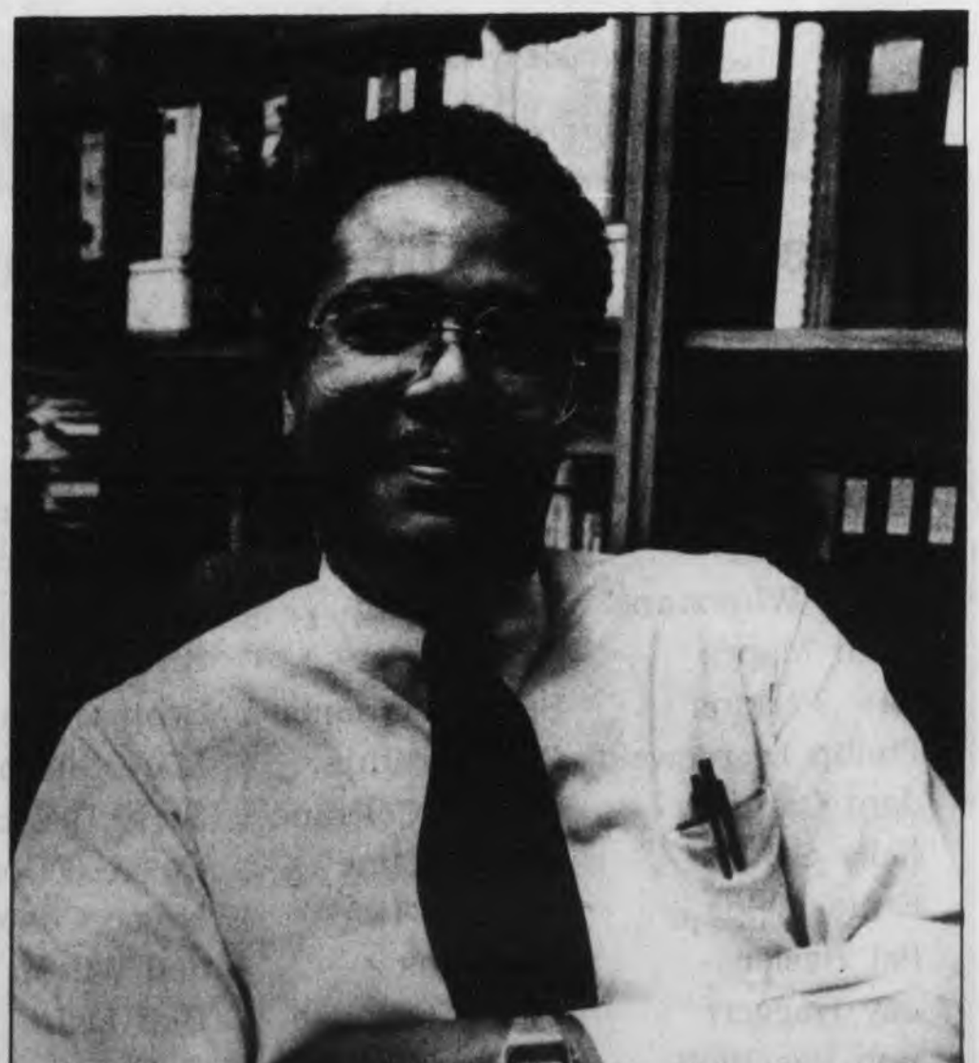
Galbreath said the Board is run differently than when it first began. Each year, a director is hired through SGA funding. Student volunteers are recruited, and they enroll in the Consumer Relations Board Practicum for class credit and training.

"Students from any major can enroll for one to three hours of credit through the Department of Human Development and Family Studies," Galbreath said. "Each person spends only two hours in the CRB office for each hour of credit handling phone calls and walk-ins."

One service of the CRB, located in the SGS office, is the bulletin board listing all available housing as well as a file of references about Manhattan landlords.

"We can tell a student if other people have reported difficulty with a certain landlord," Galbreath said. "We will also review any lease a student brings in and explain the legal jargon to them."

The CRB also offers educational materials including the Landlord-Tenant Handbook, a sample roommate contract and brochures on all types of consumer problems.



"I hope consumers realize the full value of the CRB and take advantage of our services," Galbreath said.

Lunchbag Theatre to deal with father, son relations

Staff/Neal Hinkle

Mark Cross, junior in theater, and Gregory Bales, senior in journalism and mass communications, rehearse "The Chastening," which will be performed at 11:30 this morning in the Purple Masque Theatre.

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

Those seeking a break from the usual lunchtime routine today can pack a sack lunch and go to East Stadium to watch a free play.

At 11:30 a.m. in the Purple Masque Theatre, four K-State students will present "The Chastening" by Richard Weaver, and they encourage students to bring their lunches along.

Admisssion to the Lunchbag Theatre is free, and the production should take about 30 minutes, said Tom McLaughlin, graduate teaching assistant and director of this acting-directing workshop.

"The Chastening" deals with three generations of men and father-son relationships, McLaughlin said, but it mainly deals with the "male myth."

"The male myth dictates that men are supposed to be hard and dominant and women are supposed to be soft and passive," he said.

Today's production addresses the fact that people get so involved in certain projects or jobs that they forget to live, McLaughlin said.

"It deals with being in control of our life and our priorities," he said. "That may sound trite, but it is all about making time for people we care about."

McLaughlin quoted Albert Schweitzer when he described the theme of the production: "The tragedy of life is what dies in a person while they live."

The Lunchbag Theatre is basically a showcase for the work done in a course that teaches practice in directing and practice in acting, McLaughlin said. The class has basically formed its own self-sufficient production company, he said.

"We have a pool of actors and a pool of directors. We do our own writing for royalties, planning the season and handling publicity," McLaughlin said.

This is the fifth Lunchbag production of the semester. The first four were "Graceland," "Interview," "Minnesota Man" and "My Blue Heaven."

Each production has a different cast and director from the four credit hour course.

"We've had (both) full houses and rather sparce audiences," said Joel Herndon, junior in theater and a Lunchbag actor. "It depends on how early we start the publicity and word of mouth going."

Greg Bales, senior in journalism and mass communications, and Mark Cross, junior in theater, will also be acting today.

Besides meeting on Tuesdays and Thursdays for class, the students also meet each afternoon for two hours to practice for the next production.

The last Lunchbag Theatre of the semester, "The Elopement," will be May 5.

Shampoo suds, dancing highlight Friday's events

Student to accept $1,000 at 'Agree Day'

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Agree Day would not be occurring at K-State Friday if it were not for the initiative of Nabila Mikhaeel, graduate in mathematics, who took a few minutes out of her day to fill out a sweepstakes form at the Manhattan K mart service desk.

Mikhaeel's action won her the grand prize in an Agree Shampoo & Conditioner national sweepstakes contest, which included $2,000 and a day of activities for the winner's college.

"I won the grand prize!" Mikhaeel said repeatedly when contacted about her success.

She will accept a check from Agree for $1,000 at the video dance in the Union Ballroom Friday.

No definite plans for spending the money have been set yet, Mikhaeel said, adding that she may take a trip to California to visit some relatives. She said she does plan on sharing the money with her family, especially her two sons.

"They are excited by the money and they want their share," Mikhaeel said.

K-State's share of the money went to the Union Program Council Special Events Committee, who is cosponsoring the day with Agree. But most of the $2,000 was spent throughout the semester to bring in different entertainers, said Mike Penner, director of UPC.

He said all of the contest prizes will be provided by Agree.

The contests will be held in and around the Union during the day Friday. They will be judged by Martha Quinn, former Music Televsion announcer, and Kevin Wagner, KQLA announcer.

Contests include an outrageous banner, lip sync, hidden product and shampoo contest.

Banner participants should include drawings or the words "Kansas State University," "Martha Quinn," "Agree," and the participant's name on the bottom right corner. The winning artist will be awarded $100 and other prizes.

Lip sync participants can choose from one of six songs and will receive a video of their performance, with the grand prize video receiving top honors at the videofest that night.

Twenty marked bottles of Agree Shampoo will be hidden in the Union. The lucky finders who correctly answer the trivia questions on each of the bottles will have their names put in a drawing for cash, T-shirts and shampoo.

Teams of four men and four women can enter the shampoo contest. The women will wash the men's hair and vice versa in a race against the clock. The winning team will win $200 and other prizes.

More information on deadlines and contests can be found at the Special Events Table outside the Union Stateroom from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Wildcats hold off Washburn rally, win 16-7

K-State establishes record for runs scored in a season

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

K-State's baseball team came out swinging early and was able to hold off a fifth-inning rally to ensure a 16-7 victory over the Washburn Ichabods Wednesday at Frank Myers Field.

K-State scored seven runs in the first inning.

The Wildcats, 27-17 overall and 5-11 in Big Eight Conference play, were led by seniors Reese Beers and David Chadd. The twosome combined for five hits and six runs batted in.

Beers, who was three for four at the plate, started a seven-run first-inning barrage with an RBI single that scored Sean Collins. Collins had reached first on a walk and then stole second before coming home on Beers' hit.

K-State pounded out five hits in the inning and knocked out Washburn's starting pitcher Scott Cook after he retired only one batter.

But the Ichabods did not roll over and die. They came back to within one run, 8-7, after scoring four runs in the fifth inning.

K-State's starting pitcher Zack Kimbell was ousted from the game after facing the first three batters of the inning, as Washburn went on to collect three hits and took two walks in closing the scoring gap.

"When they put the pressure on us, we didn't put our hands around our throats."

—Mike Clark

"I liked the way we started," Coach Mike Clark said. "I didn't like the middle and I liked the way we ended. When they put the pressure on us, we didn't put our hands around our throats."

The Wildcats bounced back with five runs of their own in the sixth inning to seal the victory. They posted those runs on three hits and an Ichabod error. Chadd, who collected two RBI in the first inning on a single, recorded another in this inning with his second single of the game.

K-State set the school record for runs scored in a season with 428, surpassing the previous mark of 418 set by the 1985 squad. The team needed just seven runs coming into Wednesday's contest to take over the lead.

"Offensively, I liked what we did," Clark said. "We ran a little more today and I thought we did a good job. We did make some mistakes and we are going to talk about them."

Jeff Peterson relieved Kimbell in the fifth and pitched three innings, giving up one run on two hits to take the victory. Peterson's record stands at 6-2. Cook picked up the loss for Washburn, 32-21.

K-State's next action is today, as the Wildcats travel to Wichita to take on the Shockers in a 7 p.m. contest.

The 'Cats return home this weekend for a series with Big Eight Conference foe Iowa State.

Tennis Challenge to add funds to coffer

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

K-State fixtures Jon Wefald, Lon Kruger, Matilda Mossman, Larry Travis and Stan Parrish will take to the court this weekend — specifically, the tennis court.

These five K-State "celebrities" will be teaming up to play in the first KSU Tennis Challenge on the L.P. Washburn Tennis Courts.

The 24-hour event will begin on Saturday at noon and will conclude on Sunday around noon.

Tennis coach Steve Bietau said the Challenge is being held to raise funds for the K-State's women's tennis program.

"We want to raise money to subsidize the scholarship budget," Bietau said "We hope to raise $2,000 to $3,000 from the event."

Bietau will be joined by four other marathon participants — Lena Svensson, David Pulford, Shawn Walburn and Mark Baird — for 24 hours of consecutive games. In addition, the five K-State celebrities will be playing four to six hours each.

"All the celebrities are very supportive of not only our program, but of the athletic program as a whole," Bietau said. "That says a lot about these five individuals."

Bietau said the event should be "a lot of fun." Although the tennis team is involved in several fund-raisers throughout the year, such as a mixed-doubles tournament in the fall, he said he is very positive about this event.

"We wanted to provide a fun activity to raise funds in which people could get involved with tennis," Bietau said.

Bietau said ICAT came up with the idea for the Challenge. Pulford, a marathon participant and an ICAT member, said the idea originated from a similar event held at Emporia State University. The ESU tennis marathon has lasted up to one and one-half weeks in past years, and has set world records.

"We thought this would be a good way to raise funds for the women's tennis team," Pulford said. "Because the athletic bill was not passed by K-State students, non-revenue athletic teams have been forced to go out and raise money on their own."

Bietau said pledges will be taken at any time, even during the 24 hours of the marathon. In case of rain, the event will be held at the Cottonwood Racket Club on 3615 Claflin Road in Manhattan. More information concerning the Challenge is available in Ahearn 101, or may be received by calling the K-State Tennis Office.

A pledge of $4 per hour will qualify individuals to play against these participants for one hour. Upon making the pledge, each challenger is allowed one hour of tennis agianst any of the five marathon participants at any time during the 24-hour period. The challenger, however, may choose to play one hour of tennis with one of the celebrities.

All challengers who pledge a minimum of $24 will receive a K-State T-shirt. A K-State sweatshirt will be given to those challengers making a minimum pledge of $96. Any challenger who defeats a marathon participant or a K-State celebrity will receive a $10 gift certificate from The Sportspage.

The Sportspage and Wilson Sporting Goods are the commercial sponsors of the event. From 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday and from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. on Sunday, The Sportspage will be giving a $10 gift certificate to the winners in the men's and women's division of a fast serve contest.

Each participant entering the contest, which is free to all entrants, will receive a certificate verifying his fastest serve. A male and female winner will be determined from these certificates.

Wilson Sporting Goods is also hosting Wilson Demo Day on Sunday from 9 a.m. to noon. A Wilson sales representative will be on hand with demonstration rackets from the entire Wilson line. Rackets may be tested by those at the event.

Team at conference tourney

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Oklahoma State University will be defending its Big Eight Conference Championship in women's tennis, today and Friday for the seventh consecutive year.

The K-State women's tennis team isn't expecting to dethrone the Cowgirls, but that doesn't mean they aren't going to the Lake of the Ozarks, Mo., the site of the tournament, without a positive attitude.

"I think the important thing about the conference tournament is the way we feel right now which is a sense of accomplishment and a sense that we still have a challenge ahead of us," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "We've achieved a few goals (this season), but we have a few more to look at for the rest of this week."

Perhaps the most important of those goals Bietau and the team hope to reach is improving on K-State's sixth place finish from last spring. The Wildcat team appears to be in position to do just that.

With the addition of three freshmen this season, the K-State squad posted a 9-8 overall record and a 3-4 mark in Big Eight play. K-State opened conference play in fine form with a 9-0 whipping of the University of Missouri. The next 22 days proved to be trying though, as K-State dropped the next five conference matches on the road.

The sun came out from behind the clouds during the last weekend of Big Eight play and shone down upon the 'Cats once again. K-State defeated the University of Nebraska, 6-3, for the first ever K-State spring victory against the Lady Cornhuskers. The following day, the Wildcats burned Iowa State, 8-1, in the final dual match of the spring season.

Before the season begin, Bietau set several goals for the team to accomplish this season in the conference tourney as both a team and as individuals.

"Our position in the conference is one goal," Bietau said. "The conference tournament will add to the dual matches to determine the team champion. But it's also a tournament for individuals too. So one of the things we want to do is get someone in the finals in their position."

Last year, K-State's Valerie Rive finished fifth in the No. 4 singles position in the conference. Bietau said Rive, at the No. 3 singles position, has a good chance to finish higher this season and expects Marijke Nel may surprise a few people at the No. 1 singles spot. But even if the team doesn't do as well as he hopes, Bietau will still be pleased with the performance of the squad this season.

"This is the time of the season where it's a reward to be there (at the tournament)," Bietau said. "We feel good about the way we are playing and we just want to go as far as we can. The only thing that really matters to us now is the conference tournament."

Football tickets on sale Monday

From Wire Reports

Student season tickets for K-State's 1988 home football games will go on sale Monday at the Ahearn Field House Ticket Office.

The ticket costs $30 and will provide reserved seat admission for each of the Wildcats' six home games this fall.

The 1988 K-State home football schedule includes non-conference contests with Iowa and Louisiana Tech and Big Eight Conference matchups with Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma State and Iowa State. The Louisiana Tech game Oct.1 will be K-State's annual Homecoming affair, while the Oklahoma State contest Oct. 29 will be on Parents' Day. Fort Riley Day will be Nov. 12 when K-State plays Iowa State.

Students may purchase up to 70 tickets with one K-State student I.D. card. Payment must be made for all tickets when they are ordered. Payment can be made by cash, check, Visa or MasterCard.

Ahearn Field House ticket office hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Henson wins javelin title at Drake Relays

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Cory Janvrin of Simpson College won the Drake Relays javelin by a wide margin Wednesday, becoming the first athlete to capture consecutive titles in the competition since Bruce Tenner in the mid-1970s.

Janvrin compiled 7,334 points in the 10 events spread over two days, well above the 6,500 he needed to qualify for the NCAA Division III championships. He has won the Division III title twice.

Peter Bengtson of Wayne State was second with 6,992 points, followed by Mike Dunn of Arizona State with 6,1 Mark Spitzer of Bethany (Kan.) 6,522 and Don Kinnaman of Concordia of Nebraska with 6,2

Kinnaman cleared 16-6½ in the pole vault, while Lindsey Steve Henson won the javelin with a throw of 192-

'Big business' aspect plays large role

Administrator's pressures many

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

This is the last installment in a three-part series on the pressures faced by those involved in major college athletics.

He may not face the pressure of having to hit a free throw in the final seconds to win a game, or getting a strike out with a man on third to win a game, but his job is just as important. He is to make sure the game is played fairly and by the rules.

For Jim Epps, administrative assistant of intercollegiate athletics, the pressures of his job are numerous and varied.

"There are certainly pressures attached to the administrative aspect of intercollegiate athletics, mainly because it's a big business," Epps said.

Epps pointed out that the pressure of college athletics has started to shift away from the sporting aspect and into the university as a whole.

"Some people have decided to take steps and to see that the programs do have success off the field as well as on," Epps said. "The biggest one being the involvement of the campus as a whole."

Epps added the change is due not only to the involvement of the administration, but also to economics.

Epps pointed out that K-State is unlike other schools in that an adequate financial base is not present.

"There is pressure associated with winning. Like it or not, that's a key issue with a lot your constituents ... "

—Jim Epps

"There is pressure to make ends meet," he said. "That's more so at K-State than, say, Nebraska, Oklahoma or Penn State, where they have the luxury of having a lot of money.

"There is pressure associated with winning," Epps added. "Like it or not, that's a key issue with a lot your constituents: student body, alumni, friends of the program. You have to keep people happy."

When following the guidelines as written in the NCAA rules and regulations book, Epps at times has been tempted to toss the book aside and go with the common sense, but knows better.

"We follow the rules (at K-State) and follow them quite well," he said. "If we don't understand them, then we seek help in trying to understand by calling the Big Eight Conference office.

"(The NCAA rules and regulations book) gets frustrating at times," Epps added. "One knows that to not pay attention to it is foolhardy. You may inadvertently, with the purest of intentions, screw up. That doesn't sit well here with the athletic administration."

One high-pressure situation involves the task of raising money for the various sports at K-State. The part that makes it difficult is the fielding of questions as what will be done with the donations, Epps said.

The task of hiring, firing, renewing or not renewing a coach's contract is another area of added pressure.

"Two criteria are basically used in renewing the contract of a coach," Epps said. "The winning percentage is the big factor and, also, is the coach administering the program in a proper fashion? Are ethical standards involved in running a program? Those are the two main items we look at in renewing a contract."

Dealing with major finanacial contributors can also be a strain. Epps said he knew of no one in K-State's alumni group who pressured the athletic department about decisions.

"There is no one here who I know of articulating their views," he said. "If they're practicing extortion I don't know.

"I'm sure there are some people who expect their voice to be heard," Epps added. "All the years that I've been here, I don't ever remember any kind of alumni expressing (their) voice in that way."

Groups receive Excellence Award

Honor given to outstanding fraternal organizations

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

Six fraternal groups received The Fraternal Excellence Award April 18 at the leadership banquet during Greek Week.

Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser, said it is mainly a recognition award.

"It's an award that was developed about three years ago to recognize those chapters that exceed in nearly every aspect of fraternity and sorority operations," Robel said.

The six fraternal groups selected this year are: Lambda Chi Alpha, Theta Xi, Alpha Gamma Rho, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Kappa Alpha Theta and Pi Beta Phi.

Fraternal groups applying for the award keep a documented, detailed report of 23 criteria in nine major areas of fraternity and sorority programming and activities for 12 months.

Some of the areas on which they are judged include scholarships, finances, greek relations, campus and community relations and rush.

The reports are then turned in to the Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils two weeks prior to spring break. The reports cover the previous spring and fall semesters, and a selection committee then presents the award each spring semester.

"There is a selection committee that changes from year to year," Robel said. "Usually there will be a couple of administrators and a couple of students and myself," she said.

The fraternities and sororities can add any kind of newspaper clippings, scrap book things, pictures or whatever they want to use in terms of documenting their year's activities, Robel said. But many of the groups just follow the outline given to them by the Office of Greek Affairs.

Originally the winning groups were to have a plaque permanently displayed in the Union, but the chapters in the last couple of years have decided they would rather make it just a traveling plaque that the winning groups would share throughout the year.

"Any number of chapters is eligible to win each year. It's not limited to any certain number (of chapters)," Robel said.

"My goal is that someday almost 100 percent of the fraternities and sororities will be at this point (of group excellence)," she said.

Alpha Gamma Rho and Lambda Chi Alpha have both received the award twice.

Jack Durgan, professor of interior architecture, will be retiring after working 34 years at K-State. Durgan was the only faculty member when the Department of Interior Architecture was began.

Retire

"They are the finest design faculty that anyone could find in the country."

The department averages between 15 and 16 graduates per year, and about 60 to 65 students are enrolled in the program.

Durgan said his No. 1 objective has been to produce quality graduates.

"This is not only my objective, but an objective I share with our faculty," he said. "I have a great deal of respect for the faculty, as they have made numerous sacrifices to maintain high standards."

Durgan said he encourages his students to look at education as an investment. He compares it to investing money — that is, one must make a judgment as to the returns the individual will receive.

"Students come in with interests and talents, but their objectives may not be parallel with these interests and talents," he said. "The faculty is responsible for assessing these talents, enabling students to more comprehensively invest in their education."

"The way to success is self-evaluation or self-assessment."

Once the students have done this, Durgan said, they should use their talents. Similar to money, students should invest in their education in the best way to get maximum returns.

"If a student can make this assessment, then the individual must develop his or her capabilities and look ahead at the marketplace in addition to social changes," he said. "The student must address the needs of the marketplace."

Judy Roland, Durgan's secretary for nine years, said the nickname "Uncle Jack" was originated by a student several years ago. It reflects the image or feeling of Durgan.

"I don't know of anyone who doesn't like Jack and admire him professionally," Roland said. "He has a touch of class about him and you can pick up a distinction in him.

"Jack is very personable — you just can't help but like him."

Singers to perform Spring Show; final Kansas concert Friday night

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Singers will perform their final Kansas concerts for the 1987-88 season at 8 p.m. today and Friday in McCain Auditorium.

This year's Spring Show will feature jazz arrangements of "It's a Grand Night for Singing," "Without a Song," and "Too Darn Hot."

Other highlights will include a 1960s medley entitled "Surfin' USA" and male ensemble singing "Kiss Him Goodbye." The Singers will conclude their program with a medley of television commercial jingles.

Gerald Polich, associate professor of music and director for the Singers, said the concert will include music from the 1920s, 1940s and 1960s.

"We perform for a wide variety of audiences so we try to do a variety of music to suit those tastes," Polich said.

The Singers have performed almost 40 programs across the state this year and will conclude the season with an eight-day tour. The group will leave May 15 and perform for alumni in Tulsa, Houston, San Antonio, Dallas and Oklahoma City.

Each performance of the Singers includes singing, dancing and instrumental talents. The group consists of non-music majors and includes 12 singers, four instrumentalists and one sound technician. The choreographer for the Singers is Sharron Washington, founder of the Washington School of Dance in Manhattan.

Tickets for the programs are $3 for students and seniors and $5 for the general public. Tickets are available from the McCain Auditorium box office from noon to 8:30 p.m. today and Friday.

Farms

said.

"Some say they like the independence," he said. "They like the control over their lives."

Farming and family are closely related, Griffin said. The family farm is five times as likely to be passed on to a family member than a family-owned business.

"It's difficult for a farmer to say exactly when the work day ends and the time for family begins," Griffin said. In many ways, the farm and the family are virtually the same.

Some of the reasons why people farm are the income, the potential to earn, the lifestyle and the challenge, said Virginia Moxley, associate dean of human ecology.

However, she said, there are no guarantees when it comes to income.

"If you look at lifetime income curves for people who are self-employed or a professional, you see a steady rise until retirement, where the income generally levels off," Moxley said. "When you look at the family farm income curve, it is totally unpredictable — one year you make money, one year you don't."

This income uncertainty causes a lot of stress for the family, Moxley said. Those farmers in financial trouble often believe that not only have they failed, but that they have failed their family and not lived up to the family tradition, Griffin said.

"It is interesting that farmers feel like they have failed their family heritage," Moxley said. "Farmers forget that most of the immigrants who came to Kansas lost their farms back in Europe to come here.

"We must realize that a farm can take all the time, energy and thought a farmer has to give, and so does a family."

Travis steps down as athletic director

Resignation due to 'burnout'

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

Saying he has reached the burnout point, K-State Athletic Director Larry Travis resigned his position Thursday, effective immediately.

"It's been something I've been thinking about," Travis said. "The main thing with me is that I've gotten to the point of burnout. I think about where we're going and what we've done and it's been really hard. I'm just worn out mentally and physically by the whole thing."

Travis, 47, who assumed K-State's athletic directorship in February 1985, gave no specific reasons for his resignation in a statement issued Thursday morning. He said the "time was right" for him to leave the University.

"We've just come off a good basketball season and our spring sports are doing well," he said. "I think now is a good time ... to let someone else hire new people and bring in new ideas. Maybe we need a new perspective."

Travis' move leaves K-State's athletic department with four vacant positions — those of the athletic director and assistant athletic director, as well as two new positions in promotions and marketing, and field representative.

K-State President Jon Wefald said he became aware Travis was considering resigning a couple of days ago, but felt that he had been considering such a move for about six months.

"I think now, instead of waiting five or six months, he knows there are three positions opening up, and he just decided he didn't necessarily want to saddle a new athletic director with those three positions without being able to fill them himself," Wefald said. "It was an opportunity to give someone else a shot at hiring

Speculation focuses on conflict

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

The wear and tear of trying to build winning programs without stepping on toes came to a head Thursday with the announcement of the resignation of athletic director Larry Travis.

"Believe me, this job is enough to wear you out," Travis said. "It's hard."

Speculation has focused on a conflict between Travis and K-State's administration in reference to the financial commitment the University has to establishing top-notch programs, as well the support the administration has for Travis as an administrator.

Though Travis denied such a conflict, he alluded to the fact that some University pressure was involved in his decision.

"I could say more (about the pressure) but I won't," Travis said. "I believe in being positive and feeling good about yourself. I believe I'm a classy person, and I'm not going to take a shot at anyone. We've (Travis and the administration) had a lot of discussions, but nothing was ever rectified.

"K-State athletics need base support. It's so important that support from the administration has got to be dollar-wise. This support has been here somewhat, but it's got to be a lot more."

Travis said that the pressure of some of his decisions as athletic director, as well as the pressure of his daily responsibilities, has taken a toll on him.

"I've made some decisions down the line that have been popular, and some that haven't been," he said. "I had to decide 'How much longer can you do this? How much longer can you work seven days in a row.' I went 10 weeks in a row without a day off, and I don't know if I can continue at this pace."

Speculation has also focused on Travis' lack of emphasizing K-State's basketball program in favor of the football program.

"People had the misconception that we were concentrating too much on football," Travis said. "If you look at the budget, we've increased the basketball budget 26 percent since I've been here, and the football budget is up only 20 percent. It's ridiculous what people's perceptions are.

"Football is very, very important to this program. You can fill Ahearn every game and not come anywhere near to gaining the revenue football can provide. Basketball people and friends of the basketball program don't fully understand this. For crying out loud, figures don't lie."

Travis said one of the most positive aspects about his tenure at K-State has been the student body.

"I can't say enough about the student body," he said. "The years that I've been here — the student body has been the one salvation for me. I have really felt that the students have kept me going. I've appreciated every minute I've been around them. They are the strength of Kansas State. I will never forget the students."

Sports columnist David Svoboda contributed to this story.

Trucker apprehended after high-speed chase

By The Collegian Staff

TOPEKA — A high-speed chase that began in Riley County ended here late Thursday night when Kansas Highway Patrol officers and Topeka police shot out the tires of a tractor-trailer rig driven by a man who accused police of killing his brothers.

The driver of the rig, whom police identified as Chester Driever of Watonga, Okla., was in custody early this morning at Shawnee County Jail. Charges filed at 2:10 a.m. in Shawnee County included driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs, driving 85 mph in a 65 mph zone and fleeing and eluding police.

In addition, a report filed by Riley County police listed reckless driving, criminal damage to property and aggravated assault on a law enforcement officer as probable charges.

"I understand they have some (charges) in Riley County, and as far as we're concerned — fleeing and eluding, speeding ... God, you name it," said Capt. T.J. Scott of the Kansas Highway Patrol shortly after Driever's arrest.

Driever was apprehended at the intersection of Interstate 70 and Gage Boulevard shortly after police shot out the right rear trailer tires about four miles west of Gage Boulevard.

Upon exiting I-70 on to Gage Boulevard, the rig came to a stop after police shot out the left steering wheel. Police said Driever did not resist arrest once stopped.

The incident began shortly before 9 p.m. in Randolph when Riley County Police received a call requesting a check on the driver of the rig. Upon arrival, Driever repeatedly accused police of killing three of his brothers.

Shortly afterward, a Riley County Police officer told dispatch: "I heard him.... He's saying one of us killed his brother. It's his intention to hurt one of us. Just stay out of his way."

Police said Driever left Randolph and drove without headlights toward Manhattan on U.S. 77 as officers attempted unsuccessfully to stop him. After following Driever through Manhattan for about an hour, police allowed him to leave Manhattan via U.S. 177 before considering the use of force to stop him.

Police reported that while Driever was driving south on 177 toward I-70, the vehicle occasionally swerved between lanes but primarily remained in the left-hand lane. Police said the only light on the tractor was a spotlight on the top left-hand side of the cab.

After Driever reached I-70 at about 10:30 p.m., Kansas Highway Patrol officers assumed pursuit and followed the rig east toward Topeka. Before leaving Manhattan, police said Driever took out signs at numerous intersections in the city.

Highway Patrol officers said the chase involved speeds of up to 85 mph.

At about 11:15 p.m., a regional bulletin was issued and an officer responded: "We have had no altercation with either the driver or his brothers."

The rig, which was leased to Roy Arthur of Watonga, was loaded with cattle. The owner of the cattle was contacted by police and agreed to ensure they would be transported.

Senate to give co-op $32,000

by Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

Student Senators voted early this morning to give $32,000 to the KSU Childcare Cooperative.

Passed just after 2 a.m., the bill was a substitution for a bill that had called for a student fee increase.

Proposed by Student Body President Troy Lubbers and Justin Sanders, Graduate School senator, the bill calls for using $32,000 from the interest on the Student Governing Association endowment account. The money will be used to fund childships, financial assistance for families with children enrolled at the co-op.

The bill "strongly urged" that SGA petition to use money from the Educational Opportunity Fund for the childships next year. The EOF is a fund proposed to the Kansas Board of Regents by Associated Students of Kansas and the Student Advisory Committee (the student body presidents of the regents institutions), Lubbers said.

The EOF will be given to universities to help offset the increased cost of tuition that will come with the Margin of Excellence and is earmarked for student financial aid, Lubbers said.

"I don't think we as students can afford to support other students," said Todd Johnson, agriculture senator. "It has to do with kids, and it's become emotional."

Sanders said, "There is a world of difference between establishing a fee ... and taking $32,000 from an account with interest."

Cornelia Flora, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work and president-elect of Faculty Senate, said child care is a high priority with the faculty. On the average, employees with children miss one day of work each month for child care. This places an extra load on co-workers and inconveniences everyone, including students, she said.

The roll call vote was 29 in favor and 15 opposed, with two abstentions and four absences.

In earlier business, Senate approved the athletic ticket sales policy. The debate centered on seating for members of the I Contributed A Twenty group. Senate approved the proposal which gave ICAT seats in front of other reserved ticket seating areas and next to nonreserved student seating.

Senate also passed revisions of these areas of the SGA Constitution: judicial and student rights and the SGA by-laws, judicial code, and the student conduct code.

Officials ban 'indecent' poster

By Ann Iseman
Arts and Entertainment Editor

A K-State student believes her right to freedom of speech has been infringed upon by the Union administration because of what Union officials consider an offensive word.

Jennifer Dohl, graduate student in speech, was refused permission to post a flier on the first-floor Union bulletin board.

The flier is an advertisement for Dohl's upcoming dramatic recital, which is the final project she must complete for her masters of fine arts degree. The title of Dohl's recital, "Fuck the Personality for a Minute," is taken from a line in the piece she wrote and will be performing at 8 p.m. Saturday in Nichols Theater.

"The thing that bothers me the most is that people in the administration office didn't ask what it was for," Dohl said. "I didn't choose (the title) on a whim or to get attention — it is a line from one of my pieces. It has artistic and literary merit.

"Fuck is not meant as intercourse, but as a derogatory term meaning 'to hell with' or 'down with,' but 'fuck' is a stronger word," she said.

The committee which approves the graduate students' projects in the speech department has already given Dohl permission to post her fliers in Nichols Hall, said Norman "Doc" Fedder, professor of speech.

"She's very serious — not flippant at all. The title is inherent to what she is doing," Fedder said. "This is a line from her play. It encompasses the meaning of her whole play."

"Obscenity — according to usual legal rulings on what constitutes obscenity — does not have any redeeming social, literary or artistic merit," said Ed Schiappa, instructor of speech.

Schiappa, who teaches a course on free speech, said, "No one will have any irreparable harm from seeing this word on a poster. The government shouldn't be able to decide what is obscene."

"Obscenity is sometimes in the eyes of the beholder," said Dianne Urban, students' attorney. "It is supposed to be based on community standards, but it is not some nice, clear-cut thing that everyone knows.

"The University is a closed community where words and ideas are explored. It is different from Manhattan," Urban said.

"I don't know what the community standards are," she said. "It would be the state trying to infringe on a person's freedom of

Leader challenges restrictions

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — African National Congress leader Govan Mbeki has filed a court challenge against restrictions imposed on him after his release from prison last year, his lawyer said Thursday.

Mbeki, 77, was freed in November after serving 23 years of a life sentence imposed on him, Nelson Mandela and other ANC leaders at a sabotage and subversion trial in 1964.

Upon release, Mbeki reaffirmed his commitment to the outlawed guerrilla movement, and the government imposed restrictions on him. He was barred from making speeches, giving interviews and participating in politics, and he was confined to the area around his home city of Port Elizabeth.

No date has been set for a hearing of the case.

Red Flag to cease publication

HONG KONG — The journal Red Flag, which once was required reading for people trying to figure out trends within the Chinese Communist Party, soon will cease publication, a pro-Beijing newspaper said Thursday.

The Wen Wei Po newspaper said Red Flag will stop publication in late June and merge with Theory Monthly, a journal run by the central party school, to form a new publication, Seek Truth. The title comes from a slogan often used by Chinese leaders: "Seek truth from facts."

Red Flag, which has come out twice a month for three decades, formerly was required reading for Chinese and foreigners seeking to understand theoretical and political trends within the Communist Party.

It recently has gained a reputation as a bastion for the old-guard conservative line being displaced by China's pragmatic, reform-minded leadership.

Monastery receives electricity

KATMANDU, Nepal — A hydroelectric plant built with assistance from a U.S. group has brought electricity to the world's highest monastery near the base of Mount Everest, a report said Thursday.

The experimental 20-kilowatt station for the Thyangboche monastery will provide an alternative to firewood in the Everest region, according to the King Mahendra Trust for Nature Conservation.

Forest Secretary Birendra Nath Khujeli said Wednesday at the plant's inauguration that the support of the San Francisco-based American Himalayan Foundation had been timely.

American Himalayan Foundation President Richard Blum, the husband of former San Fransisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein, said his group had raised nearly $100,000 for the project.

Thyangboche is a popular spot for tourists in Nepal, with more than 7,000 visiting the monastery last year.

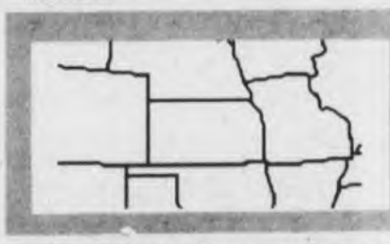
Virus found in transfusions

WASHINGTON — Blood transfusions in the U.S. carry a small but "not insignificant" chance of transmitting a virus that has been closely linked to a particularly vicious type of adult leukemia, according to an American Red Cross screening of the nation's blood supply.

As a result of the study, Red Cross experts are recommending that all donated blood be screened for the leukemia virus as soon as scientists can develop an effective and practical confirming test.

Alan E. Williams, a research scientist at the Red Cross laboratory in Rockville, Md., said the virus, called human T-lymphotropic virus type I, or HTLV-1, was found in 10 samples out of more than 39,800 blood units tested in eight cities across America.

Based on this finding, he said, the Red Cross calculated the risk of becoming infected with HTLV-1 at about 2,800 in 12 million, or about 1 chance in 4,286 for every unit of blood given annually.



Williams said that the risk goes up for each unit of blood an individual receives annually.

"If a person is in a bad car accident and receives a hundred units of blood, then it (the risk) would be a hundred times that," he said. "The danger is minimal, but not insignificant."

Judge forces end of tradition

JACKSON, Miss. — A federal judge has ruled that Mississippi can't light a Christmas cross on a state office building because the tradition violated separation of church and state.

U.S. District Judge William H. Barbour Jr. of Jackson, in an order signed this week, made permanent a temporary injunction issued Dec. 12, 1986, that halted lighting of the cross in the windows of the 20-story Walter Sillers State Office Building in Jackson.

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — The bodies of a man and a woman were found Thursday in a ditch near the Kansas River, where they were thrown after being killed elsewhere, police said.

Jolene Jones, 27, of Kansas City, Kan., and Steve Ray, 33, of Olathe, Kan., were last seen together about 12:30 p.m. Wednesday.

They were apparently shot somewhere else then thrown in the ditch, said Maj. Gary Chancellor of the Kansas City, Kan., Police Department.

"We don't have any leads," Chancellor said.

Senate passes AIDS bill calling for mandatory tests

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate on Thursday passed a billion-dollar AIDS information and research bill that calls for mandatory AIDS testing of people convicted of sex and drug crimes.

"Finally, we have declared war on the virus and not on the victims in our battle against AIDS," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said after the 87-4 vote.

The vote came after hours of bitter argument over the content of educational materials paid for with federal dollars.

Tempers were lost, curses hurled and senators denied the opportunity to speak as lawmakers debated whether to renew a 1987 ban on federally funded materials said to directly promote or encourage homosexuality.

The ban, which expires Sept. 30, was passed last year 94-2. But sentiment shifted this year after several senators said it was having a chilling effect on public health efforts in the homosexual community, which has the highest percentage of AIDS victims.

The Senate agreed to the ban sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., but also agreed to another provision that says education materials should stress the public health benefits of abstinence, a single monogamous relationship and avoidance of intravenous drug use. The provision also says no other part of the bill should restrict the dissemination of accurate information to anyone at risk, apparently superseding the Helms ban.

In addition to voting unanimously to approve mandatory AIDS testing of people convicted of sex and drug crimes, the Senate also accepted neutralized versions of several conservative amendments that supporters said would have hampered the bill.

Sens. Kennedy and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, sponsors of the fiscal 1988 research and education bill, called it the nation's first comprehensive statement of an AIDS policy. The two are chairman and ranking minority member, respectively, of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

The bill authorizes $665 million for state and federal AIDS education programs, increased hiring at the National Institutes of Health, a new home health care program for AIDS victims and special efforts to help high-risk minorities and intravenous drug abusers. A committee aide said open-ended research money would bring to total to about $1.1 billion in annual spending.

The bill's passage also was lauded by Victor Basile, executive director of the Human Rights Campaign Fund, the national political action committee for the gay and lesbian community.

Error causes return delay

Students' tax refunds may be held up

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Due to a computer programming error, students who filed tax returns early this year may experience a delay in receiving state tax refunds, according to Barbara Cooke, public information officer for the Department of Revenue in Topeka.

The programming error has to do with line 6, for exemptions claimed, on the state income tax return form. As of this year, if students can be claimed as dependents on their parents' returns, they cannot claim themselves as an exemption on their own return.

"The new exemption rule was not changed on the computer, so it kicked out that information," said Gil Gillispie, owner of the H&R Block franchise in Manhattan.

As a result, the program was rewritten, but those tax forms that were "kicked out" were processed by hand, he said.

Gillispie said students may experience a delay of 4-6 weeks with some refunds.

However, Cooke said, the actual computer delay was only three or four days.

"The returns were simply re-routed and done by hand, processing never actually stopped, it only slowed down," Cooke said.

Not all delays are caused by computer errors. Cooke pointed out that many different factors may account for a delay of refunds.

"There are a lot of changes in the federal and state forms this year. If you make a mistake on the federal form, the same one could be made on the state form," he said, "so some delays can also be caused by the taxpayer making an error on their return."

Cooke also stressed that filers should wait the full waiting period before expecting their refund.

"The waiting period is 6 to 8 weeks after filing, and when they are filed late it's quite a job to process them."

Christine Crenshaw, associate director in the Office of Student Finanacial Assistance, said the slower process would not affect those students eligible for financial aid.

"We award students regardless of whether or not their tax refund is back," Crenshaw said.

Most of the financial information needed by the department is taken from the federal return, so problems with state returns wouldn't really affect students, she said.

NOW lobbyist praises laws

By Patrice Macan
Collegian Reporter

The veto of the parental reporting bill and the approval of the KanWork program by Kansas Legislators signals the end of a successful session for the National Organization for Women, said Alicia Klingman lobbyist for the state organization of NOW.

The KanWork program provides women with training for above-minimum wage jobs. During the training period and the following six months, day care for the women's children and transportation for the women will be provided.

NOW supports the program, because it benefits both the state and women by offering the women an alternative to accepting welfare. It will also produce revenue for Kansas, Klingman said.

Three counties will try the $12 million program on a trial basis for one year, she said.

The veto of the parental reporting bill was favored by the organization, because NOW contends that a woman should be able to make her own decision concerning an abortion.

A proposal for a Vietnam Women's Memorial to be located in Washington, D.C., as part of the Vietnam Memorial was introduced into the Legislature.

The proposed memorial would be a combat nurse and is designed to represent the 10,000 women who served in the war.

Three of the organizations supporting the proposal are the Vietnam Veterans of America, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion.

Another good sign according to NOW is that the parental leave bill stands a good chance of being passed on the state level, Klingman said.

The bill would allow a parent to take up to 12 unpaid weeks off of work over a two-year period to care for a sick child or parent. This would apply for an employee who has worked more than six months for a company with 15 or more employees.

During next year's Legislative session, NOW intends to lobby for sex-equitable insurance.

If this bill passes, it would increase in auto insurance for women but lower rates of home, health and life insurance, she said.

Drug found to help fight AIDS

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A drug that can be purchased over the counter in Mexico and Japan has been shown in laboratory tests to be a potent agent against the AIDS virus, a group of National Cancer Institute researchers report.

The drug, called dextran sulfate, was found to prevent the AIDS virus from infecting and killing the body's T-cell lymphocytes, the main target of the virus, a researcher said Thursday.

"We found in the test tube that this agent is a very a powerful inhibitor of the HIV virus," said Dr. Flossie Wong-Staal, a NCI researcher and co-author of a study on dextran sulfate. HIV, for human immunodeficiency virus, is the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Wong-Staal said the drug has been used for more than two decades in Japan and elsewhere as an anticoagulant and has demonstrated that it has no significant toxicity.

"This drug may be very promising against AIDS," said Wong-Staal, "because it is already in use and because it has been shown to be very potent against HIV-1 and HIV-2 (two viruses that cause AIDS)."

But her co-investigator, Samuel Broder, also of NCI, cautioned: "This is not a breakthrough."

He said that although the drug "is a potent agent against HIV-1 and HIV-2" in the test tube, it is not at all clear that the drug can be given AIDS patients in sufficiently strong doses to affect the course of the disease in the body.

Broder said dextran sulfate is only one of a large family of potential anti-virals that must first undergo carefully controlled trials.

Robert Gallo, an NCI researcher and co-discoverer of the AIDS virus, said dextran sulfate should be studied further.

"I'm impressed by the results I've seen in vitro and it merits trials (in patients)," he said. "The question is will it be able to be taken by patients for long periods of time."

Students must make arrangements for pets

Recently in Manhattan, a small boy was nearly attacked by a large, shaggy looking cat. Although he escaped without injury, an animal control officer was called to the scene to collect the cat.

The animal was in terrible condition. It had lost part of its leg, was dirty, had a matted coat and, even worse, had contracted rabies. The animal control officer commented that officials had been aware of this cat for some time.

In fact, it had been abandoned by a college student after the student left for home.

There is an annual problem caused by students leaving pets behind after they leave for the summer. The mentality of "Oh, it's such a cute little cat. Someone will find it and adopt it," is immature and unrealistic.

Pets left behind for the summer are usually victims of speeding autos, starvation or contracted diseases from other wild animals or rancid food.

Especially at this time of year, students should be reminded that they are responsible for their pets. If the pets cannot be taken home, efforts should be made to place them in another home or to have them humanely destroyed.

Manhattan's pet population does not need the burden of supporting more strays. And owners owe it to their pets to continue to care for them.

The pets are at their mercy.

Legislators put off real action until last days

There is nothing like putting off until tomorrow what you should do today.

But that's just what state legislators did this year — they put off what could have been done during the Legislature's regular session until their wrap-up session that convened Wednesday.

The 1988 Kansas Legislature has already been criticized as being basically unproductive. This could be because almost all of the big issues facing the legislators when they convened in January, like the windfall tax and prison overcrowding, are still facing them today.

Prison problems should not be left until a frantic few days in April and May. A federal judge has already declared the situation unconstitutional. The time to tackle this was in January and February — not now.

Gov. Mike Hayden promised, during his gubernatorial campaign last fall, that Kansans would get all of the windfall tax back. If the legislators keep pushing this issue back, the interest the state will make on it will be enough to allow the state to give all back. That might happen during another wrap-up session, probably after the turn of the century.

Why should so much important legislation be left to be resolved in a frantic succession of work days?

The answer is that it should not. This session is normally called the "veto session," because it is supposed to be a time when legislators came back to override any vetoes made by the governor. It is not meant to accomplish all the work that has been left from the regular session.

Maybe the legislators need a longer regular session so this much work does not face them when they come back to the wrap-up session — or maybe they need to attack their work a little more during that time. Whatever the remedy, they should not be asked, nor should they expect to take on so much work in such a short time.

Reflecting on the past

Writing offers some lessons, insights

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

Today is the 29th day of April. This is the last time this semester you will be reading my words in the Collegian. With finals around the corner, I do not have any particular issue up my sleeve. Hence, I wish to take this opportunity to look back and look forward.

Ever since my memory takes me back, I have always wanted to write. It all started with writing silly, childish poems during grade school. During the first two years of high school, I put in a great deal of effort to write full-length children's novels (like the kind Enid Blyton used to write), but none of them materialized.

In junior college, I used to submit numerous pieces for publication in the various magazines. Most of these were not accepted on the grounds of being too unconventional. Most writers have a tough time with editors; they either say "It's never been done before" or "Anybody can write that." You just cannot win.

When I joined engineering college, I changed my strategy. I volunteered to edit magazines and newsletters. In this way I could include the so-called non-conventional stuff as editorials. It was something like having your cake and eating it, too.

Last year, I came to K-State for graduate school, and I edited the newsletter of India Students Association. This newsletter got shelved this year due to financial (and maybe political) reasons. This left me out in the cold, craving to ground the lead of my Faber Castell on paper, and so I started writing columns for the Collegian.

If you recall, my first few columns had quotes from a mysterious J.R. Harper. I thought I could have fun at everybody's expense. However, a special friend of mine made me realize that a lie is a lie is a lie.

Moreover, I also realized that what a journalist writes is everybody's business; at least three people I know have used my column on international students for their composition or speech classes.

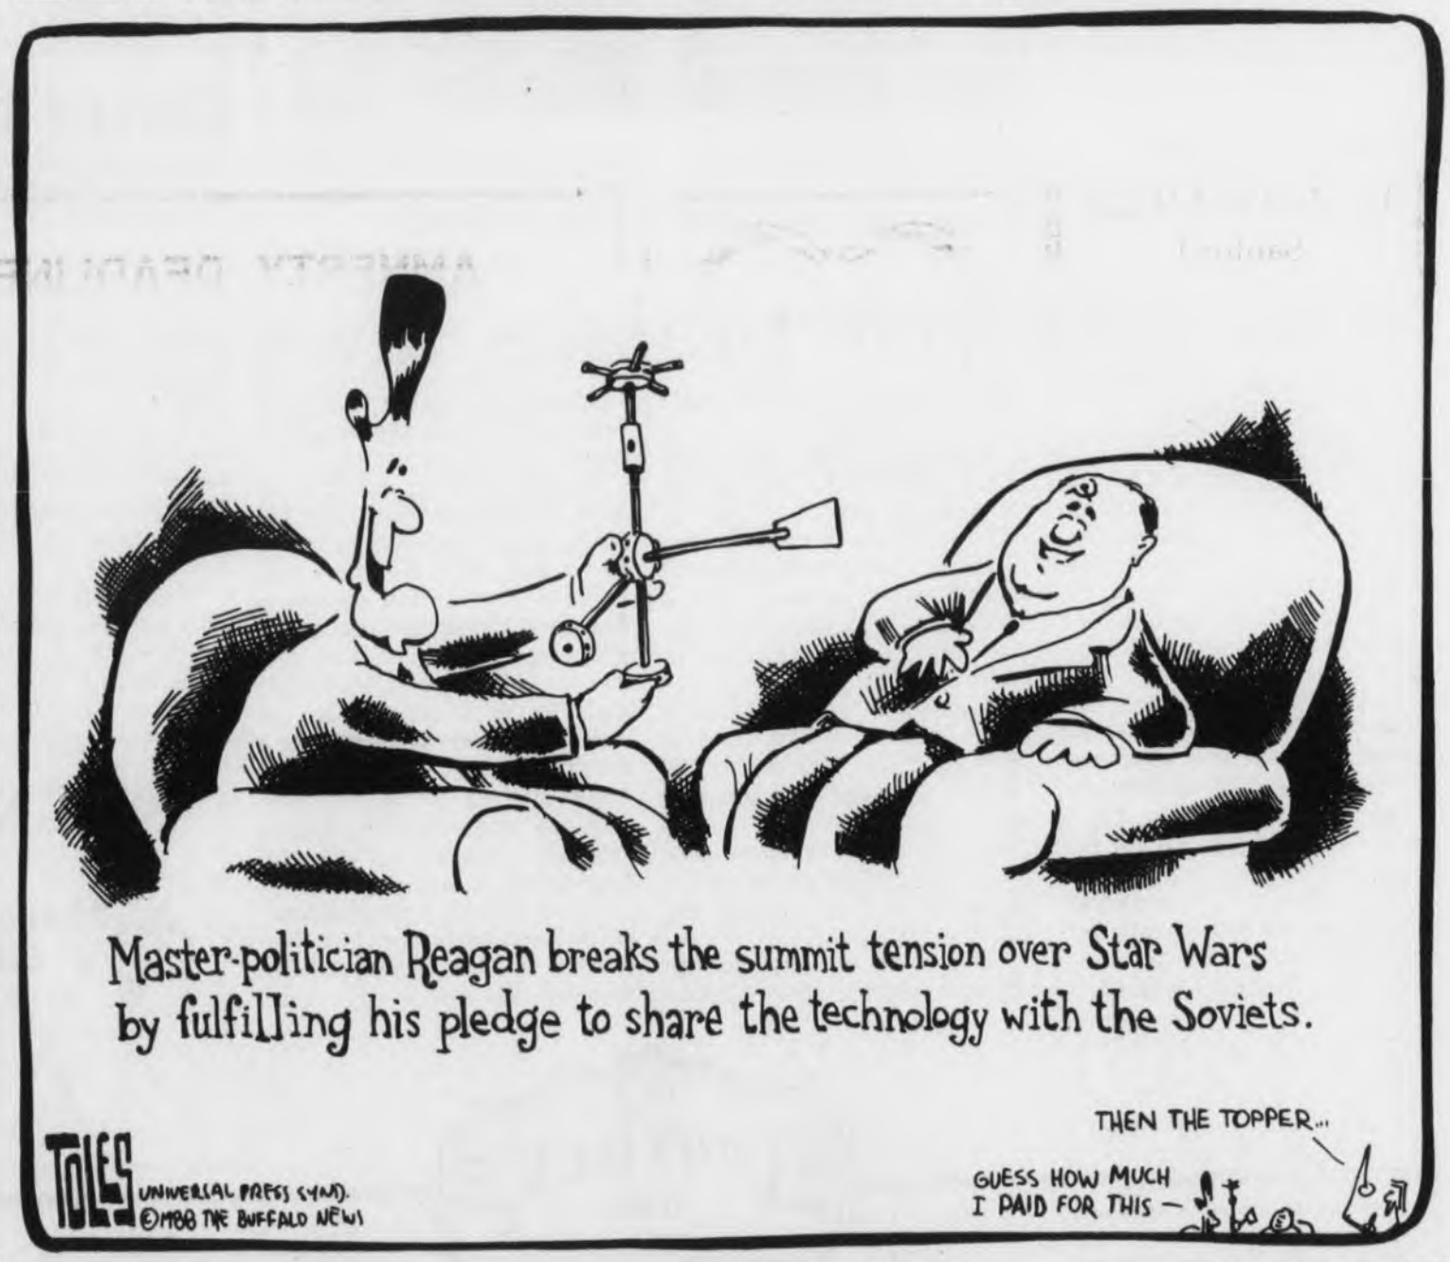
Therefore, I explained that this mysterious J.R. Harper was none other than my housemate John. I promised to write the truth in future; to the best of my belief, I have kept the promise. Of course, most of what I wrote is opinion, and opinions are based on a person's past experiences, present feelings and future expectations.

When I started contributing articles to the Collegian, I had resolved not to write on controversial topics. But like most of my New Year's resolutions, I was unable to keep it.

Many readers misinterpreted my column on women and religion. I was not discussing the theoretical view of women by the different religions; these may or may not be desired views. My intention was to show that women have been victimized by all practiced religions. Moreover, I fully agree with one reader's comment that if all religions are trying to explain the same reality, only one can be true; however, this was not the point of contention in my column.

My column on American behavior was intended to be read in a lighter vein; I was glad that most readers did so. I apologize if I hurt anyone's sentiments.

I was misled by my conscience into thinking that my column on God's existence would convince some atheists or agnostics of God's existence. I failed miserably in this attempt. If anyone wants to know what it is like to know God, feel free to get in touch with me.



Having my picture in the paper every Friday made me a public figure of sorts. Sometimes I felt my identity as a private individual was lost. At other times, it was a good feeling that people recognized me instantly.

Because I'm from a foreign country, people automatically assumed that my views represented those of the foreign student community on campus. This assumption was made by both American and foreign students, putting me in a kind of "Catch-22" situation. My views are my own, please.

Well, if I get selected again to be a columnist, you will have to read my columns next fall! I look forward to it; how about you? Also, in the near future (something like four or five years), you will hopefully read my novel called "Angela Rose Brown." It is a story about the psychological trauma of a material girl.

You know, I hardly ever manage to complete any piece I begin writing the way I want to. Of course, when I start writing, I have everything chalked out — but somewhere along the line I lose control of myself and my pencil takes over, my hand a willing tool, wandering through a maze of pathways hitherto unexplored.

I have no last words to say, no blessings to bestow, no curses. For I have run out of words even as my pencil lead has become blunt.... So long, and thanks for all the fish!

Much-needed co-op

Editor,

My husband and I have been upset over the disapproval of help for funding of the KSU Childcare Cooperative. This is a much needed attribute for K-State students with children. While sitting in the Union staterоom yesterday, I heard a statement concerning the co-op. A student said, "Since not every student has a child, no funding should be given to the co-op."

Then she went on to say, "Money was needed for the recreation center and new coliseum." I do not use the Chester E. Peters Recreation Center or the Bramlage Coliseum, but I do use the co-op. Needless to say, I disagreed heavily. If the student does not want the co-op funded, because not everyone here has a child, then I do not want the rec center or coliseum funded, because not every student here uses the buildings.

Much more thought should go into the final decision on the co-op. The student body has become an older group of students, instead of a younger group. This means many more students will have children to attend the co-op.

If more thought does not go into funding the co-op, this could be a large disadvantage to K-State. The rate the co-op will begin charging is expensive — $21 per day for an infant and $11.50 a day for a 5-year-old. Also, Social and Rehabilitative Service payments for certain children have been totally denied.

Working for minumum wage and having an infant who needs care from the co-op leaves approximately $25 a week to pay bills and eat on after paying the co-op. Why not quit school, quit work and babysit your own child? It would be a benefit to yourself, but a disadvantage to K-State, due to loss of students, which will cause a loss of income to the school.

Finals week stress

Editor,

Finals week is just around the corner and a major concern of students will be the amount of stress they are under during finals week. It seems to happen every finals week; there isn't enough time between classes and finals to relax. We only have one day, and it is spent preparing for finals.

There is a solution to this problem. We need to give ourselves a full dead week to prepare for finals. It would relieve a lot of that finals week stress. I think it is something worth considering.

Harmful porn

Editor,

Catherine Doud should be ashamed.

She tells us "that this service (dial-a-porn) really doesn't hurt anyone." Tell that to the little girl who was molested by a young boy after he ran up several hundred dollars worth of dial-a-porn charges on somebody else's phone. No, wait a few years until the girl is old enough to understand what you are saying.

She tells us it jeopardizes the constitutional freedom of speech. Certainly not any more than laws against shouting "fire" in a crowded theater.

Where people are harmed, laws to protect them are not unconstitutional. Pornography harms women and children, and laws against it stand up before the Supreme Court.

An eye opener

Editor,

As one of the organizers of the Midwest Women's Studies Association regional conference and the performances of the Split Britches theatre troupe, I would like to publicly acknowledge and thank Carrie Miller for the insightful review of one of the troupe's performances.

In spending nearly three days in the non-heterosexist environment of the conference, in the company and spirit of so many wonderful women, I simply lost sight of what was missing: MEN!!! How could I have failed to notice? Am I so imbalanced that I do not even miss the presence of men? The audience looked balanced to me, and unless some women were wearing extremely effective drag, I am sure that there were some men in the audience.

Gloria Steinem once said that "a woman without a man is like a fish without a bicycle." This made sense to me until I read the review. Now that I know what constitutes "complete" versus "barren," I will be more aware. As far as the "truth in advertising" issue goes, why is it that plays which use middle class, white, heterosexuality as the given premise rarely advertise themselves as such? At least they could use an acronym like SOBS — Same Old Boring Stuff.

Thanks, Collegian. You are always the beacon of intelligence and wisdom here at K-State, and I appreciate the energy you put into unraveling the intent of those who would infuse the campus with "feminism" and "lesbian issues" under the guise of a conference and professional theater. You certainly woke me up!

Speaker: Israeli situation no longer 'normal'

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

Israel can no longer say that everything is normal in the West Bank and Gaza region, according to Frontline journalist Phyllis Bennis.

"The strong impression (given) is that things will never be the same again," he said.

Bennis, who spoke Thursday in the Union Little Theater, recently returned from covering the Israeli occupation of Palestinian villages in that area for Frontline, an Oakland, Cal., newspaper.

In that area, Palestinians have been violently protesting the Israeli occupation for about six months.

Because of the problems, Bennis said she did not think the situation would ever return to the conditions that existed before Israel took control of the territory about 20 years ago.

"What the uprising has brought about is a vision, a preview perhaps, of what a Palestinian-independent state would look like. What it would be like to be a Palestinian not living under Israeli occupation," she said.

Bennis said the uprising has changed the world's perception of the Palestinians.

"Now Palestinians are seen as victims rather than terrorists," she said.

Bennis said the uprising's nature has also changed recently. She called the current activities "a broadening campaign of civil disobedience," which is causing the Israeli government more problems than outright violence.

"We're seeing fewer and fewer individual uprisings — fewer direct confrontations wtih the Israelis," Bennis said.

The uprising, she said, has had a strong unifying effect on the people. Because of it, there is more development of social institutions and more work toward community development and organized resistance.

It is this organization that Bennis said will hold the communities together and cause them to never follow the occupation again.

Bennis said this new form of resistance is much more challenging to the Israelis, who were not trained to fight a residential war within their own borders. Entire villages can suffer "collective punishment" for activities of a few of the residents.

These punishments range from the imposition of curfews to blowing up homes and expelling residents. Bennis said that though there have been fewer direct confrontations, the level of repression has increased, with the Israelis "seeking out their victims."

While Bennis does not think the uprising can drive the Israelis from the region by force, she does feel it is the beginning of a change in power.

Bennis said the United States is not doing enough to help the Palestinians. Although U. S. leaders are beginning to realize they must talk with Palestinian leaders, they cannot, because of economic and stratiegic ties with Israel.

"There is a level of absolutely extraordinary hipocracy in how the U.S. is responding to all of this," Bennis said.

She said that while the U.S. government criticized Israel for restricting the press, it also passed a law closing the Palestine Liberation Organization mission.

Event to aid Jackson campaign; organizers plan rally after walk

By The Collegian Staff

Jesse Jackson supporters hoping to raise funds for the presidential candidate will "Walk for Jesse" beginning at 1 p.m. Sunday.

"We hope to raise several hundred dollars, maybe more than a thousand," said the Rev. Al Zimmerman, coordinator of the fund raiser. "This is the first time we have tried this and I hope for a good turn out," he added.

The 5-mile walk will start and finish at the Poyntz Pavilion between the Riley County Courthouse and the Carnegie building. The route the walkers will take will be down Poyntz Avenue to Yuma Street, through Aggieville, around the K-State campus and back.

The walk will be over at approximately 3:30 p.m., and a rally will follow the walk at the pavilion.

"Our success will come from how many people participate. If we can get at least 50 people who can raise $25 in pledges, we can make more than $1,000," Zimmerman said.

The money will go to support Jackson's upcoming California primary, Zimmerman said.

Participants in the walk will have a chance to win "Jackson '88" campaign materials. Some of the prizes include "Jackson '88" bumper stickers, baseball caps and T-shirts. A prize will also be given to the walker with the best sign.

Blast tears airliner open

Sixty passengers injured; one missing

By The Associated Press

KAHULUI, Hawaii — An explosion tore open an Aloha Airlines jetliner over the ocean southeast of the island of Maui on Thursday, injuring 60 people and leaving one person missing, authorities said.

The Boeing 737, one engine aflame and its cabin exposed, made an emergency landing at Kahului Airport at 7 p.m. (CDT). The airline said the Hilo-to-Honolulu flight had set out with 89 passengers, five crew members and an air traffic controller.

"It was like somebody had peeled off a layer of skin. You could just see all the passengers sitting there," said George Harvey, area coordinator for the Federal Aviation Administration in Honolulu.

Sixty people brought to Maui Memorial Hospital and 12 were admitted, two in critical condition and four in serious, said Dr. Charles Mitchell, emergency room director. Injuries included cuts, blunt trauma and burns, he said.

"They told me there was a loud sudden explosion and the roof of the plane literally flew off," Mitchell.

One person was unaccounted for, said Harvey.

A witness, Craig Nichols of Pocatello, Idaho, said after the plane came to a stop, he saw "some really mangled people (passengers)," including one with an arm almost severed.

"It looked like a normal landing with the whole top of the plane gone," he said, adding that the damage began behind the cockpit, "clear down to the windows."

Lecture to focus on AIDS

Virologist talks of cure

By The Collegian Staff

A virologist on the front line in the battle against AIDS will lecture at 4 p.m. today in Ackert 221 on the chances of finding a cure for the disease.

Joseph Hughes, who did postdoctoral studies at K-State, works for Merck Sharp and Dohme Pharmaceutical Co., West Point, Pa. There, he deals with possible cures and preventions for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome on a daily basis.

Terry Johnson, director for the Division of Biology and the Center for Basic Cancer Research, said Hughes' work is interesting and important because of the worldwide quest for a way to control the virus.

Hughes will also be the keynote speaker at the Cancer Research and Education Advisory Council's closed meeting Saturday morning. The 13-member council provides input into the operations of the Center for Basic Cancer Research.

Hughes' visit is funded by a virology and tumor biology grant from the National Cancer Institute and the Center For Basic Cancer Research at K-State.

Basketball game to benefit war memorial

All-Star squad will play Wildcat seniors, celebrities

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

The last game of Big Eight men's basketball has yet to be played in Ahearn Field House.

The six seniors from the 1987-88 Wildcat basketball squad and a group of local celebrities will take on the All-Star student squad at 7:30 p.m. Saturday. Proceeds from the contest will benefit the KSU Vietnam Veterans Memorial project.

The All-Stars' squad includes players from top intramural basketball teams in the greek, residence hall, independent and 6-foot and under divisions.

"The student all-star team has been practicing and wants to represent itself well," said Bill Arck, faculty adviser to the Vietnam Memorial Committee.

Seniors from the nationally eighth-ranked Wildcat squad include Charles Bledsoe, Ron Meyer, Mark Nelson, Mitch Richmond, Will Scott and Walter Wright. They will be joined by Perry Taylor, Manhattan High School basketball coach, Troy Lubbers, student body president, Doug Folk, Student Senate chairman, and Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

"We hope to do a couple of things with this game," Arck said. "Let people see the Wildcats play one last time in Ahearn and raise money for the memorial."

The game will be played like any other college basketball game, Arck said "It won't be as serious, but it should be a good game," he said.

Half-time festivities will include slam dunk and three-point contests. Willie the Wildcat and the cheerleaders will also be at the game.

A photo and autograph session will follow the game.

Mitch Richmond will coach the Varsity Celebrity team and Pat Buchanan, graduate student in secondary education, will coach the All-Stars.

Prior fund-raisers, including boot blocks during football season and a benefit dinner with Gov. Mike Hayden, have raised almost half of the $20,000 needed to complete the project, Arck said.

The proposed memorial is a circular limestone structure with benches and a central flagpole. Names of K-State students who died in the war will be engraved in the stone.

Admission to the game will be $3 for the general public and $2 for students. Tickets may be purchased at the north entrance of Ahearn prior to the game.

Lunchbag Theatre performs

Male myth explored in 'The Chastening'

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

The male myth and the tragedy of a wasted life were explored in Thursday's Lunchbag Theatre performance in Purple Masque Theatre.

Tom McLaughlin, director of the play and graduate teaching assistant of theater, said Thursday's play "boils down to the Albert Schweitzer quote, 'The tragedy of life is what dies inside of man while he lives.'"

Lunchbag Theatre is an acting-directing workshop. The students who act in and direct the presentations are members of two classes, Practice in Acting and Practice in Directing. Each student must participate in two Lunchbag Theatre performances during the semester.

"The Chastening," by Richard Weaver, involves three characters — Dad, George and Tim — who represent three generations in the same family. The setting for the play is George's memory.

George, played by Mark Cross, junior in theater, is haunted by his relationship with his strict father (Dad), played by Joel Herndon, junior in theater. George is equally as haunted by his own neglectful relationship with his son (Tim), played by Gregory Bales, senior in journalism and mass communications.

"It's a whole panorama of life playing through (George's) mind," McLaughlin said.

The play opened with the song "Cats in the Cradle," which paralleled the father-son theme of the play.

George was taught by his strict father to be "God-fearing, responsible and loving" and to fulfill his commitments. In return, George hated, feared and loved his father.

George unintentionally neglects his own son, Tim, and "not only gives false promises to his son, but also to himself," McLaughlin said.

Tim is deprived of a father while growing up and in the end he "just can't take it anymore," McLaughlin said.

"Tim has an internal drive to connect with his father," Bales said. "He tries to give love and searches for a solidified relationship."

Finally, after flashbacks of George's life, it is revealed that Tim died of a drug overdose — a problem of Tim's that George did not know about. Guilt is the cause of these voices from the past (Dad's and Tim's) haunting George's memory.

Although there are many interpretations of the play, McLaughlin said there are two themes involved in the presentation.

The play deals with the "male myth," which emphasizes that men should be hard and dominant and shouldn't cry, McLaughlin said.

This myth "trickles down from generation to generation" and discourages men from expressing themselves, he said.

The other theme in the play addresses the problem that people don't take time to live, he said.

"Too often in life our days sort of slide by, and then the weeks slide by and we don't realize what is important to us," he. "This is how the male myth breeds itself."

Festival provides group with chance to vary dance style

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

K-State's Repertory Dance Company will perform Friday in the "Art a la Carte" festival in Salina. The festival is sponsored by the Salina Arts and Humanities Commission.

"We wanted to perform in Salina. It's something we have never done before," said Luke Kahlich, K-State professor of dance and the company's coach.

The company will perform at noon at Salina's Campbell Plaza and will later perform at the Oakdale and Stewart elementary schools.

Kahlich said performing for the public and performing for school children are different aspects of the art. The performances must be tailored for children, Kahlich said.

The team will present four numbers at the noon show: "How I Feel" and "Thanksong," ballets; "Kutana," an African piece; and "Seek and Find," a modern dance.

An improvisation will end the performance. The improvised dance is to show the audience how dance is created, he said.

"(The improvisation) also shows why dancers need training like stamina, strength and creativity to perform," he said. "This is exciting and creative to the eye."

Sharisse Horn, junior in dance and member of the company, said performing at the grade schools will benefit the team as well as the children.

"We must present our dances to keep their attention span," she said. "It's also good to show the kids that everyday movements like jumping and skipping are part of dance," she said.

Horn said performing at grade schools will also teach the team how to adjust to different audiences.

The modern dance "Seek and Find" was choreographed by Horn and was chosen to be performed at the American College Dance Festival in Champagne, Ill. Team members Tammy Francka and Gregory Alan performed Horn's dance at the contest and will also perform the dance in Salina.

"Art a la Carte" is the company's final performance of the semester. The team averages seven to 10 performances a semester, including the fall and spring concerts and out-of-town shows, said Kahlich.

The dance department also works with theater productions when dance is involved.

Ban not affecting local flights

Smoking already restricted on planes from Municipal

By The Collegian Staff

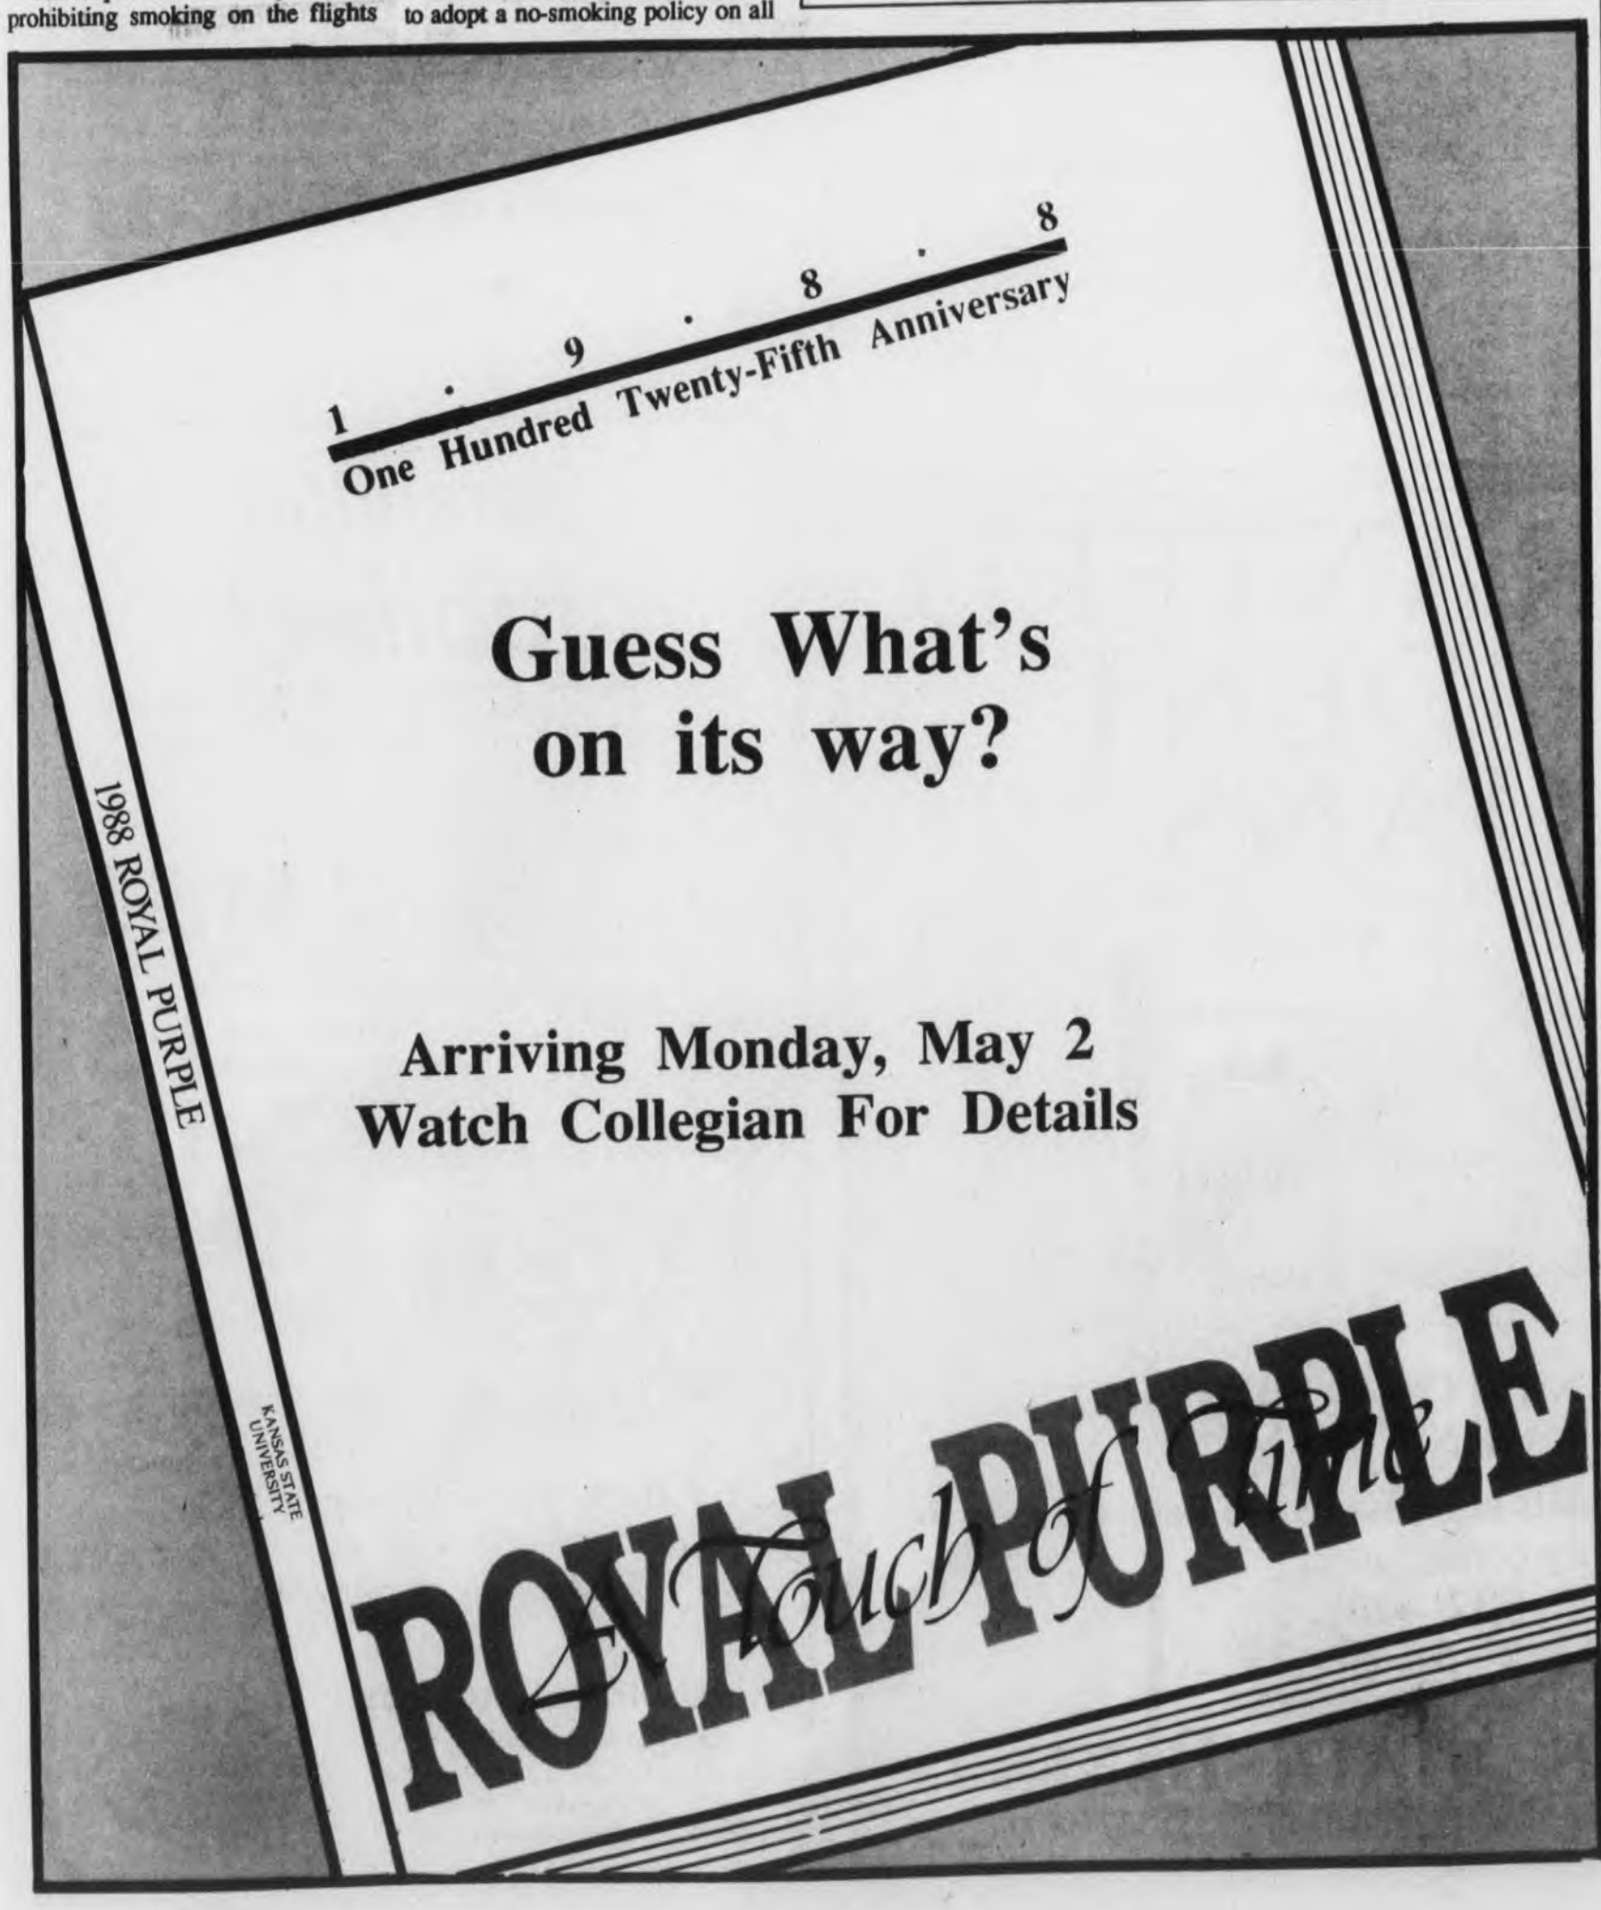
A new federal smoking ban on short, domestic flights has not affected air passengers flying from Manhattan's municipal airport.

Due to the smaller size of the aircraft and shortness of the flights that the airport handles, the regulation does not affect the Manhattan Municipal Airport, said Bill Fogerson, general manager of the airport and president of Capitol Air Lines/ Braniff Express.

The airport has had the policy of prohibiting smoking on the flights the airport serves for five years, he said.

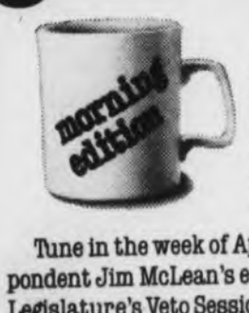
The federal regulation prohibits smoking on any domestic flights less than two hours long.

Each airline company must decide what policy it wants to use for longer flights, Fogerson said. The airlines can provide smoking areas for the longer flights, if they choose.



Northwestern Airlines nas decided to adopt a no-smoking policy on all of their flights, no matter how long.

"Even though I don't smoke I don't agree with that, smokers have their rights, too," Fogerson said.



The effects of the mandate should be minimal, he said, the airlines should all follow the federal mandate.

"The only effect this will have on passengers is if a person can't go without a smoke for two hours they may be willing to drive a thousand miles instead, so they can smoke, but I doubt it," Fogerson said.

Homosexuals, politicians, unwed mothers, criminals, prostitutes, transvestites, entertainers, strippers. What do these people all have in common?

They are the subjects of daytime TV talk shows and may be the reason the shows are successful.

Or maybe not. Since the shows all cover basically the same topics, it seems to be the hosts that make the difference.

The three most watched daytime talk shows nationally are "The Phil Donahue Show," "Oprah" (Winfrey), and "Geraldo" (Rivera).

Donahue, the veteran of the three, having been on television for 20 years, began his career as a radio talk show host.

He is known as an avid supporter of women's rights and as the host who likes to play the devil's advocate during his show.

In the process, Donahue tends to incite the audience, giving excitement to the program. And, if K-State viewers are representative of the rest of the country, he is doing just what the viewers want — he's making them mad.

On the other hand, there is Oprah.

She was a television news reporter before landing her own talk show.

She gained further notoriety from her role in the motion picture "The Color Purple."

As a talk show host, Oprah has gained popularity in the past few years with her frankness of opinion and compassion for the downtrodden.

While the Donahue audience tends to become enraged, Oprah's audience is usually teary-eyed.

Lastly there is Geraldo, the newcomer.

Rivera started his career as a journalist. Prior to his talk show, he was known for his investigative reporting on the ABC network news program "20/20."

One investigation which received a great deal of press was his investigation and eventual bust of drug dealers.

However, another Geraldo story caused him to receive some negative publicity.

Rivera opened the vault of Chicago gangster Al Capone, which supposedly contained a vast fortune, live on national television only to find that it was completely empty.

"I just don't like him ever since that Al Capone deal," said Scott Korte, senior in construction science. "It made him look like such a weenie."

While many people may think of the typical viewer of these talk shows to be housewives, a large amount of college students are avid viewers.

Thirty-six percent of the K-State students said they watch daytime talk shows "at least once a week," in a recent Collegian poll. Twenty-nine percent of those polled said they watched the shows, "less than once a week," while 29 percent said they have never watched a daytime talk show.

Students were also asked to name their favorite and least favorite talk show host.

So who exactly is the 'king' of talk shows according to K-State students?

According to the survey, Donahue is the favorite, by far, with 48 percent of the vote.

"I like Donahue the best," said Brian Howell, senior in journalism and mass communications. "He has been on (TV) the longest and is the most reputable. He started the whole deal of going into the audience to ask questions."

"He's just a cool dude," said Korte. "I like his haircut. I wish I could get my hair to do that."

While Donahue did place first, there were a few students who said they dislike the veteran host.

"I don't like Donahue because his shows are getting old," said Darci Latham, sophomore in secondary education.

Taking second place in popularity is Oprah with 37 percent of the vote.

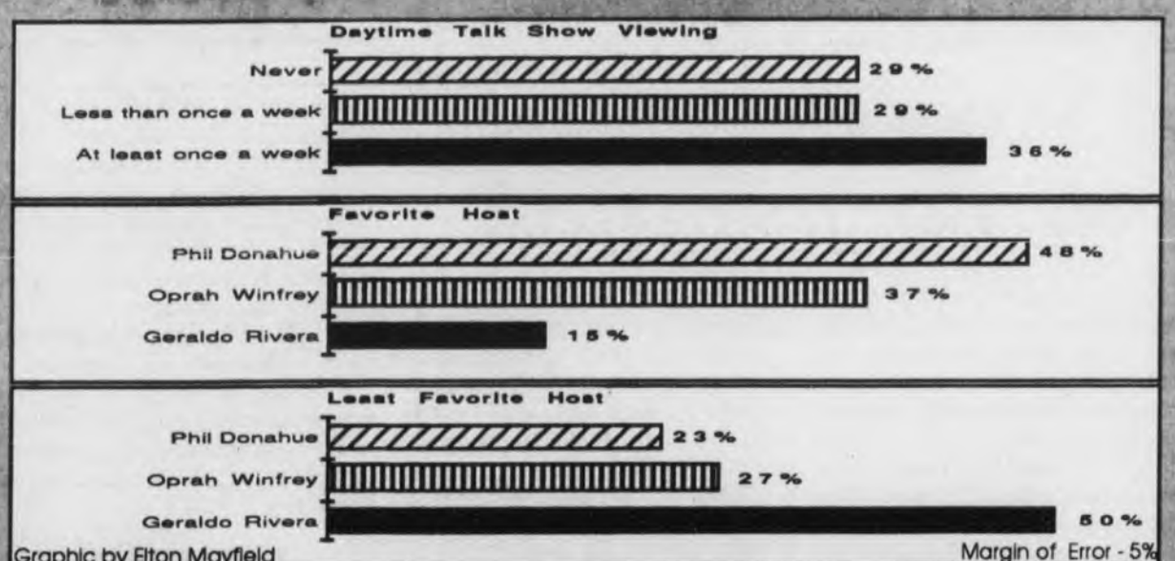
"Oprah asks the right questions and is human about it," said Mary Jo Lampe, junior in apparel and textile marketing.

"The last few times I watched it (Oprah), it was stupid," said Kim Loehr, sophomore in animal sciences, "besides we can only get two channels so we watch Phil. I never watch Geraldo."

Unfortunately for Geraldo, who finished last in the survey with 15 percent of the vote, few people had good things to say about his program. He was also the overwhelming least favorite of the hosts with 50 percent of those polled saying he was their "least favorite."

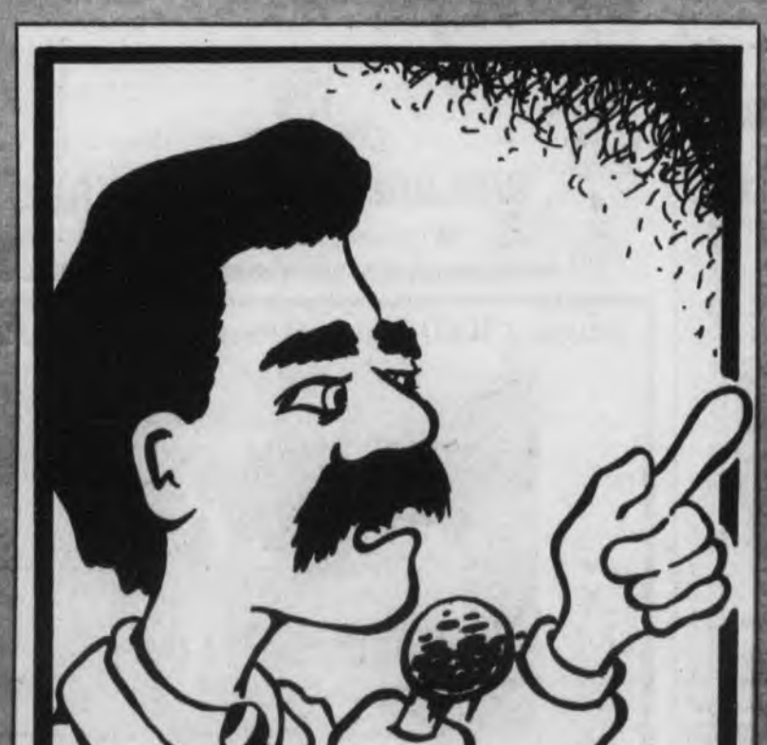
"I think Geraldo is a pompous ass," said Emily Day, junior in marketing.

"We have already got Phil and Oprah. Who needs Geraldo?" said Nancy Manning, junior in human development.



Others said they simply didn't watch Geraldo because of the mistakes he has made in the past.

"If he would have found something in that vault (Capone's), I might have given him a second chance," said Darin Salts, freshman in accounting.



While these students obviously have their own preference to daytime talk shows, 29 percent of those polled said they don't watch them at all.

Luckily for Donahue, Oprah and Geraldo, there are many more who do watch them.

As long as topics remain hot and hosts likeable, daytime talk shows will remain a staple of Americans' viewing diet.

Dinner, fair benefit city shelter for homeless

Students to help with group's fund-raiser

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

There are more than 3 million homeless people in America, and some of them live in Manhattan.

The Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc., which provides shelter and food for Manhattan's homeless, will conduct its annual Barbecue Chicken Dinner and Family Fun Fair from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday at the City Park Pavilion.

Some K-Staters are going to participate in the annual barbecue and fair, the shelter's only fund-raiser.

"We decided we needed to get more involved in the community," said Mike Schmidt, junior in mechanical engineering and chairman of philanthropical projects for Pi Kappa Alpha.

"We saw the article about the emergency shelter in the Collegian, and one of the guys in the house, Darren Landis, did some work at the shelter as a part of a social work class. He got me interested," he said.

Landis, a sophomore in business, said working at the shelter was a chance to help out and that he derived self-satisfaction from working with the people.

"The shelter occasionally asks us to help out, and we're glad to do it. The shelter can't afford to pay people to do the work we do," Landis said.

Schmidt said fraternity members have helped with a clothing giveaway at the shelter and eight of them will be working at the fair.

"The shelter occasionally asks us to help out, and we're glad to do it. The shelter can't afford to pay people to do the work we do."
—Darren Landis, sophomore in business

The fraternity's chapter adviser told the fraternity that if it intended to win a Smythe Award, it would have to become more involved in the community, he said.

The Smythe Award is presented annually to 12 chapters nationwide.

The K-State chapter, Schmidt said, has been trying to win one the of awards for the last couple of years.

Kathy Rankin, executive director for the shelter and a K-State graduate, said people at the shelter really appreciate the assistance provided by K-State living groups, students and organizations.

"The annual barbecue and fair is an excellent opportunity for Manhattanites and K-Staters to help provide shelter for the homeless right here in our community," she said.

Earl Robinson, staff social worker for the shelter and a K-State graduate, said in addition to the food, there will be game booths for children and door prizes.

"The barbecue and fair is a nice way to take a break from studying for finals and get some fresh air," he said.

"On Sunday evenings the residence halls don't serve an evening meal. So this is an opportunity to get a good meal and to help out some people that are less fortunate at the same time," Robinson said.

"Besides, the weatherman has forecasted a beautiful day."

Evan Mapes, sophomore in preoptometry and vice president of Lambda Chi Alpha, said 23 fraternity members would be supporting the shelter's barbecue and fair as a part of Lambda Chi's annual "project weekend."

"The goal of project weekend is to give the Lambda Chis the opportunity to get involved in the community and to make a contribution in the form of community services projects," he said.

Robinson said that in addition to volunteers from K-State, many members of the community and members of the board of directors of the shelter will also be contributing their time.

Tickets for the fair are $3.25 in advance or $3.50 at the event. Children 12 and under and senior citizens 60 years and older will be admitted for $2.50. Drinks and desserts are extra.

Students speak on campus issues

Class encourages opinions

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

Nichols Hall Theatre echoed with the sounds of students speaking their minds Thursday.

The students, four members of the Public Speaking II class, spoke on acquaintance rape, the KSU Childcare Cooperative, Van Zile Hall and foreign graduate teaching assistants.

Darin Salts, freshman in accounting, and Shannon Wolken, junior in accounting, said there is a need for more acquaintance rape education at K-State. In delivering their speech, they cited statistics about the frequency of acquaintance rape and how women often blame themselves for what happened.

"The solution lies in education," Wolken said. "There is a freshman course offered on date rape, but it is not required."

Salts suggested encouraging people to go to lectures on rape as a possible solution to the problem.

"You can only expose (men) to the information. We're just trying to get people educated," Salts said.

Clay Patterson, sophomore in business management, and Dorinda Hill, junior in education, said students and the administration should support the KSU Childcare Cooperative.

"These people aren't asking for free child care. They're asking for child care at an affordable price," Patterson said.

The child care facility is becoming more inaccessible to many people due to the rising operating costs, Patterson said.

"The child care co-op can't operate on user fees alone," Hill said. "Without the co-op, 200 children will be without child care, and K-State will lose considerable drawing power for faculty and non-traditional students."

Dave Young, sophomore in journalism and mass communications and speech, said the renovation of Van Zile should be put on hold.

"I'm not saying we should tear Van Zile down. It has a lot of historical value," Young said. "But it is not needed as a residence hall."

Citing statistics, Young said it will cost between $2 million and $3 million to renovate Van Zile.

"The hall couldn't make its operating costs. The 120 people in Van Zile couldn't carry the salary of the director," he said.

Scott Cashman, sophomore in business finance, said there should be tougher language proficiency standards for foreign GTAs.

"We must provide better follow-up on our foreign GTAs," Cashman said.

"The drop-out rate is very high in classes with foreign GTAs. Many students don't even give them a chance because they've had prior experience with them."

To resolve this problem, Cashman proposed there be more follow-up on the foreign GTAs to make sure their English is as good as it was when they took their proficiency test.

Cashman also proposed that there be periodic tests given and that there be more courses offered through the Department of English to help these GTAs with their problem of communicating effectively with the students.

Race to feature concrete canoes

By The Collegian Staff

Canoes are supposed to float, but canoes made from concrete can make it a little difficult.

For the 15th year, the K-State chapter of Chi Epsilon, a civil engineering honorary, is sponsoring the Midwest Regional Concrete Canoe Races at 8 a.m. Saturday at the River Pond Area at Tuttle Creek State Park.

According to the rules, the canoe must be able to float, even when filled with water. Because the concrete is made from sand aggregate, water and cement, it must weigh less than water, said Andrew Watson, senior in civil engineering.

Water weighs 62.4 pounds per square foot and K-State's canoe entry weighs about 57 pounds per square foot, Watson said.

The canoe was designed and constructed by Ron Hirsch and Matt Myers, both seniors in civil engineering and chairmen of the concrete canoe race. The two-person canoe is made entirely of concrete and is reinforced with 20 gauge wire mesh, Watson said.

"We expect the races to be very successful, because they have been in the past," Watson said.

There will be 13 universities from as far away as South Dakota and Minnesota participating in the contest. Washington University in St. Louis was last year's winner.

The morning heats will determine the afternoon's finalists. The overall winner receives a traveling trophy and will go onto the national competition, Watson said.

Coed and faculty members will also race for fun.

The races are not Saturday's only competition, though.

The American Concrete Institute will judge the entries based on construction and design in which the winners receive a plaque, Watson said.

The races are part of the Mid-Continent Region of the American Society of Civil Engineers conference, said Watson, who is the conference's regional president.

Class to teach modern dance

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

Anyone interested in music, theater, art, athletics or any form of movement exploration could benefit from an improvisation workshop Monday, according to the director of dance.

Susan Warden, former K-State dance faculty member and current artistic director of Susan Warden Dancers in Kansas City, Kan., will offer classes in modern dance technique and movement improvisation. The technique class will be from 2:30 p.m. to 4 p.m., and the improvisation class will be from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. Both classes will be in Ahearn gym 301.

Warden "is one of the best teachers of improvisation in the area," said Luke Kahlich, director of dance and associate professor of speech.

The first class is not for beginners, Kahlich said, but for someone with dance experience because it is an intermediate level workshop.

The second class doesn't require technical ability because it is practice in the creative process, he said.

"It would be applicable to anyone interested in movement, not just dance," Kahlich said. "(People) in music, theater, art, athletics or anyone interested in movement exploration could benefit from the improvisation class."

The K-State dance program "tries to bring her (Warden) back at least once a year," he said.

"(Warden) has her own particular modern dance technique," Kahlich said. "It is a synthesis of what she has studied with other people and what she has discovered in her own work as an instructor and dancer."

The dance program tries to keep a guest artist program active throughout the year, he said.

Warden received her master's of fine arts in dance from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and two fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts.

She currently choreographs various dance classes around the Kansas City area and on the Mid-America Touring Network, Kahlich said.

The Mid-America Arts Alliance selects companies it will financially support to tour the 12-state Midwest region.

This year Susan Warden Dancers was the only company selected, he said.

Anyone wanting to participate in the dance classes needs to call 532-6887 to reserve a space in the class.

Computer system subject of seminar

By The Collegian Staff

The use of geographical information systems in geography will be addressed at 2:30 p.m. today in Dickens Hall 206.

Jeffery M. Young, senior consultant for Program Administration Group in Omaha, will deliver his lecture, "A Research Agenda for GIS Practitioners."

The GIS is a software computer system that stores information on specific details, such as soil quality, and previous landowners, said Duane Nellis, associate professor of geography. Its use is becoming an important part of resource management.

"The GIS allows a person to store several layers of data for a particular site for a variety of uses," he said.

K-State uses this type of system in the geography and landscape architecture departments and the Konza Prairie research program.

Young graduated cum laude from Lock Haven State College in Pennsylvania with a bachelor's degree and has a master's degree from Arizona State University.

Students' fashions to be featured

By The Collegian Staff

Students from the Apparel Design Collective will unveil their latest creations in high fashion at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Town Center.

This is the fifth year for the College of Human Ecology's Fashion Show. It will feature about 50 garment designs by students.

Hair stylists and make-up artists will be used to compliment the designs, which will be modeled on a runway in the mall's center court, said Janice Huck, professor of apparel design.

"This is is not a 'Becky HomeEcy' show," Huck said. "Most of the designs are presented by senior-level students."

About 80 pieces were pre-judged and narrowed to those that will be used in the show, Huck said.

The designs will be judged by a professional designer and a retailer. The students will compete for the Most Marketable, Best Design, Best Construction, Best Tailored, Best Collection and Student Choice Award.

The Student Choice Award is selected by the students, Huck said.

In addition to the awards, the show provides the students with a chance to make contacts with people in the apparel business and get publicity for their work, Huck said.

Tickets for the show are $4 and can be purchased at the department.

'Cats fall to WSU, 9-6; ISU weekend opponent

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

WICHITA — Thursday's episode of "In search of..." took place at Beck Stadium and Tyler Field, home of the Wichita State Shockers. Here we found K-State baseball coach Mike Clark desperately seeking a relief pitcher.

After the Wildcats tied the fourth-ranked Shockers 5-5 in the top of the sixth inning, WSU pounded K-State's relief pitching for four runs during its last three at bats to take a 9-6 win.

"Late in the ballgame, we didn't throw strikes," Clark said. "You've heard that over and over again this season, but we've got to find someone with enough guts to go out and challenge somebody late in the ballgame."

K-State tied the game by sending 10 batters to the plate in the sixth. Tony Braddock greeted eventual winner David Haas, 9-3, with a two-run single in that inning. Tony Collins followed with an RBI single, but Braddock was caught trying to make it home off a wild pitch to end the rally.

Wichita State's first baseman, Mike McDonald, opened the top of the seventh with a home run that bounced off the top of the centerfield fence. The shot came off reliever Scott Scoville, who lost his first game of the season and dropped to 3-1.

Wichita State opened the game with one run in the first and second innings, and added two in the third. In the decisive eighth inning, in which WSU added two insurance runs, the Shockers scored after Bill Schaffer had retired the first two batters.

The game had two unusual qualities. In the eighth inning, a bat — the mammal, not the wooden kind usually associated with baseball games — on the field delayed the game for about 10 minutes.

It was also a chance for Clark, who rarely comes out of the dugout to question a call, to practice his Billy Martin routines on the umpires. After the game, he questioned the umpire's changing the strike zone and a missed batter's interference call that allowed a shocker to steal second and eventually score.

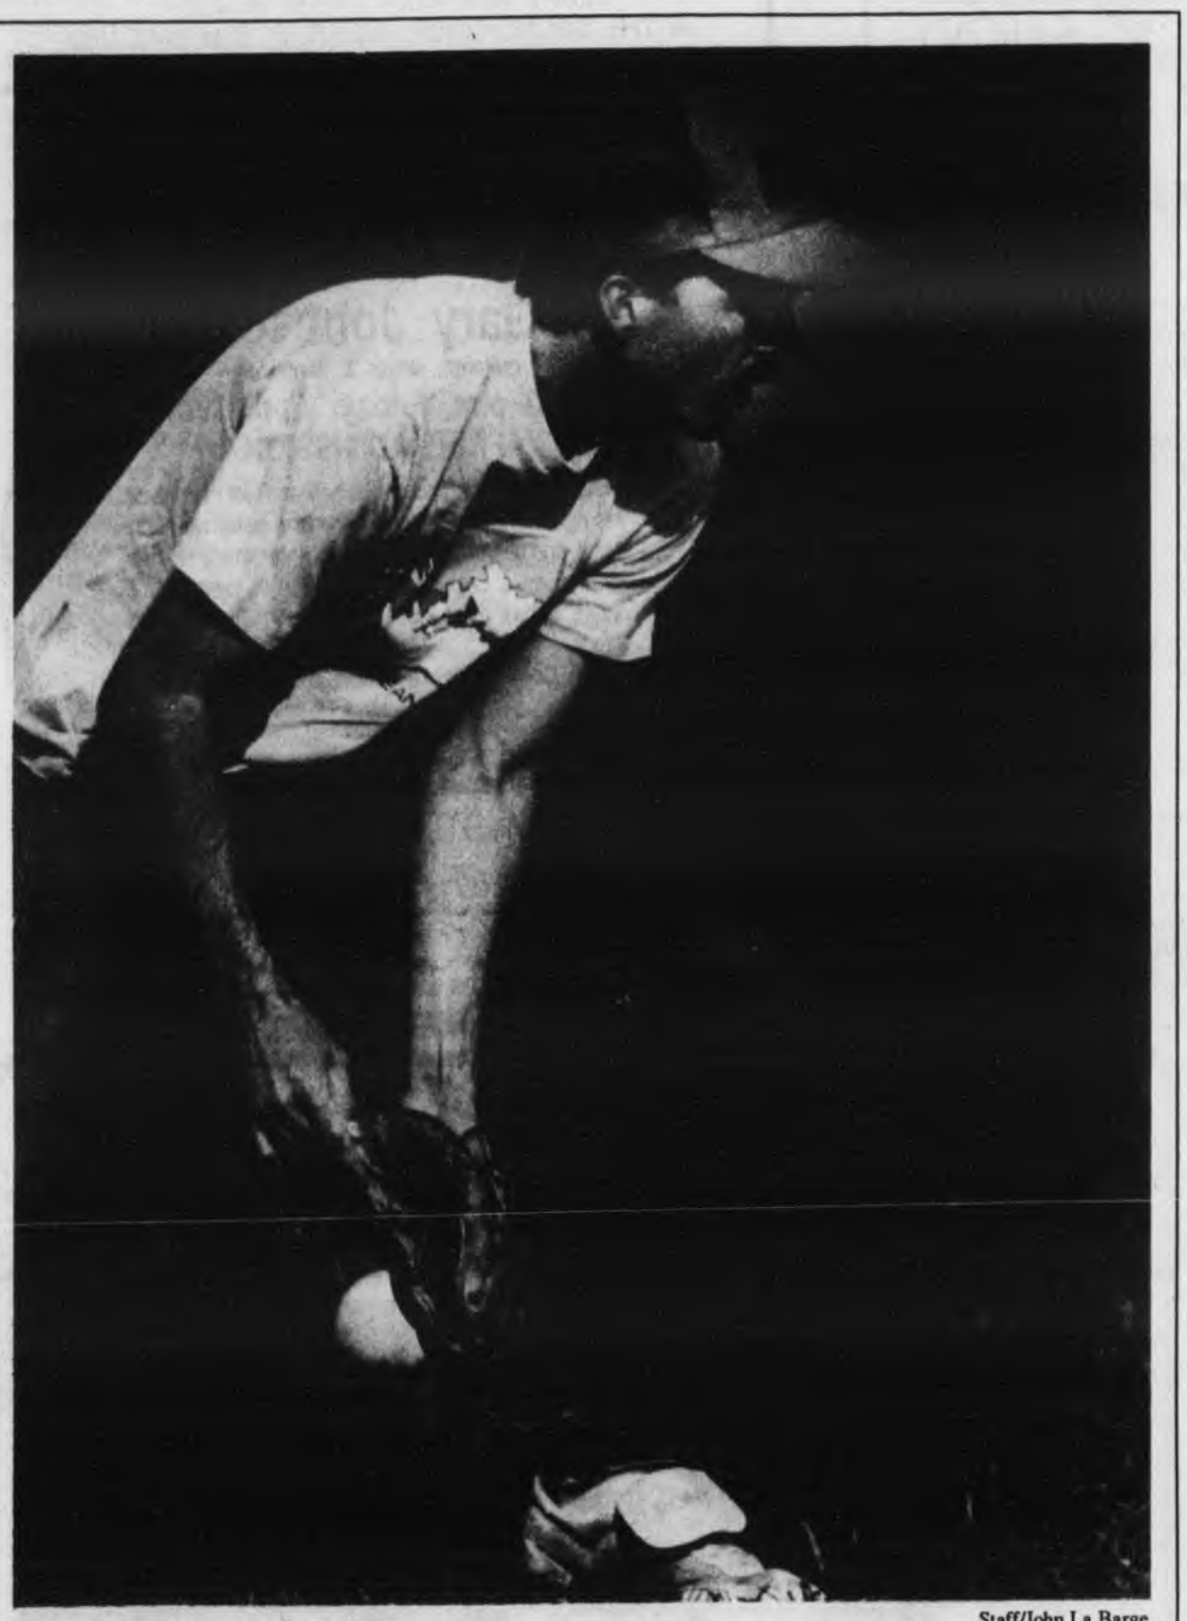
"I think the umpires get a little bit intimidated here," he said. "Wichita State beat us, the umpires didn't. But I have no idea what was going on behind home plate (with the umpire)."

Wichita State improved to 33-12 overall. K-State dropped to 27-18.

The Wildcats return home today to begin a four-game series with Big Eight Conference foe Iowa State. The series begins with a nine-inning game at 7 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

Clark said he is more concerned about his team's play than the Wildcats' opponent.

"We just have to take care of ourselves," Clark said. "It's an overworked cliche, but if we take care of ourselves and give ourselves an opportunity ... we usually are right there at the end of a ball game with a chance to win."



Iowa State, 22-22 overall and 4-8 in the Big Eight Conference, is one team K-State can't afford to make mistakes against. Of the 67 runs the Cyclones have scored in conference play, 25 have been unearned.

The Cyclones aren't prone to giving up unearned runs either. Fourth-year head coach Bobby Randall has his team fielding at a .950 clip.

"Bobby Randall's clubs are always excellent fielders. As for their pitchers, we don't know a lot about them," Clark said.

Hitting the opposition hasn't been a problem for the 'Cats this season. K-State has now gone 71 consecutive games without a shutout. The 'Cats have scored 10 or more runs 21 times, 15 or more runs six times and have broken the 20-run barrier three times.

And in a 16-7 win Wednesday against Washburn, K-State set a school record for runs scored in a season with 428. That surpassed the previous mark of 418 set by the 1985 squad.

'Shock' reaction to decision

Travis' resignation effective immediately

By The Collegian Staff

Reaction to athletic director Larry Travis' resignation, effective immediately, varied Thursday, but an underlying feeling of shock was expressed by many close to K-State's athletic department.

"I was very surprised," K-State basketball coach Lon Kruger said.

Kruger said he had not observed any signs that Travis' resignation was imminent, but that he realized Travis had been operating under a great deal of pressure.

"I think everyone knows that it's a difficult job making everything work (at the athletic department). I think that Larry has been operating under those pressures, but I'm basically very surprised," Kruger said.

Travis hired Kruger after the 1985-86 basketball season following the resignation of long-time K-State coach Jack Hartman.

Prior to coming to K-State, Kruger served as both athletic director and basketball coach at Pan American University. When asked if he considered himself a candidate for the position of athletic director here, Kruger said: "No, not all. I think that (coaching and being an athletic director) are two full-time positions. I've got enough trouble taking care of my own.

"I'm sure (KSU president Jon Wefald) has some ideas on the process and procedures that he has in mind (about selecting an athletic director) and I'm anxious to hear what that is," he added.

K-State football coach Stan Parrish, who Travis hired in 1986, expressed concern over Travis' decision to leave the University.

"Anyone with any sense at all would be concerned by something like this," he said. "The person that hired me is no longer in charge of our athletic program. We've lost a guy who has given us undying support through some very trying times.

"Larry is a friend, and I'm going to keep from saying too much until I've heard the whole story. I'm not really sure I want to, though."

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark, who Travis hired in 1986, hoped that K-State would be able to replace Travis with someone just as capable.

"He's the guy that hired me and gave me this opportunity. I feel like I'm losing a friend," Clark said. "I wish him the best of luck and I just hope we can replace Larry with someone of equal capabilities so we can continue to build our programs."

K-State golf coach Rob Sedorcek, who also assumed his duties in 1986, said: "I'm kind of shocked. But I can't really say I'm surprised. It almost seemed like something would be coming about."

Sedorcek referred to Kruger's decision to remain at K-State after it had been reported he had accepted the head coaching job at Texas and the role Travis may have played in that decision.

Sedorcek said he "has never had any problems with (Travis.) The years that I've been here, (golf) has been one of the few non-revenue sports to see a budget increase."

Track team at two meets

From Wire Reports

K-State's track and field teams will be going in different directions this weekend as they compete in two meets. Part of the team will be participating in the prestigious Drake Relays, while the remainder of the squad will be competing at the Southwestern Relays.

Action at the Drake Relays is already underway. K-State sophomore Steve Henson competed in the decathlon, finishing seventh while winning the high jump and javelin.

Thursday, Alysun Deckert was a top-10 finisher, as she competed in the 10,000-meter run. Deckert finished the race in 36:24.86.

The rest of the competition starts today and continues through Saturday.

Those competing in the Southwestern Relays will be competing on Saturday only. Things get underway in Winfield at 12:30 p.m. with the field events. The running events are scheduled to start at 2:45 p.m. with the preliminaries in the hurdles.

"The bottom line is that we have to have some national qualifiers this weekend," Coach John Capriotti said. "We already have five qualified in six events, but we are hoping to pick up some more distance runners this weekend. They haven't been able to perform at their best with the weather conditions we've had."

Athletes participating in the Drake meet include Pat Allen, who qualified for nationals and set a new K-State record in the javelin last week with a throw of 228-6. The Wildcats will sport two relay squads — the 4x100 relay and the sprint medley relay. Senior Anne Stadler, who was the lone K-State first-place finisher at the Kansas Relays, will be on a shorter course this weekend as she runs in the 1,500 meters.

Junior Kim Kilpatrick will be the first to compete today as the 400-meter hurdle preliminaries get underway at 8:35 a.m.

About 30 athletes will be traveling to the Southwestern Relays. The team is comprised mostly of younger athletes. Kelly Williams will be competing after clearing 6-9¼ at KU last weekend. Several of the younger spring and mid-distance runners will also run at Winfield.

Saga one of 'loyalty, lip service, lies, losing'

Commentary

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

Of loyalty, lip service, lies and losing.

The resignation Thursday of K-State athletic director Larry Travis is sure to be the subject of conversation for many days, weeks and months to come.

It's really a bit ironic, don't you think, that a man who just one month ago appeared totally happy with the direction his program was headed is now looking for work — work anywhere but the university he seemed so proud to be working for.

The rumors surrounding Travis' decision are enough to keep students and staff talking from now until the end of the semester, so I thought we might explore a couple of the most plausible of these rumors and let you draw your own conclusions.

■ The first rumor, let's call it the Travis-tells-the-Wefer-give-me-what-I-want-or-I'm-outta-here idea — consists of an ultimatum by a distraught athletic director and a hearty laugh in his general direction by the administration.

Let's say Travis, upset because he's been doing the job of three people since assistant athletic directors Steve Miller and Lee Moon left K-State, finally cracked and approached President Jon Wefald and other administrators with a list of demands that he wanted to have met if he were to remain as athletic director.

Taking the idea one step further, let's suppose that Travis gave Wefald and the others a simple ultimatum: "Give me what I want financially and in the form of solid verbal backing, or I'm going to seek employment elsewhere."

Add to that the possibility that those in Anderson were — and may still be — disenchanted with the job being done by football coach Stan Parrish (one of Travis' closest friends), and you've got a situation as volatile as a cat fight. (Pardon the pun.)

Let's examine the rumor or idea with a look at some cold, hard facts. Travis has, indeed, been doing the work of three people since Miller left in the spring of 1987 and Moon left earlier this year. His job has undoubtedly become even tougher with no one around to help him get it done.

It's also true that the administration gave little support, other than lip service, when the athletic department offered up the athletic fee last year as a way for raising additional funds for non-revenue sports. A bit more support, verbal and otherwise, from Anderson would be welcome. It's great watching Wefald shoot baskets and throw passes, but how about giving a speech on the necessity of the athletic fee in supporting our non-revenue sports.

■ The second rumor or idea — let's call this one the Travis-is-a-bum-who-pisses-off-everyone-in-sight-except-his-wife-kids-and-Stan-Parrish rumor — is a bit more complicated.

Let's begin at the beginning. When Travis took the job as AD, the first person to have his toes stepped on by the new boss — rather well I might add — was then-basketball coach Jack Hartman, an absolute god to K-Staters everywhere. Let's say Hartman, a close personal friend of Travis' predecessor Dick Towers, just finally couldn't take working for Travis and resigned.

Forget the heart attack Hartman suffered just prior to his resignation, the thoughts that Jack couldn't get it done anymore, and the notions that his ideas were outdated and impossible to implement in today's college game. Let's just get down and dirty — Jack Hartman disliked Travis with a passion and would rather have worked for Atilla the Hun. That's why he resigned ... or so the rumor goes.

Let's also assume that Travis, after getting a great deal of pressure from Anderson Hall and influential alums, hired Lon Kruger against his own best instincts in an attempt to appease those upset that he had "forced" Hartman out. Let's say former Georgia Tech assistant George Felton was Travis' first choice, but that he was forced to take Kruger or be in danger of losing his job.

A few other coaches whom Travis hired may also be here because of their ties to the University or their connections with Travis' right-hand men, not because Travis wanted them here. Rob Sedorcek, the golf coach, played here, was young and probably wouldn't have turned anyone down. John Capriotti, the track and cross country coach, coached under Miller and was handpicked by Miller for the job. Only Mike Clark was chosen by Travis alone, so the rumor goes, and Moon may well have made that decision independent of Travis.

Let's take this rumor and start the branches growing and see where we end up.

Travis, so the rumor goes, is and was a "football" man, obsessed with the efforts of Parrish and his troops to

Golfers playing in Wisconsin

K-State's men's golf team is in Lake Geneva, Wis., today and Saturday competing in the 2nd Annual Midwestern Invitational at the Par 72, 6,306-yard Abbey Springs Country Club.

Chris Gomez, Troy Keller, Jeff Sedorcek, Daran Neuschafer and John Shields will comprise K-State's team.

"There's no question that it's a good field. It will be one of our toughest fields this year," Coach Rob Sedorcek said. "Hopefully, we will better last year's finish at this tournament (10th of 14 teams).

"We'd like to get in the top half. That would be a good finish for us. We're capable of that. We've been playing well lately."

Tennis challenge this weekend

The "KSU Tennis Challenge" will take place Saturday and Sunday at the Washburn Complex Tennis Courts to benefit the women's tennis scholarship program.

Coach Steve Bietau, his staff and members of K-State's ICAT student organization will play tennis for 24 straight hours from noon Saturday until noon Sunday.

Pledges will be accepted to play any of the marathon participants or any of several "celebrity" participants.

The celebrity competitors from K-State include President Jon Wefald, football coach Stan Parrish, Wildcat basketball coach Lon Kruger and Lady Cat basketball coach Matilda Mossman.

Pig roast to honor success

K-State students, ICAT and the athletic department will have much to celebrate when the three will get together for a post-season pig roast.

The roast, which is sponsored by ICAT and which will be held Sunday from 4 to 6 p.m. on the northwest corner of the City Park, will celebrate the successes of K-State's athletic programs.

Cinco De Mayo

Raoul's Celebration

May 5, 6 & 7th, 1988

CINCO DE MAYO

Parades, festivals, and dances mark the anniversary of the battle of Puebla in which Mexican troops defeated invading French forces. Festive, upbeat promotions tie in with this traditionally colorful day.

And what better way to celebrate Cinco de Mayo than eating out Mexican. Raoul's Escondido is one of west side's favorites.

And don't forget barbecuing. After all, May is also National Barbecue Month. We are now offering smoked meats. See our ad on "Pig On The Run."

Call to Prayer and Solidarity

"Crucifixion" by Namibian Artist John Mudeyaje

With the People of Namibia

Prayer and Action for Namibia

The suffering of the Namibian people has been intense for more than 100 years under colonial rule, first under the Germans and now under the illegal occupation of South Africa. 1988 marks the tenth anniversary of a time of great hope and a tragedy of great sorrow.

In 1978 U.N. Security Council Resolution 435 called for South African withdrawl, UN supervised elections and independence for Namibia. However, on May 4, 1978, South African forces attacked a Namibian refugee camp in Angola called Kassinga, killing over 600 people-mostly women and children.

Today, ten years after the Kassinga Massacre, South Africa continues its war, illegal occupation and reign of terror over the Namibian people. In 1988 South Africa, backed by U.S. foreign policy, still refuses to implement UN Res. 435.

The Christian Church of Namibia, representing more than 75% of the population, plays a courageous role in the struggle for freedom. As a result, church leaders are detained, tortured and killed; church buildings, offices, printing presses and schools are bombed; worship services are disrupted by soldiers; worshippers are killed by landmines on their way to church. And yet they continue to hope.

"When one member of the family suffers, all suffer."
1 Cor. 12

Let us therefore join with Namibians by working with them for freedon and justice.

the detriment of the rest of the overall athletic program. By concentrating so much on a program that has produced two wins in two years, Travis came under serious fire as to his priorities.

Let's also hypothesize that Travis failed to give Parrish the necessary "Win or you're gone" ultimatum supposedly requested by those in Anderson Hall. If the rumor is true and Travis didn't give Parrish the reprimand the administrators wanted, there was reason enough for those administrators to force him out.

But that's not the whole story. Let's also assume that Kruger, a man almost as popular as Hartman, was upset at how his former coach was being treated and how he was being treated. Add to that idea the cold, hard reality that Kruger put great teams on the floor in his first two years as head coach, and Kruger suddenly becomes a viable "big name player" in this game in which power brokers lurk behind every corner.

Let's say that Kruger, just as fed up with Travis as his former coach had become, went to Texas following the season, accepted the job, and finally felt he was rid of Travis once and for all. Let's also say that with this knowledge becoming public, K-State alums, and Hartman in particular, got on the phone with those in Anderson and said, "You better keep Lon here or you've lost our support."

Let's say that then Wefald and Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, got into the game and pleaded with Lon to remain at K-State, offering him all but the moon to remain. Let's say that in the process, power-broker Kruger said to Wefald, "Either Travis goes or I go," and Wefald, realizing that alumni butter his bread, decided Travis was the odd man out.

Or, let's say that Wefald said, "We're going to pay Lon $X, and if you don't like it, and you're upset at where the money's being taken from, leave." Either way Travis is the loser.

■ Now for the combination idea I prefer — let's call it the Travis-did-piss-off-Hartman-and-Kruger-and-almost-everyone-else-but-Parrish-and-Wefer-finally-got-tired-of-him-and-the-whole-deal — rumor. I believe, though I may be wrong, that Travis began bleeding to death the day Hartman resigned.

By allowing one of the most beloved men in K-State history to walk away from a job he so dearly loved, Travis sent out a signal that this was his department and that he'd run it as he damned well pleased.

By hiring Kruger, Travis bent to the alumni pressure, but didn't feel he was breaking. He was wrong, dead wrong. Once Kruger had success, he gained leverage and Travis gained a huge thorn in his side.

Kruger, possibly second only to Hartman in the eyes of K-Staters, could do no wrong, and that made it even tougher on Travis. When Miller and Moon left — possibly sensing that they'd all be out of work because Travis was captaining a ship that had no men on it who would work for him — Travis was left alone to twist in the wind.

Kruger's decision to go to Texas, and the ultimatum that no doubt followed — was the straw that broke the proverbial camel's back. Simply put, Kruger got his way, Hartman got his revenge and Wefald got rid of his major remaining headache.

All in all, it spelled the end of Larry Travis as K-State athletic director. Isn't it funny that Kruger, Miller and Hartman are all being mentioned as his possible successor. All would be great candidates, and one would hope that they could inspire the loyalty in their employees that Travis could seemingly inspire only in Parrish.

If the new athletic director can't do that, he'll be destined to fail.

And the lies, losing and lip service will continue.

Travis

new people for the department."

Travis said he thinks he has accomplished what he set out to do when he was hired.

"I feel very good about what we've accomplished here," he said. "I hope people don't think that (K-State has internal problems because of my resignation). I hope that people perceive — and I think they do — nationally that our department has made tremendous strides.

"Right now, we have pretty good respect amongst the athletic community for what we've done, not only in our revenue programs but also in our non-revenue programs, academics, drug education program and the total person program."

Travis' tenure at K-State has been subject to question twice before, with the University administration making a concerted effort to keep him at K-State. During the 1986-87 school year, he was offered the athletic directorship at the University of Florida. Last semester, he was offered that same position at Georgia Tech.

"If you go all the way back to when he interviewed for the job at the University of Florida, we made efforts to keep him here," Wefald said. "We did the same thing with Georgia Tech, but I think when someone wants to move on, you can't change that.

"We wish him well."

Wefald said that no interim athletic director will be named to replace Travis. He said the administration will utilize the "team concept" approach until a new athletic director is hired.

"We're going to have a team approach. We will be working with all the coaches," Wefald said. "It isn't unusual in this type of situation. There's only a couple weeks of school left."

Wefald said a search committee will be named within the next 10 days, and after that "we'll move very quickly" to hire a new athletic director.

Wefald said he had no preconceived candidates for the position.

Travis came to K-State after serving as an assistant athletic director at Georgia Tech from 1980-85.

speech, but if it is obscene, the person doesn't have the freedom of speech."

"I personally would not be offended by it, but I'm only one member of the community," Urban said.

"Language has to be used in a shocking fashion, sometimes in an artistic setting," Schiappa said. "I don't think she could have made her point by saying 'F-star-star-star.'

"I don't think it ought to be regulated. It's a fairly serious and dangerous application of the rule."

The rule is part of the Union Governing Board's Policy No. B-12, which places regulations on posters and other promotional material in the Union. The policy states that "each poster shall not violate the common standards of decency."

The assistant director of the Union, Jack Connaughton, is the person who refused Dohl's poster. He was not available for comment.

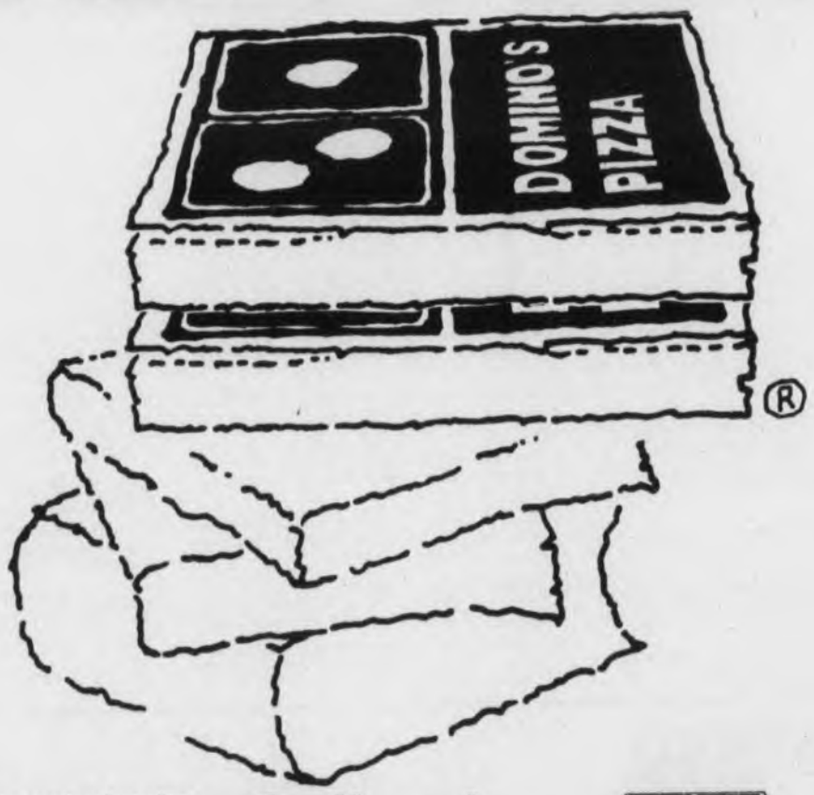
Jack Sills, director of the Union, said he "had no problem with the decision (Connaughton) made."

Sills said it did not matter if it were the University or the Manhattan community. He said the decision would have been applicable in either case.

"I have trouble placing that as an artistic. ...I don't see how that is artistic," Sills said after he saw the flier.

When informed of the flier's placement in Nichols Hall, Sills said, "I have some concern as to why it was, but that is not my area to make decisions."

Sills said Dohl could appeal the decision to the Union Governing Board, which is responsible for setting the standards.



Dohl also registered with the Student Governing Services Office, located on the ground floor of the Union, to post her fliers on the triangular boards on campus. She posted the fliers on campus Wednesday.

The Student Governing Services Office has a list of general campus regulations which it uses to determine the eligibility of literature and notices posted on campus. This list is separate from the Union regulations.

According to Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities, the Student Governing Association regulations, which were taken from an advertising textbook, include the statement, "Advertising shall be free of statements, illustrations or implications which are libelous or obscene."

A violation of any of the SGA regulations will result in appearance before the student judicial board.

Irish Republican Army kills three soldiers

Others injured in two separate attacks

By The Associated Press

NIEUWBERGEN, Netherlands — Three British soldiers were killed Sunday and three were injured when Irish Republican Army terrorists sprayed one car with machine-gun fire and blew up another in separate attacks.

The IRA claimed responsibility for both attacks in a statement delivered to media in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

"We have a simple message for (Prime Minister Margaret) Thatcher — disengage from Ireland and there will be peace. If not, there will be no haven for your military personnel and you will regularly be at airports awaiting your dead," it said.

The 1:30 a.m. car bomb tore apart a vehicle as it left the parking lot of a discotheque frequented by British troops in Nieuwbergen, a country town on the West German-Dutch border. Two of the three Royal Air Force men inside were killed immediately. The third was admitted to the intensive care ward of a local hospital. His condition was not immediately known.

"It was like a plane going through the sound barrier," said Piet Hubbers, who heard the blast from his home five miles away.

"The car was already on fire. Twenty yards away, a boy (soldier) was lying all covered in blood," said another witness, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"The bodies were in such condition that they could not immediately be identified," police spokesman Louis Steens said.

An hour earlier, in the border community of Roermond about 30 miles away, gunmen opened fire on three British air force men who had just gotten into their car after leaving a cafe, district prosecutor Rolph Gonsalves told reporters.

"The car was already on fire. Twenty yards away, a boy (soldier) was lying all covered in blood."

—anonymous witness

They were fired on from very close range, probably with automatic weapons, he said.

Senior Aircraftsman Ian Shinner, 20, died at the scene. Another was in serious condition at a local hospital and a third was treated for minor shoulder injuries. The injured were not identified.

They were the first IRA attacks in nearly 10 years in the Netherlands. Authorities have attributed the lack of violence to the nation's apparent reputation as a haven for IRA activists.

"We of course have to consider that it could be the start of a new series of attacks," Gonsalves said.

The last IRA attack here was March 22, 1979, when British Ambassador Richard Sykes was assassinated outside his home in The Hague.

The latest victims were all based in West Germany and off duty at the time of the attacks. They were in the Netherlands to take part in local festivities marking the 50th birthday of Dutch Queen Beatrix.

Both targeted cars had British license plates.

The IRA statement of responsibility was signed with the pseudonym "P. O'Neil, Republican Publicity Bureau in Dublin," a name the IRA uses in such announcements.

British security forces are the main targets of the IRA, the mainly Roman Catholic guerrilla group fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland and unite the predominantly Protestant province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Republic of Ireland.

There are several British military installations along the Dutch-West German border.

Sectarian and political violence has taken about 2,600 lives since it flared in Northern Ireland in 1969. The deaths include 819 members of the British security forces.

Parking problem studied

By The Collegian Staff

University officials have hired a private company to complete a $67,000 evaluation of the campus' parking problems and traffic flow.

The company, Barton-Ashman Associates Inc., Evanston, Ill., is expected to complete a campus parking utilization study by Sept. 9, said John Devore, chairman of the Council of Traffic, Parking and Police Operations and assistant professor in electrical and computer engineering.

The study of the campus' traffic flow and parking problems was suggested by a Faculty Senate ad hoc parking committee.

Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning and chairman of the committee, said the company is an engineering firm that specializes in parking and traffic flow problems.

Barton-Ashman will be looking at existing parking, traffic circulation, parking costs and parking alternatives. Members of the firm will give their recommendations to the Traffic and Parking Study Review Committee.

Alternatives the company members are considering include a multi-story parking structure and closing 17th Street and Mid-Campus Drive.

"Every time parking comes up, these suggestions come up, too," Garvin said. "We would like to get the opinion of someone outside the University.

"We have relatively little real estate for

May Day boycott ended; thousands honor workers

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Western ambassadors on Sunday ended a boycott of May Day ceremonies prompted by the 1979 Soviet military drive into Afghanistan and saw a Red Square parade strikingly free of anti-American rhetoric.

In other parts of the world, thousands of people attended rallies and parades on the day honoring the workers of the world.

Security forces clashed with May Day demonstrators in Poland, the Philippines, and Chile, and arrests were reported in East Berlin and Turkey.

In the Soviet capital, Mikhail S. Gorbachev led 11 other Politburo members onto the mausoleum containing the body of Vladimir I. Lenin to view the May Day festivities.

Among those in attendance was party ideologue Yegor K. Ligachev, who appeared to try to debunk rumors that he had been demoted by clasping his hands together and shaking them vigorously as he acknowledged the crowd.

For two hours, hundreds of thousands of Muscovites toting banners extolling "perestroika" (economic reconstruction), "glasnost" (openness) and other Communist Party programs marched past the Kremlin leadership and across sun-dappled Red Square.

One sign called for good superpower relations and depicted a handshake, the U.S. and Soviet flags, and the inscription "Da!" (Yes). In past years, some May Day floats denounced the United States.

On a granite platform reserved for diplomats and other VIPs, Jack Matlock made the first May Day appearance by a U.S. ambassador since the Soviets intervened in Afghanistan to aid a pro-Moscow government.

"I'm here today first of all because it is not a military-oriented holiday, and because agreements have been signed for the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan," Matlock said. "Also, our president is due in less than a month" for his fourth summit meeting with Gorbachev.

Gorbachev's wife, Raisa, told reporters that she looks forward to playing host to the Reagans.

"We await a new meeting and new acquaintances," she said, smiling and clasping a bouquet of red carnations.

The West German envoy, Andreas Meyer-Landrut, said it was the first time ambassadors from all 12 Common Market countries attended May Day festivities since 1979. In past years, some embassies had sent lesser-ranking diplomats.

Violence was reported at May Day ceremonies in several

'Dream' plan proposed

Museum, fountains included

By Brian Hummell
Collegian Reporter

Imagine K-State's campus with a reflecting pool, multi-level parking garages, an art museum and two fountains.

The University's "dream" plan includes all of these things and more, said Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning.

"A long-range plan is what you do when you don't have anything better to do," Garvin said. The plan was drawn up in December.

"What we try to do is come up with the highest-quality product we can, so that in the stages of implementation we have something of sufficient quality," Garvin said. "It's a collective wish list of all the deans."

The department has created a long-range, 30-year plan that shows the addition and removal of current structures and the location of possible new buildings on campus.

The plan is in its earliest stages and has not received approval at any level, Garvin said.

It includes additions to 14 buildings and the construction of 13 new buildings. In addition, parts of Seaton and Waters halls and all of Hollis House and Memorial Stadium would be removed. The power plant would also be relocated.

Memorial Stadium would be razed to accommodate an art museum and three new buildings. Hollis House would be razed to accommodate the expansion of Throckmorton Hall.

"This provides a plan for an orderly way of developing the campus," Garvin said.

He said Lafene Student Health Center is an example of poor planning. Accessibility of Lafene is not adequate for students and ambulance services.

Also, the plan would raise the number of parking spaces from the current total of 7,900 spaces to 12,000. The plan also calls for some underground and multi-level parking facilities.

"Of course, those are the most expensive, but they are in the right place," Garvin said. Two of the proposed multi-level parking facilities are near the Union and Farrell Library.

Garvin said he has shown the long-range plan to four campus groups and is asking the college deans for time to present the plan to them in the fall.

The project is part of a 30-year capital improvement schedule. However, individual projects are portions of the five-year capital improvement schedule. These five-year schedules will be presented to the Board of Regents for approval in June.

The projected cost for the next five-year schedule is $61.6 million. Included in the plan is a renovation and addition to Calvin Hall and six other projects.

Garvin said the plan is not final, because additions and corrections are still being made. After the plan is given to the regents, he said, more changes will probably have to be made.

Ethnic violence causes deaths

KARACHI, Pakistan — Five people were killed and 23 were injured in ethnic violence in a working class neighborhood of this port city, reports said Sunday.

The official English language daily, the Pakistan Times, said three people died Sunday. Karachi's Dawn newspaper said two other people died late Saturday from injuries sustained in the violence.

Officials were unavailable for comment, and government offices were closed in observance of the May 1 holiday.

The trouble started Friday night when a traffic accident in western Karachi led to rioting and gunfire between Pathan youths, who trace their roots to northern Pakistan, and Mohajirs, who immigrated from India.

Karachi, Pakistan's largest city with a population of 7 million, has been a hotbed of ethnic violence in recent years.

Hundreds were killed in November and December 1986 when Pathans and Mohajirs battled in the streets of several neighborhoods.

New train breaks speed record

WUERZBURG, West Germany — A prototype of a new locomotive broke the world speed record for trains Sunday, rail officials said.

The West German train clocked a top speed of 243 mph on a new track between Hanover and Wuerzburg.

The speed beat the world record of 228 mph set in 1981 by France's High-Speed Train.

The new West German train is part of a program to provide faster service between the nation's major cities.

Pilot lucky to land jet safely

KAHULUI, Hawaii — The pilot of an Aloha Airlines jetliner that blew open at 24,000 feet landed safely even though he had lost power in one engine and had no indication the nose wheel was down, a federal investigator said.

The pilot also was not able to lower the plane's flaps, used to slow the craft, into normal landing position, so he touched down at Kahului Airport at a speed of about 195 mph and braked heavily, investigator Joseph Nall said late Saturday. Normal landing speed is 155 mph, he added.

The plane, with 89 passengers, five crew members and an air traffic controller aboard, was on an inter-island hop from Hilo to Honolulu Thursday when 20 feet of its upper fuselage peeled away explosively.

Flight attendant Clarabelle Lansing, 57, apparently was sucked from the cabin to her death and 61 others were injured.

Seven passengers remained at Maui Memorial Hospital Sunday in stable condition with burns and lacerations, nursing supervisor Beverly Perreira said.

Meanwhile Sunday, the Coast Guard sent a helicopter to search for the missing chunk of fuselage in waters off the south and southwest coast of Maui, Coast Guard spokesman Dan Waldschmidt said.

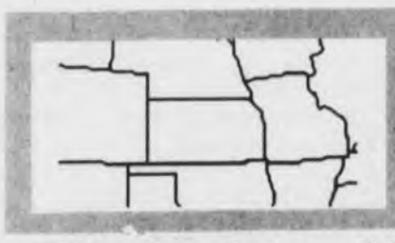
More arms sales sought abroad

NEW YORK — The Reagan administration wants to increase arms sales abroad by $3.3 billion this year to more than $15 billion, according to a published report.

The New York Times reported in today's editions that a confidential report from the State Department to Congress lists potential sales to 33 countries, including $3.6 billion of arms to Israel, $3.3 billion to South Korea and $2.7 billion to Egypt.

The request gives more attention to the Persian Gulf region than requests of previous years, the Times said. The administration asked for advanced arms and equipment for Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates to counter threats from Iran, the newspaper said.



The president is required by law to submit an arms sale proposal to Congress each year, but the master list has rarely become public.

Lotto award now $8.5 million

DES MOINES, Iowa — A record Lotto America jackpot will go to $8.5 million for next Saturday night's drawing because no one picked all seven numbers in the latest drawing, a spokesman of the Iowa-based game said Sunday.

That's the most money ever offered in any Iowa lotto or lottery game and the highest jackpot reached in the multi-state game that had its first drawing on Feb. 13.

A check of Lotto America computers revealed that no one purchased a ticket for the numbers picked in Saturday night's televised drawing for a $7.34 million jackpot, said spokesman Bret Voorhees. The winning numbers were: 1, 3, 17, 19, 27, 29 and 34.

Elderly sisters killed in collision

GEARY, Okla. — Two elderly sisters were killed and two others were injured Sunday afternoon when their car and another vehicle collided on U.S. 270 near Geary in Blaine County, the Oklahoma Highway Patrol reported.

They were identified as Lizzie Duggan, 79, of Watonga, who was listed as the driver, and Juverna J. Shirley, 88, of Emporia. Duggan was dead on arrival at a Watonga hospital and Shirley, who was pinned in the wreckage for 43 minutes, was dead at the scene, troopers said.

Two other sisters, Stella A. Shirley, 74, of Oklahoma City and Marie V. Stohr, 80, of Cuba, N.M., were taken to a Watonga hospital and then airlifted to Mercy Hospital in Oklahoma City, the patrol said.

Stella Shirley was listed in critical condition and Stohr in stable condition.

Oil prices may decrease

By The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC oil ministers early Monday suspended for a month their efforts to agree on a proposed token cut in oil production, raising prospects of a fresh drop in oil prices.

Ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries said they would reconvene June 8 to discuss the proposed reductions in output.

Several ministers expressed disappointment at the breakdown of negotiations, which they viewed as a chance to shore up oil prices and open a new avenue in cooperation with non-OPEC producers who had proposed the production cuts.

"I would be much happier if we could have agreed on cuts now," said Libyan oil minister Fawzi Shakshuki.

Analysts maintained over the weekend that an OPEC failure to agree on production cuts almost certainly would send oil prices tumbling when world markets opened later Monday.

The production cutting proposal was aimed at raising prices to OPEC's target of $18 a barrel, from the current range of $14 to $16, by tightening supplies.

Former student researches AIDS

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

Although it might seem like shooting in the dark to some people, trying to find a target to attack the AIDS virus has become the work of former K-State student Joseph Hughes.

Hughes, senior research virologist at Merck Sharp and Dohme Pharmaceutical Co., West Point, Pa., returned to Manhattan to give two lectures on his work. He spoke Friday at a public lecture in Ackert Hall, and was the keynote speaker at a meeting of the Cancer Research and Education Advisory Council's annual meeting Saturday morning in the Union.

Hughes spoke on "Prospects for the Cure and Prevention of the AIDS Virus."

He said that while a totally effective treatment for the disease may still be several years from reaching the market, he is optimistic about the work that has been done so far.

"We do have some very interesting chemicals that will probably come out sometime in the near future," Hughes said. "They look very potent and very exciting."

Hughes said his company has looked at more than 3,000 chemicals so far in the search for a treatment. The problem, however, is finding a chemical that is specific enough to attack the human immunodeficiency virus, which causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome, but will not interfere with the rest of the body's systems, he said.

The virus attacks its victims by attaching itself to cells in the immune system, called T-4 helper lymphocytes, disrupting their ability to direct the system's immune responses. Hughes said that while there are chemicals that can block the virus' ability to bind to the T-4 cells, they also prevent the immune system from recognizing any other invading virus and stopping it. The results of these chemicals would be the same as infecting the person with AIDS.

These binding structures on the virus are the main targets of the battle, Hughes said. If specific structures can be identified, a chemical inhibitor can be developed that would affect only the virus, leaving the immune system free to operate normally.

Hughes also said HIV has the ability to replicate itself within the cells because it is able to integrate with RNA in the cell, forming DNA, the genetic core of a new cell. Because of this ability, Hughes said there may never be a cure for a person infected with HIV.

The work on a vaccine has been slowed because of the danger of handling the virus. Hughes said that with previous vaccines, live or dead virus were used to develop an immune response.

Subleasing a summer alternative

By The Collegian Staff

For many students, summer means leaving Manhattan for home and leaving an apartment lease that still has time on it.

As an alternative to paying rent on an empty apartment, many students decide to sublease their apartments.

Subleasing occurs when the primary lease between a tenant and landlord cannot be fulfilled by the tenant, so the original tenant finds a new tenant to take on the responsibility of the lease.

The agreement must be approved by the landlord.

"The original tenant is still responsible under a sublease agreement," said Dianne Urban, student's attorney. This means those tenants can be held liable for any damage which might occur.

Original tenants also have avenues of protection against damages caused by those subleasing.

"The original tenant can sue the subleasee to recover damages entered against the original tenant," Urban said.

People who enter into lease agreements with others as co-leasees are jointly and separately liable, she said. This means that if one of the leasees does damage but cannot pay for it, the other leasees can be held responsible.

Travis' replacement must be named soon

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is once again without a leader.

Larry Travis' announcement Thursday that he is resigning effective immediately was considered an unexpected surprise by many. However, others have said they saw it coming.

And to think about it, who wouldn't have expected his departure sometime soon?

Travis was the head of a department filled with idols. The players are big name and the coaches' names are even bigger. He was expected to sit back and act like a benevolent uncle who brought the player and coach together — nothing more.

Athletic directors aren't allowed to tread on the tenuous bond that is formed between players and their coaches. If they do, they're bound to hear about it from someone along the chain of command.

But two additional things made Travis' job even tougher.

For a start, he didn't have an assistant. Running such a large department without one would be a strain on anyone.

Also, K-State is the smallest Big Eight Conference school. Attracting — and keeping — quality personnel is difficult when you're constantly considered an underdog.

This problem, which plagued Travis, will be the same to plague the search committee for his successor. The candidates are out there. They just need to be shown the large base of support and respectability that Travis, in part, created and has left behind.

The department's tradition is long standing, but its future can only be bright if the committee succeeds in finding someone willing to take on an underdog. And that committee must act quickly.

If a department the size of the athletic department is left without a leader too long, only confusion can result.

And with the opening of Bramlage Coliseum, the new basketball ticket sales policy and the beginning of another season of sports, confusion is something that cannot and should not be allowed.

Union should change definition of obscenity

The Collegian used The Word on the front page of its Friday edition. The "f-word."

A student wanted to display The Word — the nastiest word in the English language — on a poster in the Union advertising a play she had written for her master's thesis. The poster was denied.

The newspaper ran The Word, uncensored, in a story about the poster.

The person who made the poster felt justified in using The Word as an exercise of free speech.

The Union authorities contended that in that instance, exercising freedom of speech violates established community standards. They felt justified in censoring the poster.

Maybe "censor" is too harsh of a word for such a valuable service. Perhaps it should be described as "protecting the community by prohibiting the introduction of naughty ideas."

Eugene "Bull" Connor, the former police chief of Birmingham, Ala., would probably agree with that. He tried to keep Martin Luther King Jr. from spreading his vulgar ideas about equal rights.

King's platform was contrary to the established standards of many Southern communities. Connor became a symbol of resistance to the civil rights movement.

He tried to protect the citizens of his town from it, much in the same way that the Union wanted to protect students from The Word.

Whether or not the white citizens of the South wanted to hear King's message is not in question. But whether the student body at K-State wants that same "protection" is.

Universities constitute a separate community. Did the Union official who banned the poster take into consideration the standards of the student body — the group that owns, supports and governs the Union? Or did the official think everyone at K-State has the same views as he does?

Perhaps in the future, officials who seek to protect the impressionable students of K-State will take into consideration the response the Collegian got after running The Word on Friday. One letter to the editor, and it was in support of the student's right to display her poster.

'Useless' art

Editor,

In Tuesday's Collegian, an editorial headline commented that "K-State's art (is) useless unless it's displayed." I am pleased to see the editors of the Collegian bringing the issue to the campus community and reminding us all about the need for an art museum at K-State.

The suggestion in the editorial about remodeling an area on campus to be used as a rotating exhibition area for the permanent collection is an excellent idea, and you will be pleased to know that such an area is currently in the planning stages.

Progress has been very slow as it has always been where the art collection is concerned, but there is a new awareness of the need thanks to the efforts of Ruth Ann Wefald and the Art Museum Steering committee. It even seems possible these days that an art museum will be built on campus during our lifetime (It seems that spring always brings optimism along with the blooming flowers).

While we try to develop the needed financial support to build an art museum, readers of the Collegian should know that art is displayed all over campus. In virtually every office on campus, you can find artwork from Thomas Hart Benton watercolors to Brant Wood lithographs, etchings by Max Beckmann and Kaethe Killwitz, screenprints by Vasarely, paintings by Karl Hofer, and hundreds of other artists.

At K-State, we have lived with art in our immediate surroundings for so long that we may overlook what is available to us everyday right now. It is a little like the husband who takes three days to notice that his wife has changed her hair color or the wife who misses her husband's shaved moustache.

Admittedly, the artwork is not in locations where everyone can see it all the time, but you will find items in departmental offices, dean's offices and faculty offices as well as throughout the Union and McCain Auditorium. Soon, we hope to have a permanent exhibition area in Farrell Library.

The interest of the Collegian and the K-State student body is very important to the success of getting an art museum on campus. Having art which is not currently displayed isn't "useless," but it is unfortunate. The day will yet come when we can all enjoy art in a proper home. In the meantime, we continue to collect and hold the very best art we can acquire so that when we do build a museum we will be proud of its contents.

Questionable bill

Editor,

I read with interest and initially amusement your Wednesday editorial, "WHEREAS Senate ...." As I did, I imagined what I would tell a senator who placed this resolution on my desk.

First, I would question the research he or she had conducted on the accusations made. Had the senator in fact attended the meeting in question, or was the information second hand?

Next, I would question if the senator had intentionally left out information vital to the understanding of the action. For instance, were the two kegs of beer just some arbitrary reward for thirsty senators, or was this a prize previously agreed upon by the University of Kansas Student Senate?

Then, I would likely ask where in the original resolution was any inference made to riots, manure, the K-State student body, envy, Harvard of the Plains or elitism. Could these charges actually be substantiated by the original resolution, or were they in fact reflective of the senator's personal opinions and without justification?

Also, I would suggest to the senator that he or she consider how the original resolution was childish, his or her resolution could only be seen as doubly infantile.

Finally, I would remind the senator that no resolution may be introduced on to the floor without a sponsor's name appearing at the top. This may be the most obvious difference between the requirements and standards of Student Senate and those of the Collegian. Student senators' opinions and assertions are always made publicly; consequently, senators are held accountable for them and are required to justify their research. Collegian editorialists, conversely, are allowed to hide behind a stone wall of anonymity.

Douglas Folk

Make a difference

Editor,

Democracy is defined by Webster's Dictionary as "rule of the majority." With national elections just around the corner, I wonder how many students have registered to vote? If history is any indication, there are not many. The 18- to 20-year-old voting record attendance is the poorest in our nation; yet everything that is voted upon affects this age group more than any other. So, if you want things to be your way, vote!

Someone once said: "The counting of anything starts with the number one." The vote you cast does count.

Get serious

Editor,

Re: Wednesday's editorial on Student Senate.

"Stupid Senate," huh? Oh, c'mon Collegian! Get serious.

Being a journalism and mass communications major too, I know most Collegian staffers would moon Danny Manning if given the chance, so why don't you let Student Senate recognize and continue a proud K-State tradition of rivalry with KU? Please don't slam them for having a little fun.

I'm not a senator, but I have a deep respect for those students who serve the student body through SGA. They give so much time and concerned talent to the students of K-State that they deserve great praise, not the numerous misquotes and continual stories taking events out of context the Collegian gives.

Collegian staffers feel they can take a whole page of the paper to goof off on April Fool's day; it's a Collegian tradition. Why can't Student Senate take a few minutes of their own time to amuse themselves?

It's time to stop being Pulitzer Prize-vying, muckraking journalists when it comes to K-State's student government. Would-be Bernsteins and Woodwards should recognize we have one of the best Student Governing Associations in the nation.

So, while the Collegian pats itself on the back for winning its awards, go pat your senators on the back for doing such a great job. They deserve it too.

Anne Brandsberg
senior in journalism and mass communications

Sidewalk watchers

Editor,

I was tickled pink by Mark Schreiner's column April 8 on "Eye contact on the campus." I too find that most people I pass on the campus are decidedly unsociable and have great trouble in acknowledging my existence. And as Mark puts it, most of them display strong symptoms of the "crack in the sidewalk" syndrome the moment they realize it's the only way to avoid looking at an oncoming person.

It comes as quite a blow to my self-esteem that 49 out of 50 people prefer looking at innocuous sidewalk phenomena than at my interesting, if not overly attractive, face. The odd passerby who does look up usually stares right through me and I find my optimistic smile wasted on the desert air, so to speak.

On occasion, I've attempted a pre-emptory strike, such as a tentative "Hi there!" or "Hello!" Sometimes, this does evoke a response of sorts (usually an unintelligible grunt which could be interpreted as anything from "God save the queen" to "fiddle-dee-dee"), but here too, the party of the opposite camp often feigns a sudden and vigorous attack of deafness. And this time, it's my dulcet voice which flatters the proverbial desert air ....

I would like to see someone offer a plausible explanation for this phenomenon. Since most readers fall into one of two categories, namely "sidewalk watchers" or "victims," I do hope a few interesting ideas will be forthcoming.

Stressful finals

Editor,

If you ask K-State students what the most stressing time during the semester is, most would probably say finals week. Currently, we get one dead day and then finals begin. Finals can make or break many grades.

With the system we have now, feeling prepared and confident for a semester's worth of material in any class is utterly impossible. I have only one question to the administrators and Faculty Senate: Why hurry finals? An enforced dead week would only take away three days of this semester. It would give a little time to relax, relieve some stress and allow ample time to prepare for exams.

It's somewhat frustrating that our Student Senate is so concerned with the KSU Childcare Cooperative and Amnesty International when it could be focusing its attention on something that would be beneficial to all students' educations.

Crash simulator influences drivers

By The Collegian Staff

For those who don't believe seatbelts are necessary safety precautions, the Division of Cooperative Extension has something to convice them.

The Seatbelt Convincer, which is owned by the Department of Home Economics and Safety of the Division of Cooperative Extension, can simulate a car crash of up to 10 mph, but the machine is usually set at 5 mph, said Bob Roach, extension assistant in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

"Picture yourself on a three-story building and then jumping off and hitting concrete. This is the same as a 30 mph crash," he said.

The convincer simulates a crash at a higher speed than what it is actually traveling, Roach said. In a car, passengers have 2 feet to 3 feet around them to absorb the crash's impact. The simulator has only 1½ inches for absorption, he said.

"It is a very graphic show of a low-speed crash," Roach said.

The crash simulator travels an average of 30,000 miles a year throughout the state to convince members of private groups, high schools and corporations of seatbelt importance, he said.

The Kansas Highway Patrol owns the only other crash simulator in the state and the two organizations work together if one of the two is not working properly, Roach said.

The two things the simulator emphasizes is risk management and wearing a seatbelt.

"You don't walk across a street without looking both ways, and this is the same thing. You don't get in a car without fastening your seatbelt. There's too much risk involved," Roach said.

Health tests offered during Fitness Week

By The Collegian Staff

Anyone holding a structured Ahearn facilities pass can be tested for body composition by skin fold, for blood pressure and cardiovascular fitness — among other tests — beginning today and continuing throughout this week.

"Nutrition analysis and consultation will be one of the major programs being offered during the week," said Marri Hopper, director of facilities and staff programming.

The results from the tests given during Ahearn Fitness Week will be provided by Pam Buchanan, senior in exercise science and nutrition.

Hopper said this is the first year for the event.

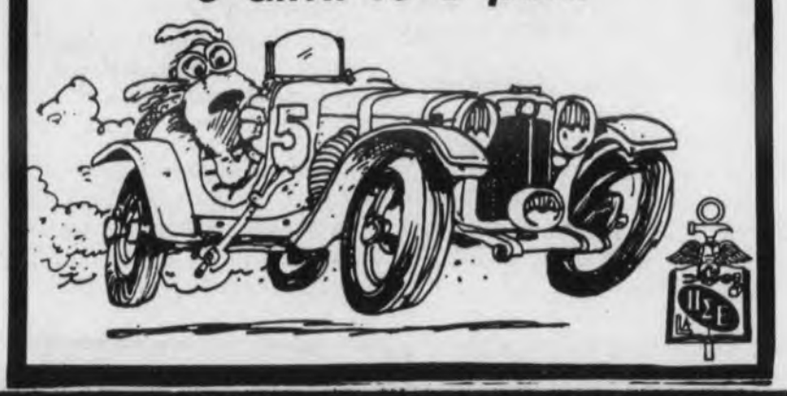
"I'm curious to see how it will turn out. If we have a good response, we will have it again next year," Hopper said. "If we do have it next year, we will have it twice a year."

Bus explosion kills 26 in Sri Lanka

By The Associated Press

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — A bus crowded with shoppers was blown apart Sunday, and at least 26 passengers were killed when Tamil rebels detonated explosives buried in the ground, military officials said.

Thirty people were injured, and 15 of them were in critical condition at local hospitals, the officials said. It was the second Tamil attack on a passenger bus in two days.



The blast threw bodies into the dense jungle beside the road near the village of Sittaru, 25 miles southwest of the eastern port of Trincomalee. About 75 passengers were aboard the bus, and officials were searching for more victims.

Most of the victims were Sinhalese, the majority ethnic group on the island, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Company offers free condoms

Students respond

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Newsweek magazine is offering free condoms by mail to college students. The Ansell Corp., the world's largest condom maker, started the advertising campaign with Newsweek last fall and sales have increased, said Gina Cotto, a spokeswoman for Ansell Corp.

"Sales are up tremendously," Cotto said.

Order forms for the free condoms are included in the ads, but only those who return the forms receive samples in the mail. Cotto said random mailing of condoms would have been too risky for the campaign's launch.

"We didn't do random mailing because of parent concern," she said. "It would have been a risk for both companies."

Ansell's condom ads are aimed directly at the college market, said Cotto. The ads with condom order forms are printed only in Newsweek On Campus and Esquire magazines.

Newsweek On Campus is a special edition of Newsweek and is printed six times a year. These mini-editions, inserted into campus newspapers at 224 colleges, have a readership of more than 1 million, said Jim McCassrey of Newsweek's advertising department. Subscribers to regular editions of Newsweek see the same ads, but these ads don't include the mail-in coupons, he said.

Cotto said aiming the campaign at the college market was the right move.

"We reached more students than we ever thought we would," she said.

Of the 1.3 million coupons printed in Newsweek On Campus and in Esquire, 27,000 were sent back to Ansell requesting condom samples. In the advertising business, that's a good return, Cotto said.

Neither Ansell nor Newsweek wanted to start the campaign by offering condoms to all their readers, she said.

"We wanted to see the response from college students before we went to the public," she said. "College students tend to be more liberal, so that's where we started."

Ansell's advertising department approached Newsweek first with its idea for marketing condoms. Newsweek's public relations department liked the idea so much the campaign turned into a joint venture. Cotto said the combined effort has been successful.

"Both companies got on campus at the right time," she said.

Cotto said the AIDS scare was a major factor in the campaign, but it was not the reason Ansell started the project. AIDS has brought condom protection to the public awareness, she said.

Research shows students are often embarrassed about buying condoms, and Ansell's mail-in offer was discreet enough to relieve their inhibitions, Cotto said.

"A lot of campuses still don't carry condoms in their bookstores, and we thought this offer would help raise awareness (about protection)."

The K-State Union Bookstore doesn't sell condoms of any brand.

Lafene Student Health Center purchases all their condoms through a state contract with Ansell, said chief pharmacist Bill Salero. Lafene sells condoms at the pharmacy and in the LaFemme Clinic. Salero said public awareness about safe sex practices have contributed to gradually increasing condom sales this spring.

Lafene purchased four cases of 10 gross each of condoms in December 1987 and ordered two more cases in April, Salero said.

"Two cases used to last a year," he said.

Ansell's condoms are carried by Manhattan stores, and according to a survey, condom sales of all brands have increased.

Shirley Arck, head pharmacist at Wal-Mart, said condom sales have increased this year. Customers aren't shy about their purchases either, she said.

"People are more vocal about (purchasing condoms). They ask more questions," she said. "People seem to want more information."

Women are Wal-Mart's top buyers of condoms, Arck said.

Bob Learned, a Dillons pharmacist, also said condom sales to women are increasing.

"Oddly enough, more women are buying condoms," he said. "About 30 percent of buyers now are women."

Jeff Dumler, head pharmacist at Revco Drug, said sales to women have increased.

"Women buy them as frequently as the men," he said. Dumler said that before the AIDS scare women just didn't buy condoms.

"People don't seem embarrassed anymore," he said, adding that customers ask more questions about family planning.

Molly Sarvis, of Barry's Drug, said condom sales have been up since October. Most buyers are men, she said, but both sexes purchase them. She also said most buyers are single.

Kellstrom's and Dunnes' pharmacies don't carry Ansell's brand but said their condom sales are increasing.

"If anything, sales are up, " said Pat Dunne, manager and pharmacist for Dunnes. A spokeswoman for Dunnes said she thinks people are taking precautions.

"I think people are more aware of the safety factor. And we're glad to see it," she said. She also said 75 percent of buyers are men.

Ansell has traditionally been a supplier of condoms for the wholesale market making the Newsweek campaign their first attempt at over-the-counter sales.

"We're just now going into the public market," Cotto said.

Ansell has manufactured condoms for the federal government and other corporations for more than 10 years. The government buys Ansell condoms and ships them to Guatemala, Honduras and other underdeveloped countries for government birth control programs. Ansell is also the supplier of condoms for Planned Parenthood, an organization for family planning, she said.

Newsweek On Campus is not inserted in the Collegian, but it is available in the Career Planning and Placement Center in Holtz Hall and distributed to living groups.

Ansell mails the condoms in a plain, brown envelope using Newsweek's return address. The package is complete with four condoms in a pocket-size, leather carry-pack.

SPECIAL OLYMPICS

David Klabunde runs the 400-meter dash in the Area 3 Special Olympics held Saturday morning at the R.V. Christian Track. Klabunde also ran the 400-meter relay and an exhibition 1-mile run. More than 160 handicapped contestants ranging in age from 11 to 49 years competed.

"Let me win, but if I cannot, let me be brave in the attempt."

This, the Special Olympics Creed, sums up the feelings of the participants, the parents and everyone involved with the Area 3 Special Olympics, Saturday at R.V. Christian Track.

Gathered together from across the state for the event were 162 mentally and/or physically handicapped people ranging in age from 11-49.

The participants are categorized into ages 8-11, 12-15, 16-21, 22-29, and 30 and up, said Herb Ely, Special Olympics coach from Manhattan. Olympians compete both by age and by their times and distances in events.

"The events we have are the softball throw, dashes, mile run, relays, swimming, wheelchair races, long jump and Frisbee throws," he said.

If there is only one participant in an event, the race is run as an exhibition and for time so the participant will be able to go to the state Special Olympics. The state Special Olympics will be held at Wichita in June.

Opening ceremonies of Saturday's games were extensive.

The excitement of the day began early with a parachute jump by the K-State Parachute Club. Leading the Special Olympics opening parade was Steve Henson, K-State basketball player, and animated characters "McGruff" the crime dog, Willie the Wildcat and Billie Bob, from ShowBiz Pizza Place.

Keeping the stands alive during the games were Amy Kells and Debbie Thurlow, participants in the games. Both were extremely excited about participating in the games and kept the participants hopping.

They chanted the tune "Lovin' Every Minute Of It" and got the rest of the Manhattan Special Olympics Team to sing and dance along with them.

"Before David was involved I didn't like Special Olympics. I thought their television commercials exploited the kids and hit the other viewers in their hearts and their pocketbooks. The benefits have outweighed my initial reaction. For once David's a winner."

—Linda Klabunde

Members of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity were among the many people helping with the event.

"We help set up the track. It is a philanthropy for our house," said Bob Stuart, Lambda Chi member and senior in biology.

"It is our third year in a row to help at the track," he said. "Before, we raised money and donated it to the Special Olympics."

Kurt Stoner, freshman in pre-medicine, said he was involved with Special Olympics because "it gives the chance for kids who wouldn't normally be able to do this kind of thing the opportunity to compete."

"It makes me feel good inside," he said.

The Flint Hills Association of Life Underwriters also helped with the games. Rod Franz, Manhattan, organized the softball throw competition.

"The main thing that's fun is knowing you're able to help the participants do something they enjoy," Franz said.

Jana and Kara Franz, Rod's daughters, assisted in the softball throw. Jana said she enjoyed helping them.

"It was really fun and funny. They had a really good sense of humor," she said.

"I liked the looks on their faces when they were on the award platform," Kara said. "They were yelling to their teams in the stadium and were so excited."

David Klabunde, a Manhattan participant who carried the torch in Saturday's opening ceremonies, also competed in several events. David is 16 and is slightly mentally handicapped. He runs long distances and Saturday he ran the 400-meter, the mile and the 400-meter relays.

"David has been a runner for a long time. When he was 7 he was sick all of the time, he was also very thin. His father and I thought running would build him up. We also thought it would be good for his coordination," said Linda Klabunde, David's mother.

"By the time he was 9 he ran in his first St. Patrick's Day Race here in Manhattan with his dad. Since then he easily runs two to three miles a day," she said. "He has also competed in the Heartland Race; he's run a couple of times in the St. Patrick's Day Race, and he's run a three-mile race in Fort Riley."

By competing in the Special Olympics versus other races, "David's a star," Linda said.

"His natural ability stands out. It's a chance for David to truly succeed and do better than the kids he competes with," she said. "I think he needs it for his own self-confidence; before (being involved with Special Olympics) he never saw himself as a winner."

"Special Olympics helps David achieve his potential," said Ken Klabunde, David's father and K-State professor of chemistry. "All of the involvement has helped him to do the best he can do."

Linda said her attitude about Special Olympics has drastically changed since David has been involved in the program.

"Before David was involved I didn't like Special Olympics," she said. "I thought its television commercials exploited the kids and hit the other viewers in their hearts and their pocketbooks.

"The benefits have outweighed my initial reaction. For once David's a winner," Linda said.

"The Special Olympics give David a chance to experience the thrills normal kids get to, and that is not a little thing," Ken said.

David said he likes the Special Olympic games because they are fun.

David likes to run the long distance races because he "can beat everybody." And he did.

David finished first in the 400-meter and second in the 400-meter relay. He ran the mile as an exhibition race, so he will be able to compete at Wichita in June.

For special kids — at least David — racing doesn't mean anything unless they get a ribbon or a medal.

They might improve their time tremendously or beat 20 other runners, but unless they win, it doesn't mean much, Linda said.

Georgia Becker's son John ran in the games. John was not competitive like David, but he "has a lot of fun."

"The main benefit for John is in the training," Becker said. "He has a weight problem and training for the Special Olympics gives him some exercise.

"He usually loses some weight during training," she said.

"For the group it's a really good program. Some of those kids are real athletes," Becker said.

"It gives them a chance to really shine," she said.

countries.

In Poland, thousands of people demonstrated in cities across the nation, heeding a call by the Solidarity labor federation for a national "day of protest" against price increases and restriction of union activities. Scores of people were detained and several people were injured in clashes with police.

A tense strike was in its sixth day at a steel mill outside Krakow. It was the first time in communist Poland's history that a large-scale strike was under way on May Day.

In the Philippines, troops shot at May Day marchers south of Manila. Organizers claimed the soldiers fired "without provocation" into a crowd, wounding two people. Police confirmed the shooting but had no details.

Turkish authorities detained more than 100 people who tried to mark May Day in Istanbul and Ankara, the semi-official Anatolia news agency reported. President Kenan Evren said the holiday could not be celebrated because it was not mentioned in the contitution.

Police rounded up half a dozen dissidents during the May Day parade in communist East Berlin, including one who had chained himself to a cross outside a church.

Israeli Arabs in Nazareth dedicated a May Day parade to the 5-month-old Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Militant South African trade unions, barred from holding outdoor rallies, held indoor meetings to celebrate May Day and protest the government's clampdown on the black labor movement.

A 16-year-old youth was struck by a bullet as police scattered groups of demonstrators that left the rally and tried to march to the downtown area in a protest against the military government.

It was not clear who wounded the youth, Nelson Barahona, but reporters saw some policemen firing pistols. Police units used tear gas and water cannons to disperse the demonstrators. Hospital employees said Barahona was shot in the back and his condition was serious but stable.

Some protesters were detained, but police gave no figure.

President Augusto Pinochet, speaking in the city of Iquique, 1,100 miles north of Santiago, said that effective June 1 there will be "an important increase" in the nation's legal minimum salary, which now stands at the equivalent of $47 per month. He gave no amount but the government said later the mininum wage would be $58 a month.

Nicaragua President Daniel Ortega told a May Day rally in Managua that his troops would launch their biggest offensive ever against rebels if they did not extend a 60-day cease fire into a permanent truce. The two-month cease-fire began April 1.

Government and rebel negotiators on Saturday ended three days of talks in Managua without making progress toward a permanent end to the civil war.

Pope John Paul II, in May Day remarks to about 1,500 ceramic workers in a town north of Rome, called unemployment a "great evil."

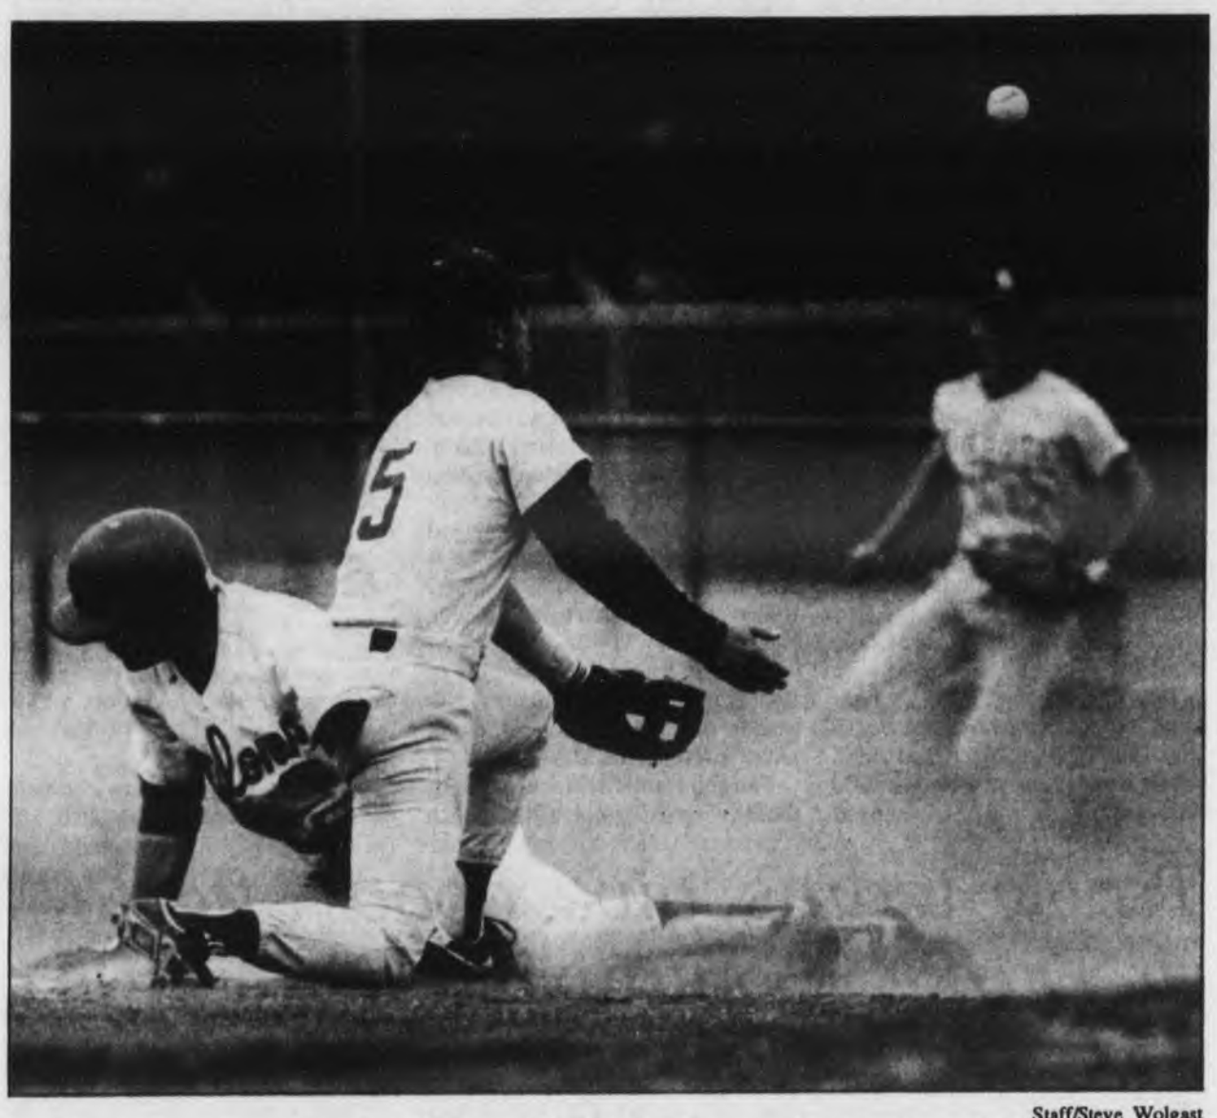
Tarkio double-header scheduled for Tuesday



K-State wins two, loses two in series with ISU

By The Collegian Staff

What started out as a quiet, windy Sunday afternoon quickly exploded into a scoring exhibition, as K-State's baseball team lost, 24-20, to the Iowa State Cyclones in the last game of a four-game Big Eight Conference series.

Saturday, the 'Cats won both games in a double-header, 9-5 and 15-6. They were defeated Friday, 13-2. The conference split puts the 'Cats' record at 29-20 overall and 7-13 in the Big Eight.

Sunday, the Wildcats got things started in the bottom of the first, as they scored seven runs, including a grand slam by Bill Barnard. That wasn't his last contribution to the game, as he belted two more home runs and a triple for the afternoon.

Staff/Steve Wolgast

Iowa State's Bryce Husted is safe at third base as K-State third baseman Jim Donohue watches the ball bounce away from him Sunday at Frank Myers Field. The Cyclones won, 24-20, splitting a four-game Big Eight series with the 'Cats at two games each.

The 'Cats starting pitcher, Jeff Haller, only lasted 1¾ innings after giving up four runs and three hits. He was relieved by Dave Hierholzer, who lasted until the eighth inning, giving up seven runs on 14 hits.

K-State produced more offense in the bottom of the third, as Kent Gleason and Jim Donohue put back-to-back singles together, scoring two runs. Barnard then added his triple to give four more runs to the total.

In the bottom of the fifth, Barnard hit a three-run homer, Right fielder Tony Braddock hit his first career home run later in the inning.

Going into the eighth, the Wildcats were on top, 16-10, and a win appeared to be imminent. But the Cyclones exploded for nine runs in the inning. K-State scored one run in the bottom of the eighth to pull to within two, 21-19.

ISU scored three more runs in the ninth, and K-State tried to stage a comeback in their half of the inning. But the 'Cats could scored only three runs themselves before ISU turned a double play to end the game.

After losing the series opener Friday, K-State's eternal fan Robert Lipsom needed to yell at Iowa State, some of the spectators needed jackets and K-State needed a couple of wins Saturday.

As it turned out, almost everyone got what they wanted.

K-State won both games, 9-5 and 15-6.

In the nightcap, Iowa State scored in the first inning, but the 'Cats were able to tie the game when Sean Collins scored on a hard liner to center by Mike Rosenboom.

The Cyclones went back ahead by one in the second inning on a short hopper down the third base line that scored Tom Vantiger from third.

That was the last time a Cyclone runner would touch home until the seventh inning.

For K-State, it was rally time.

Two pitches into the bottom of the third, Kent Gleason watched his hit rocket into the trees in left field to tie the game at 2-2.

Rosenboom tried for a homer of his own on the next pitch, but settled for a double as the ball fell short and bounced off the top of the fence back into play. He came home one batter later when Jim Donohue launched a double to left field.

David Chadd then found himself on first base after Iowa State's shortstop, Greg Brecht, opted to hold Donohue on second on Chadd's short hopper.

Brian Maize then loaded the bases for K-State on the next pitch. Dan Scala took advantage of the situation and put one past the shortstop and brought home Donohue.

Reese Beers then hit a double-play ball to ISU second baseman Dave Herbeck who stepped on second to put Scala away. His throw to first flew over the Iowa State first baseman's head, bringing Chadd and Maize home.

Beers reached second on the error and scored on a wild pickoff throw to make the score 7-2 in favor of the 'Cats.

In the fourth, a double by Kent Gleason and a walk to Rosenboom set the stage for Chadd, who hit a homer to left and put K-State up, 10-2.

Beers slapped a single to left to start K-State's fifth inning. Collins followed with a single and Gleason walked to load the bases. Rosenboom brought the first two home with a double.

Donohue then stepped to the plate and put one over the left field fence to clean the bases and break the K-State record for most team runs in a season with 54.

Iowa State tried to come back in the sixth, but could muster only four runs, as neither team scored in the remainder of the game and K-State posted a 15-6 win.

In Saturday's opener, the Cyclones drew first blood again, scoring one run in the first inning.

After K-State starting pitcher Darryl Rowley pitched a three up-three down second inning, the 'Cats came to life.

Chadd doubled to left and Maize followed with a single to put men on first and third. A wild pitch by Iowa State pitcher Dan O'Reilly brought home Chadd, and Maize advanced to third. Maize scored later on a sacrifice fly to right field.

Beers and Braddock scored later in the inning to propel K-State's lead to 4-1.

In the third inning, K-State's bats still hadn't cooled and a combination of great hitting and wild pitching brought home four runs on five hits.

Rosenboom scored in the fourth on a single by Chadd to add to the 'Cats' lead and eventual win, 9-5.

Friday, the 'Cats were defeated 13-2 in a game called after seven innings due to a run rule.

The 'Cats next action will be Tuesday at Frank Myers Field. They will take on Tarkio (Mo.) College in a 1 p.m. double-header. Wednesday, Wichita State will travel to Manhattan to play the 'Cats in a 7 p.m. contest.

Unassuming, dedicated Struckhoff 'coach's dream'

Commentary

TOM PERRIN

Sports Columnist

Jacque Struckhoff has a way of amazing just about everyone but herself.

A four-time All-American in track and cross country, Struckhoff's list of accomplishments is long and impressive. Her discipline and commitment to excellence, both on the track and in the classroom, may be even more remarkable.

"Jacque Struckhoff is a coach's dream," said K-State track coach John Capriotti. "She's a 4.0 in the classroom and if you had to give a grade point average on the track, I guess she'd be a 4.0 there, too."

"It's like I'm just sitting there in awe sometimes wondering how she does it," teammate Alysun Deckert said.

If Struckhoff has a weakness, it's that she doesn't seem to feel too comfortable talking about herself.

You've probably noticed how a lot of athletes have these enormous egos and love few things more than talking about themselves. Well, Struckhoff is just the opposite.

Forget the 4.0 she's made in her nutrition science major and forget all the awards, too — Struckhoff is as unassuming as they come. That Struckhoff arrived at K-State in the fall of 1983 as an largely unpublicized recruit from Class 1A Grinnell High School may have something to do with this.

"I just came in hoping to make the team. I didn't know what to expect," she said. "My times in high school weren't that good compared to some of the other girls. I just tried to take it one year at a time. If I didn't like it the first year, I wouldn't go out the next year."

By the next fall, Struckhoff was already an All-American for the first time after a 32nd-place finish at the NCAA cross country meet. Now she holds K-State records in the 5,000-meter run and the 10,000 as well. She became the only runner in NCAA to qualify for nationals in four different individual events after her times in the 1,500, 3,000, 5,000 and 10,000 in 1986.

"She's really committed. She's always the first one out and the last one to leave workouts," Deckert said. "She's very disciplined."

Struckhoff's time commitments to both track and schoolwork have been substantial and have left little time for social life. Her social life for five years, she says, has essentially been centered around the track team. Still, Struckhoff shows no signs of regret.

"I think it's been worth it," she said. "Sometimes I'm amazed when I look back and remember five years of running every day, going to practice every day and some of the workouts we've done. It's only drudgery when things aren't going well."

Those unpleasant times haven't been too frequent for Struckhoff, who was selected most valuable performer at the Big Eight outdoor meet last year after wins in the 3,000, 5,000 and 10,000.

One of those difficult times came last fall when Struckhoff, still slowed by a stress-fracture injury, didn't run cross country. The difficulties continued through the indoor track season when Struckhoff wasn't coming near the times she was accustomed to running.

This spring's outdoor season is

Tickets on sale today

From Wire Reports

Student season tickets for K-State's 1988 home football games will go on sale today at the Ahearn Field House Ticket Office.

The ticket costs $30 and will provide reserved seat admission for each of the Wildcats' six home games this fall.

The 1988 K-State home football schedule includes non-conference contests with Iowa and Louisiana Tech and Big Eight Conference matchups with Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma State and Iowa State. The Louisiana Tech game will be K-State's annual Homecoming affair, while the Oklahoma State contest will be on Parents' Day.

Students may purchase up to 70 tickets with one K-State student I.D. card. Payment must be made for all tickets when they are ordered. Payment can be made by cash, check, Visa or MasterCard.

Ahearn Field House ticket office hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Ruggers win game with Topeka, 37-3

K-State's Darrel Loder, second from left, fights to keep the ball from four surrounding Topeka Rugby Club players during the rugby game Saturday afternoon at Gorman Park. K-State beat Topeka, 37-3, and improved its record to 7-3-1 for the season.

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's rugby club dominated the Topeka Rugby Football Club in a game played at Gorman Park in Manhattan Saturday.

K-State won by its largest margin of the season, 37-3, due primarily to being in superior physical condition, said center Dave Todd.

"We were faster, and we were able to last longer because we were in better shape," Todd said.

In the first half, K-State scored just 10 minutes into the game on a penalty kick by Xentho O'Hatton. This set the stage for the remainder of the half, as Tim Dougan scored two trys and Darrel Coder scored one try to put K-State up, 15-0, at the half.

Topeka's bad luck and K-State's good luck continued in the second half.

"In the second half, we started playing a lot more fluidly and there was nothing they could do to stop us," Todd said.

Isaac Madison and Danny Blea scored trys for K-State to extend the lead to 23-0 before Topeka got on the board with a penalty kick, putting the score at 23-3.

That was as close as Topeka would get, as Todd, Henry Pearl and Pat Sherman scored trys for K-State. Kevin Wagner made a conversion after Todd's try to put the final score at 37-3 in favor of K-State.

K-State improved its record to 7-3-1 with the run. The club's next action will be May 14 when it plays Lincoln (Neb.) in Manhattan.

Basketball benefit raises about $1,600 for Memorial

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

On April 30, 1975, the last U. S. troops were pulled off the American embassy roof in Vietnam, ending the war.

Another final battle took place in Ahearn Fieldhouse Saturday night on the 13th anniversary of the event.

The six seniors from the 1987-88 Wildcat basketball squad and some local celebrities took on the Student All-Star team in the last men's game to be played in the facility.

About 800 people attended the contest, which netted more than $1,600 for the KSU Vietnam Veterans Memorial project.

The All-Stars held All-American Mitch Richmond to 9 points in its 113-111 loss to the Senior-Celebrity squad.

That is, if the 23 points Richmond scored for the All-Stars aren't counted.

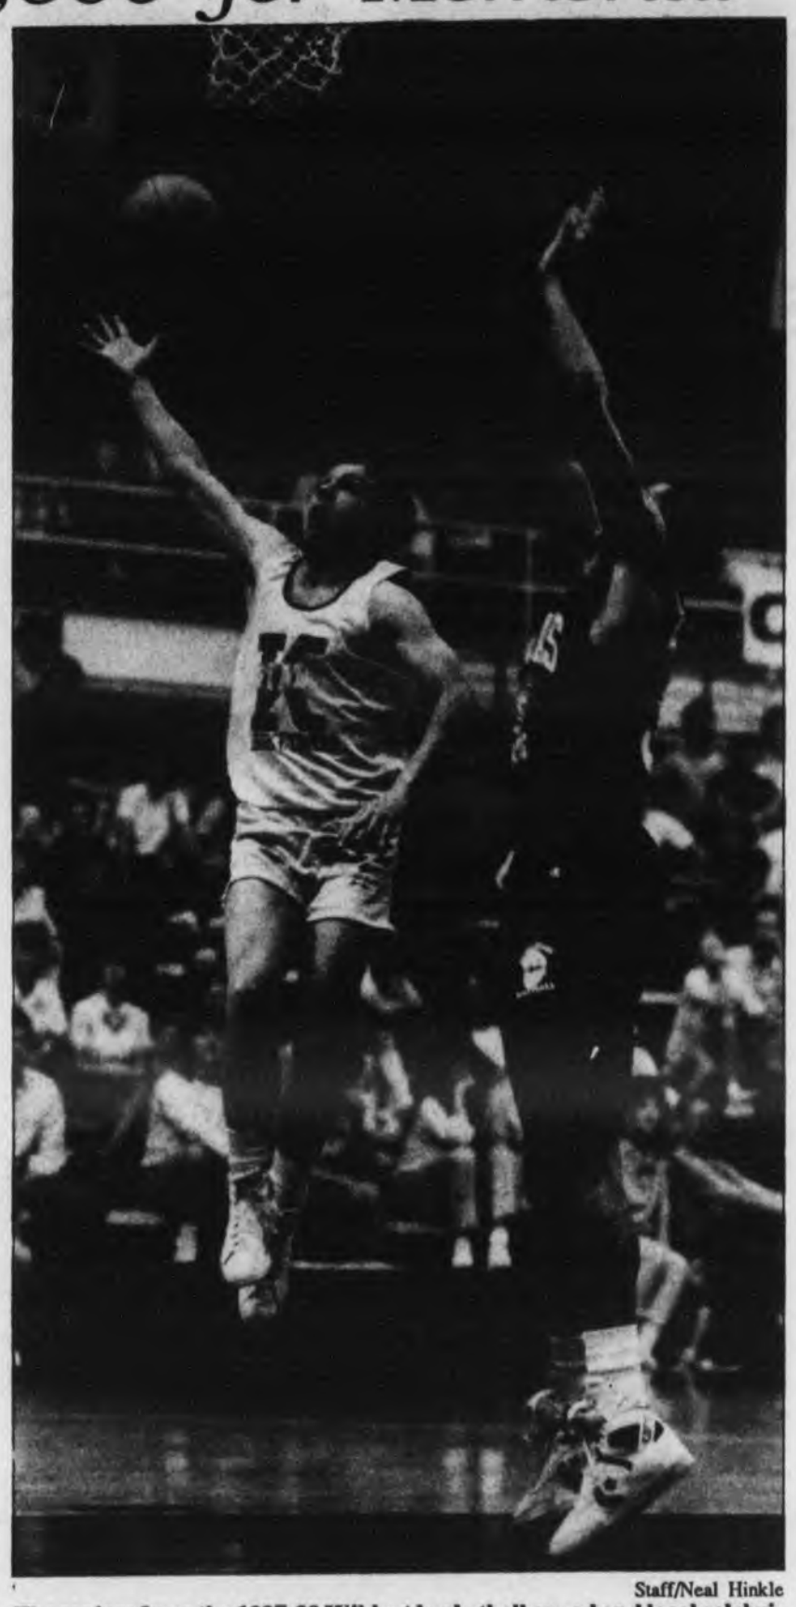
After hitting three consecutive 3-pointers at the beginning of the first half, Richmond was taken out of the game and didn't make another point for the Wildcats the rest of the night.

What began as an apparent runaway game for the Wildcats turned around when, with 10 minutes left to play in the first half, Richmond returned to the game as a member of the All-Stars.

After a 53-44 halftime deficit, the All-Stars came to within 1 point of the Wildcats with 18 minutes left to play in the game.

"I think when Mitch came over we felt a little bit more relaxed and able to do the things we wanted to," said Pat Buchanan, graduate student in secondary education and coach of the All-Stars.

A surprise guest entered the game with 15 minutes left in the game, this time for the Wildcats.



Willie the Wildcat played 2 minutes and went 0 for 1 before being replaced.

The All-Stars had a chance to send the game into overtime with :02 left in the game, when Will Scott missed two charity shots with the Wildcats leading 113-111.

However, a half-court shot by the All-Stars fell short at the buzzer.

"It was a great opportunity to get out there and see what we could do against them," Buchanan said.

Seniors from the eighth-ranked Wildcat squad who played were Charles Bledsoe, Ron Meyer, Mark Nelson, Mitch Richmond, Will Scott and Walter Wright. Joining them were Perry Taylor, Manhattan High basketball coach, Troy Lubbers, student body president, and Doug Folk, student senate chairman.

Fourth place finishes highlight for 'Cats

From Wire Reports

A fourth-place finish in both singles and doubles action highlighted the K-State women's tennis team's sixth-place showing in the 13th Annual Big Eight Conference Championships which concluded here Friday.

Sigrid Ivarsson claimed fourth in No. 4 singles, while the duo of Marijke Nel and Valerie Rive' matched that performance in No. 2 doubles. Both entrants won opening round matches before losing their final two matches in the championship bracket.

All seven of K-State's other entries in the two-day tournament lost first-round matches, thus, placing them in the consolation bracket. Gaining a consolation bracket championship (fifth place) in No. 6 singles was freshman Miste Bitner.

Other K-State finishes included Marijke Nel (sixth) at No. 1 singles, Annika Emtell (seventh) at No. 2 singles, Valerie Rive' (seventh) at No. 3 singles and Thresa Burcham (seventh) at No. 5 singles.

In doubles competition, Emtell-Ivarsson placed seventh at No. 1 and Burcham-Bitner were sixth at No. 3.

In the team standings, Oklahoma State claimed its eighth consecutive league title by scoring 126 points to outdistance state foe Oklahoma, which tallied 102 points for second place. Remaining team scores in order of finish were Kansas (95), Colorado (89), Nebraska (60), K-State (53), Iowa State (38) and Missouri (12).

"I am really pleased with the tournament results, although I'm disappointed that we didn't get fifth place," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "However, Nebraska beat us in several head-to-head matches and deserves its position.

"We had some great performances which capped off a year of great accomplishments," he continued.

Golf team ties for 10th

From Wire Reports

K-State's men's golf team finished in a tie for 10th in the Second Annual Midwestern Invitational which concluded Saturday at the Par 72, 6,306-yard Abbey Springs Country Club.

After registering rounds Friday of 315-308, K-State fashioned a 311 over the final 18 holes for a 54-hole score of 934.

That total matched Purdue's two-day effort and placed both schools in 10th. Illinois rallied in the final round to pass first day leader Ohio State and claim the team title. The Illini ended up with an 891 score to edge the Buckeyes by a single stroke.

Wildcat Chris Gomez was the top individual finisher for K-State. Gomez tied for 23rd after carding rounds of 78-74-78 for a 230 total.

Other K-State scores included John Shields 78-80-77—235; Jeff Sedorcek 81-76-78—235; Troy Keller 78-85-78—241; and Daran Neuschafer 84-78-80—242.

First-day leader Steve Stricker of Illinois gained medalist honors with rounds of 68-66-74 for an eight-under par total of 208.

The golf team's next action will be the Big Eight Championships which will be held at the Country Club of Oklahoma in Tulsa, Okla., May 16-17.

FINAL STANDINGS

1. Illinois 291-302-298—891

Track teams give good efforts at Drake, Southwestern Relays

From Staff and Wire Reports

While part of K-State's track and field teams competed at the Drake Relays over the weekend, the remainder of the squad competed at the Southwestern Relays Saturday. The result of the meet, held Saturday afternoon and evening, was some good confidence builders for several younger members of the squad.

The teams tallied eight first place finishes as they set three new meet records and tied one meet record. Laura Ostmeyer had two of those wins and records as she won the 1,500 meters in 4:30 and then took top honors in the 800 meters in 2:15. Veronica Hatton won the 100-meter dash in 11.8 to set a new Southwestern Relays record and then tied the 200 meter record at 25.2 for a first-place finish.

One of the high points of the meet was Kelly Abernathy clearing the national qualifying mark in the discus. She threw 172-4 to pass the qualifying standard of 168-6.

At the Drake event, one bright spot for K-State was the effort of triple jumper Felicia Curry. She leaped 41-9¼ to set a Drake Relays record. That jump was also a national qualifying mark.

K-State coach John Capriotti was pleased with Curry's efforts, as well as the rest of the team's efforts.

"We had some good efforts (at Drake) and I think that will help us later on, Capriotti said.

"Jeff Reynolds' time of 45:88 in the 400 meters was his personal best. Pat Allen and Doug Brown getting third and fourth in the javelin was good. All in all, I would have to say that we had a good weekend up there."

Capriotti said his teams is just about where he expected them to be at this point in the season.

"Our field events have improved, the sprinters are all healthy," he said. "I was a little disappointed with the placing of the distance runners but they had a tough wind to run in at Drake. But they can improve."

Oklahoma completes sweep with Missouri

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — John Douglas hit three home runs and drove in a total of nine runs Sunday in leading Oklahoma to a 19-7 and 10-4 sweep of a Big Eight Conference baseball doubleheader over Missouri.

Douglas got two of his homers in the opener and added the other in the second.

Todd Butler had eight RBI with five hits.

Brewers dump Royals, 10-6

Deer hits third career grand slam in victory

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee Brewers left fielder Rob Deer said he learned a lot from leading the American League in strikeouts last year, when he fanned 186 times.

"The only way to get through the bad things is to forget about them," Deer said. "Last year, I would really get down. This year I'm trying to stay on an even keel. I'm just trying to keep things in perspective, hit the ball hard."

Deer applied that philosophy Sunday as he faced Kansas City reliever Bud Black with the bases loaded in the sixth inning. Deer fouled off several pitches before drilling Black's 3-2 offering over the left field wall for his third career grand slam.

The homer staked the Brewers to a 10-2 lead which became important in the ninth inning as Kansas City rallied for four runs to cut the final margin to 10-6.

Asked if he was trying to avoid walking Deer, Black said tersley: "It was simply a case of a grand slam. He fouled off some good pitches. You have to give him some credit. My job is to come in and get guys out, and I didn't do it in this game."

The Brewers finished with eight hits in beating Kansas City 4-1 Saturday and scored 10 runs on just eight hits Sunday. Manager Tom Trebelhorn noted: "We're not getting alot of hits but we're getting quality hits. The important thing is to get our confidence back that something good is going to happen. I just hope the last two games will give us that confidence."

Chris Bosio, 4-2, had given up just two Kansas City runs on five hits until giving up four more in the ninth with the help of a throwing error by third baseman Steve Kiefer, two more singles and two walks.

Bosio left without getting an out in the ninth, and Dan Plesac got the final two outs, putting down the rally for his fifth save.

Dale Sveum chased Kansas City starter Mark Gubicza, 3-2, with a one-out double in the Brewers sixth. Reliever Ted Power walked Paul Molitor and hit Robin Yount with a pitch, loading the bases.

Bud Black relieved Power and retired B.J. Surhoff on a popup before walking Greg Brock, forcing in Sveum. Deer then hit a 3-2 pitch over the left field wall.

Milwaukee trailed the Royals 2-1 entering the fifth inning. Ernest Riles led off with a double, advanced to third on a groundout and scored the tying run on Gubicza's wild pitch. Molitor walked, and Yount was safe when center fielder Willie Wilson dropped his fly ball for a two-base error.

Surhoff was walked intentionally to load the bases, and Brock's two-run single scored Molitor and Yount, giving Milwaukee a 4-2 lead. Glenn Braggs added a run-scoring single for Milwaukee's fifth run.

The Royals scored their first two runs in the third on a single by Bo Jackson, a walk to Mike Macfarlane, an RBI double by Kurt Stillwell and a sacrifice fly by Wilson.

Bosio walked Jim Eisenreich to start the ninth, and Frank White and Scotti Madison followed with singles to load the bases. Eisenreich scored on a throwing error by Kiefer on Jackson's grounder, and Bosio then walked Macfarlane to force in the second run.

Chuck Crim gave up a sacrifice fly to Kurt Stillwell, and Wilson followed with an RBI single before Plesac came on.

Struckhoff's last shot at NCAA glory, and she says she feels up to the task. Struckhoff wasn't able to post a time good enough to qualify for the NCAA meet in either this weekend's Drake Relays or last weekend's Kansas Relays. Depending on the schedule she chooses, Struckhoff will have either two or three more chances to qualify.

"I just want to go out in fashion in my last year," she said.

It's hard to imagine anyone deserving such an opportunity more than Jacque Struckhoff.

Old friends will cross paths in Stanley Cup semifinals

By The Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. — Four years ago, the hockey careers of Jim Schoenfeld, Terry O'Reilly and Peter McNab came together on the roster of the Boston Bruins.

Beginning tonight in the Prince Of Wales Conference final between the Bruins and the New Jersey Devils, these three good friends will be together again, with Schoenfeld coaching the Devils, O'Reilly coaching the Bruins and McNab working as a cable television announcer.

The other Stanley Cup semifinal begins Tuesday night with the Detroit Red Wings at defending champion Edmonton.

"I was talking to Terry on the phone," Schoenfeld said after the Devils eliminated the Washington Capitals in the Patrick Division final Saturday night.

"Who would've thought two years ago that we would be coaching against each other in the conference finals and Peter would be doing the color. We're such good friends."

The unexpected meeting came about only because the New Jersey Devils have refused to let their unexpected playoff role come to an end.

They went 7-0-1 to finish the regular season, making the playoffs on a tiebreaker with the New York Rangers after an overtime victory against Chicago on the last day of the season. They eliminated the New York Islanders in six games in the opening round and moved into the semifinals with a 3-2 victory in Game 7 against Washington Saturday night when John MacLean scored on a deflection with 6:11 remaining.

"We gave it everything we had," said New Jersey right wing Pat Verbeek. "Johnny came through for us. We just kept bumping and grinding, Sean Burke came up big in the nets. It was a total team effort."

Positives focus of banquet

"I'm all right" was the song that ended the K-State Lady Cat highlight film featured at Friday evening's awards banquet.

And things are all right, despite the youthful Lady Cats' 1987-88 season in which they posted the first losing record in school history (8-20) and finished last in the Big Eight Conference.

All of the awards presented went to freshmen and sophomores who will return to next year's squad.

Janet Madsen was the recipient of two awards — one for most charges taken and the other for most inspirational player.

She shared the charges taken award with Elyse Funk, who also received an award for dishing out the most assists (96). The other sophomore to be awarded was Amy Davidson for leading the team in free throw percentage (73.3 percent).

Two freshmen also came away with awards. Diana Miller was recognized as the leader in rebounding (195), and Nadira Hazim was awarded for her team-leading steals (67).

Lady Cat Head Coach Matilda Mossman spoke to a crowd of about 100 people about the team's positive accomplishments during the season and the bright future that lies ahead with 10 returnees and four newcomers next year.

Challenge nets at least $1,500

The "KSU Tennis Challenge" ended Sunday with preliminary estimates indicating between $1,500 and $2,000 being raised for K-State's women's tennis program.

The Challenge, a 24-hour marathon which started at noon Saturday and ended at noon Sunday, was a success, according to K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau.

"We really had a good time," Bietau said. "The support of the administration and our coaches was fantastic. Also, the support from the Kansas State students and the Manhattan community was very good."

Among the "celebrity" participants taking part in the event were KSU President Jon Wefald, football coach Stan Parrish, Wildcat basketball coach Lon Kruger and Lady Cat basketball coach Matilda Mossman.

In addition to the celebrity participants, several other individuals took part at some point in the event, including members of the KSU women's tennis team who rotated on six-hour shifts.

In addition to Bietau, individuals who were involved during the entire 24-hour period included K-State students Mark Bair and David Pulford and K-State tennis coaching staff assistants Shawn Walburn and Lena Svensson.

Bietau said that the final tally for the event won't probably be known until Tuesday.

"We would like to make this an annual affair," Bietau said.

Students, faculty paddle concrete canoes

KU places first in annual event at Tuttle Creek

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

During the annual concrete canoe races, the University of Kansas took on eight other canoes Saturday at the River Pond Area at Tuttle Creek Reservoir and won.

Yes, concrete canoe races.

For the 15th year, the K-State chapter of Chi Epsilon, a civil engineering honorary, helped coordinate the races sponsored by the American Concrete Institute and the American Society of Civil Engineers.

"We're lucky to have good weather. Even though we're getting our butts kicked by KU, everybody seems to be enjoying themselves."
—Ron Hirsch, senior in civil engineering

The first rule of the races is that all of the canoes must float, said Jim Ramm, senior in civil engineering and president of Chi Epsilon.

And that's something KU's team had little trouble doing. The Jayhawks paddled their canoes to victory by accumulating the most team points and taking home the traveling trophy, with a chance to participate in the national competition.

The races consisted of men's, women's, co-rec and faculty heats. The first three places in each heat and fastest time were given awards, with the exception of the faculty category which didn't give a fastest time award, Ramm said.

Bruce Lutz and Brian Heck, KU students, were the winners in the men's division and took the fastest overall time.

"It feels really good to win," Lutz said. "It's nice to come out and maintain the winning tradition for KU."

A few of the original 13 teams had to drop out of the race, either because they didn't make it to the contest or their boats were damaged, he said. A team is composed of two-members.

But the day didn't belong to KU alone.

A K-State team took first place in the construction contest judged by the ACI.

This portion of the contest is based on design, finish and constuction techniques, said Ron Hirsch, senior in civil engineering.

Hirsch and Matt Myers, senior in civil engineering, designed and completed most of the work on the two K-State canoes.

The primary construction of the canoes is concrete, but other material such as styrofoam beads, inert ceramic beads and a fiberglass material is mixed in, Hirsch said.

Although K-State did not place in the races, Hirsch thought the canoeists were having fun.

"We're lucky to have good weather," Hirsch said. "Even though we're getting our butts kicked by KU, everybody seems to be enjoying themselves."

In addition to KU placing in the events, Arkansas State University took first place in the women's and co-rec categories.

Departments win national awards

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

The Division of Continuing Education was named a triple winner by the National University Continuing Education Association at its April meeting.

The NUCEA presented a creative programming award to K-State's Department of Grain Science and Industry, a faculty service award to Stephen Bollman, professor of human development and family studies, and a marketing and promotion honorable mention to K-State's 1987 summer high school programs catalog.

J.G. Ponte Jr., professor in grain science, developed a workshop to address growing interest in ethnic and specialty breads. The program featured the history and tradition of French bread making in addition to the technical production aspects.

The second award, presented to Bollman, is an award given in recognition of faculty members' contributions to continuing education.

Bollman has worked seven years with the continuing education conference office coordinating the annual "Working With Families Seminar." He was also co-director of the Governor's Conference on Education for Parenthood 1984.

The summer high school programs catalog 1987 won the third honor as it was awarded honorable mention in its category. The catalog, "The Big Scoop," was designed by Valerie Spicher, university publications, and was edited by Melinda Sinn, continuing education.

In addition, the K-State Division of Continuing Education received the Region 5 NUCEA award for a New Credit Program. Earlier this year, an associational regional award for new credit programs was given to K-State's food science program.

The division conducts more than 2,300 programs and activities each year, and serves more than 50,000 people. In cooperation with many campus departments, it provides credit and noncredit courses and programs to people of all ages.

"Continuing education is a vehicle for people to take the University's resources to people who are not able to attain them at the normally scheduled times or in the usual settings," said Melinda Sinn, public information coordinator for continuing education.

Boy causes no hassle in church

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A woman whose 9-year-old son is under court order not to attend Grace Episcopal Cathedral avoided renewing a confrontation with church officials Sunday by attending services at another Topeka Episcopal church.

Sheryl Geartz, her son Jason and her 7-year-old daughter, returned to St. David's Episcopal Church about three miles from the cathedral, where they had gone a week earlier when cathedral officials turned them away at the door after going to court because of Jason's alleged disruptive antics in church.

Parishoners at St. David's said the family sat near the front of the church and that Jason caused no disruptions. After the service, the family stayed for a brunch sponsored by the church's senior youth group.

Jason came to the door of the church and waved to the four television cameras positioned outside St. David's after the service.

Later, when the family left, Geartz told reporters she had decided not to try to attend the cathedral again this Sunday because she wanted a "stable church environment" for the children.

She said she drove with her children to the cathedral Sunday morning, but changed her mind about trying to go inside because the children were "frightened" by the people, cameramen and reporters outside the cathedral. Instead, she said, she took them to St. David's.

She was non-commital when asked if she might in the future make another attempt to enter Grace Cathedral, but said she was not abandoning her effort to be allowed back there with Jason. She said she plans to contact clergymen and lay people at the cathedral to continue discussions.

"I'm going to attend St. David's, but I'm not going to give up my fight to go back to Grace Cathedral," said Geartz, who is divorced.

She said she wasn't angry with cathedral officials. "I have compassion for them," she said. "They're just not doing God's will."

Asked if she was contemplating retaliatory court action, she replied, "The Bible clearly states that church matters should be settled in church. It would be hypocritical for me to go to court."

Geartz and Jason face a court hearing Friday on a petition by the state Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services which is related to an investigation of allegations that his behavior has caused problems at the public elementary school he now attends, including biting and kicking other children.

Geartz has confirmed that Jason attended preschool at the Menninger Foundation, and also spent about two years as an in-patient at Topeka State Hospital, before she removed him last September. She has said he is emotionally disturbed.

The Rev. James A. Hammond, rector of St. David's read a statement from the pulpit during Sunday's service.

In it, he said all are welcome at St. David's, but that proper behavior is expected. He also said he had initiated a 90-day moratorium on transfers of memberships between St. David's and Grace Cathedral. At the end of those 90 days, Hammond said, he will review the moratorium and continue it for another 90 days or terminate it.

Hammond said the halt to transfers was being imposed "in order to provide continuing stability within the Episcopal community of faith here in Topeka."

The Very Rt. Rev. Robert R. Shahan, dean of Grace Cathedral, had told reporters a week earlier, when Geartz and her children were denied entrance to the cathedral, that a lawsuit was filed after much soulsearching and only as a last resort.

He said Jason's disruptive behavior, which church officials have said included throwing spitballs at parishioners, talking loudly and tearing hymnal pages, had caused members of the cathedral not to attend church and others to attend services at times other than when the Geartzes came.

Geartz and her children had attended the cathedral about seven months when the church sought and obtained a temporary restraining order in Shawnee County District Court.

Hammond said in his statement, "we expect and will demand of all persons at all times individual behavior and personal demeanor appropriate to the contexts and settings in which they may find themselves in this place."

"I wish to make it very clear," Hammond added, "that St. David's Church, under my leadership, will make no effort whatsoever to expoit the unhappy circumstance in which Gace Cathedral through, in my judgment, no fault of its own currently finds itself."

A handful of church officials waited at the front door of Grace Cathedral Sunday morning until about 15 minutes into the service, then went inside when they concluded Geartz and her children were not coming. Four television crews and other reporters also waited outside the cathedral.

The newsmen then went to St. David's, where members of the congregation said Geartz and the children arrived early for the 10 a.m. service and sat through it without incident.

"They wiggled and squiggled just like kids do, but there were others that caused more trouble than they did," said Bill Stinchcomb, a St. David's member.

"There were no disruptions. There were a few babies crying but that was about it," said Ceil Marshall, another St. David's parishoner who just completed a three-year term on its vestry. "As an ex-school teacher, I know some children are disruptive."

System assists data use

By The Collegian Staff

Geographical information is important to more people than just geographers, according to a consultant who spoke Friday to geography students and faculty members.

Jeffery M. Young, senior consultant for Program Administration Group in Omaha, delivered his lecture "A Research Agenda for GIS Practitioners."

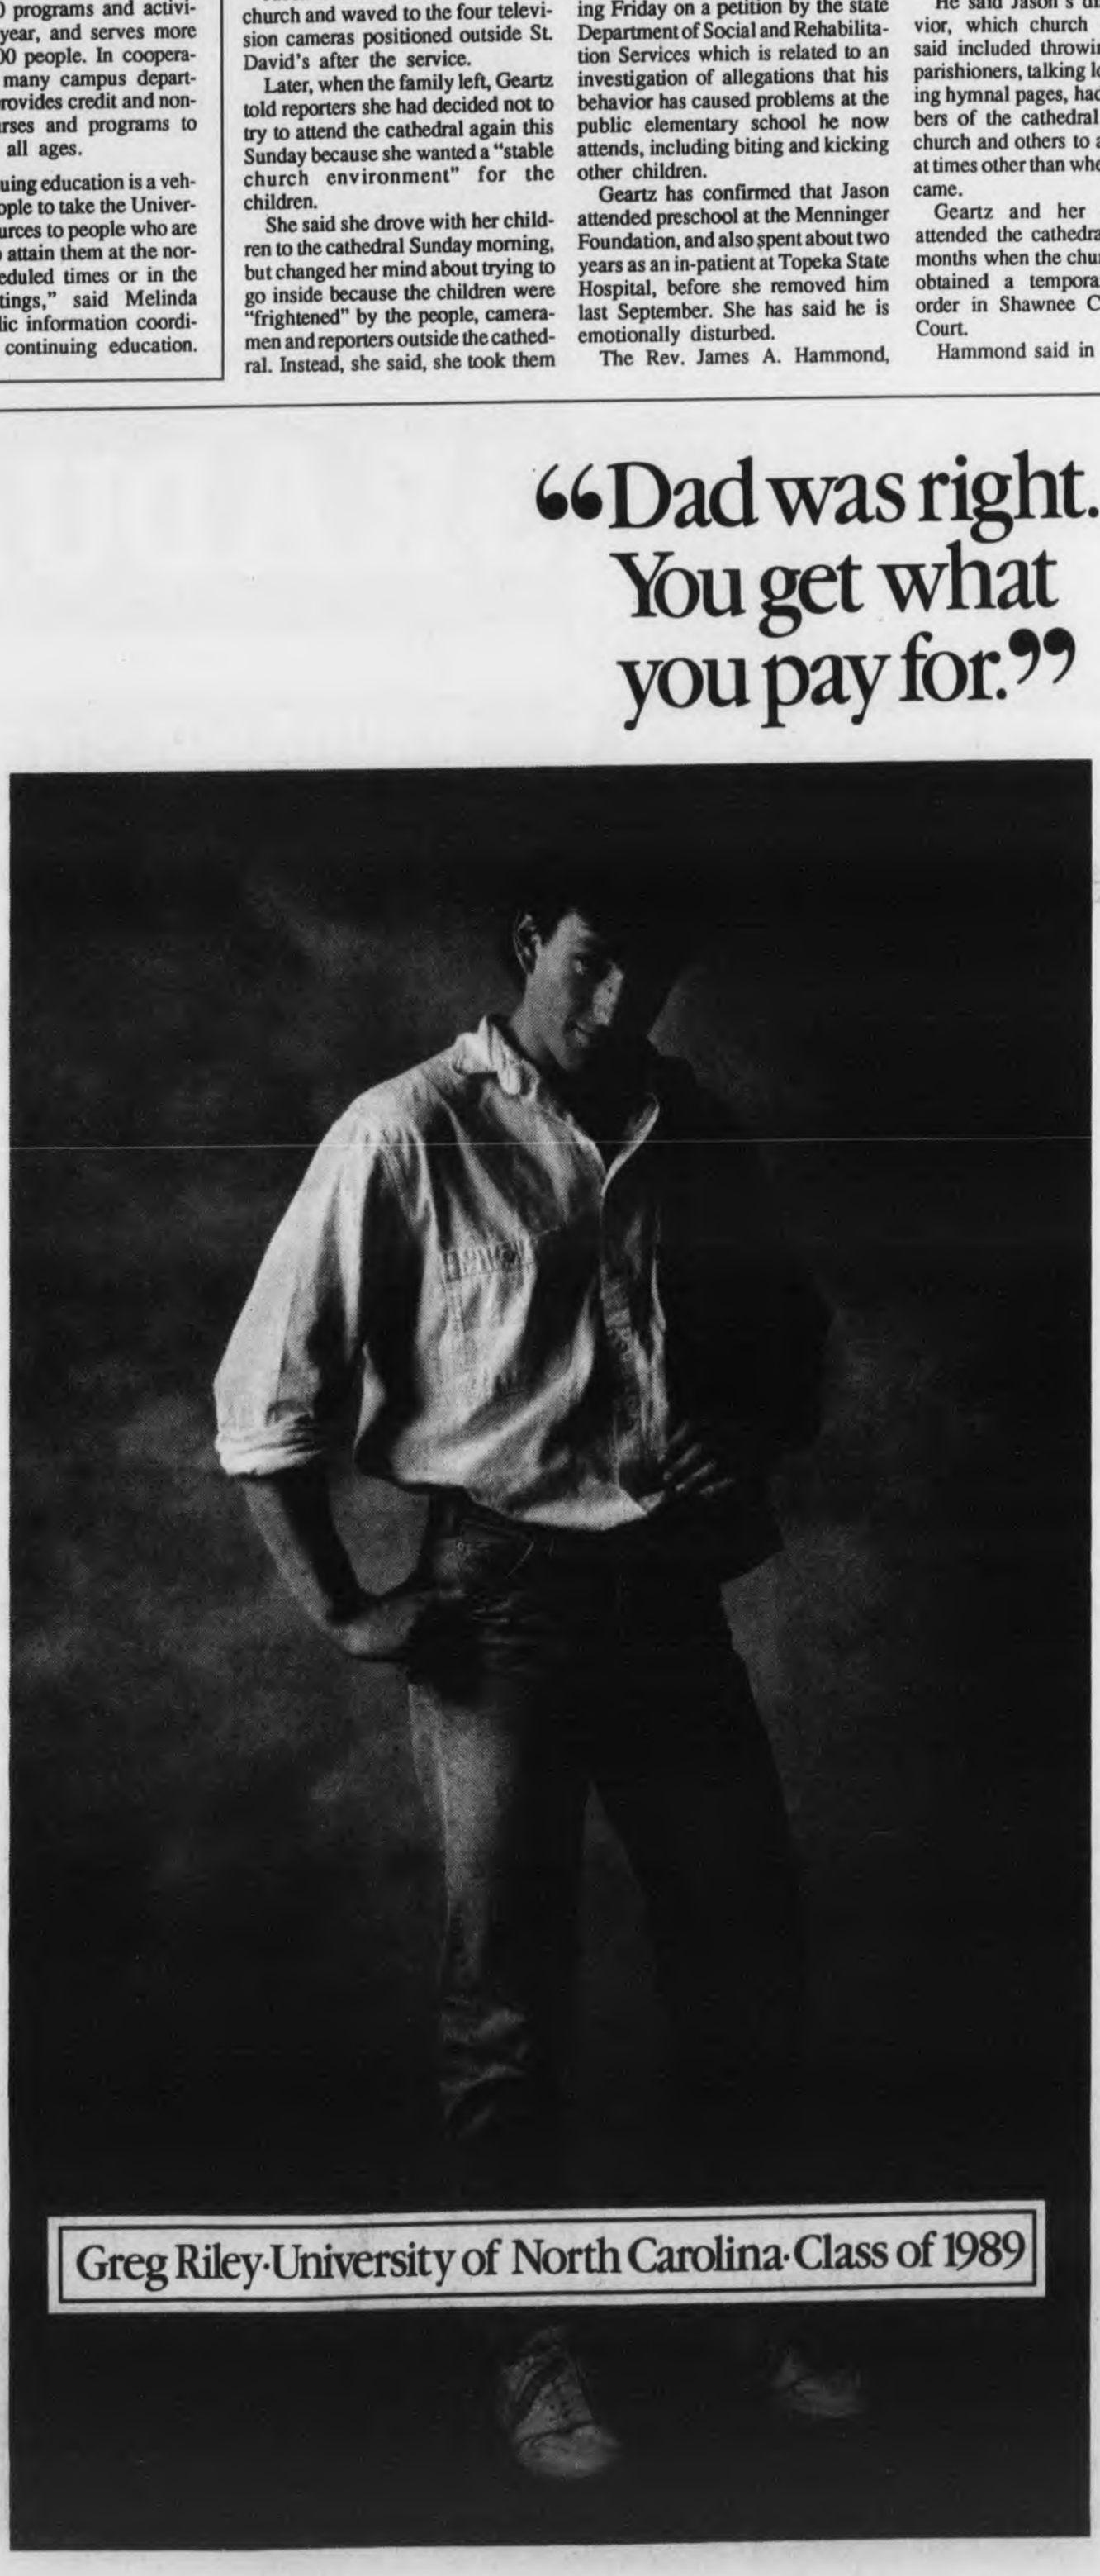
A Geographic Information System can give all kinds of information about a particular site for a variety of uses, Young said.

"This system could locate and identify a manhole in a city with 30,000 manholes and 50,000 sewer lines and give an exact address of where it is located," Young said.

Almost any kind of business can use and benefit from a GIS, Young said. Police departments could even use the system.

"If there was a series of robberies in a city, the GIS could locate the position of each robbery and connect any locations they have in common. This could give the police an idea where the next robbery may occur," Young said.

The system could also help cities that are looking for an automated method of handling geographical information without a bunch of paper work, Young said.



"You can have all the data in the world, but without the high quality of the GIS it will just make the job harder," Young said.

Young graduated cum laude with a bachelor's degree in geography from Lock Haven State College and a master's degree in geography from Arizona State University.

Roth's solo concert sets crowd 'ablaze'

By Judd Annis
Collegian Reviewer

Everybody's favorite gigolo was in Kansas City, Mo. Friday night to put on a barn-burner of a concert.

The show featured ex-Van Halen frontman David Lee Roth, Steve Vai on guitar, keyboardist Brett Tuggle and Greg Bissonette and his brother Matt on drums and bass respectively. The group cranked out a powerful show for a surprisingly small Kemper Arena crowd.

Although the band opened the show with "The Bottom Line" and "Hot Dog and a Shake," both from their latest album "Skyscraper," it was "Ain't Talkin' 'Bout Love," from Van Halen's first album that really set the crowd ablaze.

Concert Review

Roth then delighted his younger fans with "Just Like Paradise" and "Knucklebones" from "Skyscraper."

Taking a short breather, Roth shared with the crowd his feelings for "the blues," a style of music he is exploring more closely since his split with Van Halen. Donning a flat, brimmed hat, the blond star sang Frank Sinatra's "Easy Street," a song that appeared on Roth's solo LP "Crazy From The Heat."

With added intensity, Roth quickly leaped into "Hot For Teacher," featuring the skin-pounding barrage of Greg Bissonette, followed by "Stand Up."

"On Fire," the second of three songs performed from Van Halen's first album, brought older Roth fans to their feet and built excitement for the title cut from the current album, featuring Roth descending by a cable from the monstrous light rigging above the stage.

Roth's trademark, "Just A Gigolo," followed by "Goin' Crazy" and "Yankee Rose" from his first album, "Eat 'Em and Smile," prepared the crowd for the riotous climax.

A 14-year veteran of arena rock, Roth delivered the knock-out by slipping off stage and to the back of the arena in the darkness as his bandmates played the national anthem. He then climbed a rope ladder to a miniature boxing ring suspended from the roof.

As the ring lowered slowly, Roth sang "Panama" as he ducked and dodged with prize-fighter dexterity. Fans positioned at the front of the stage promptly left their posts and ran to the other end of the arena to greet him.

Roth then climbed onto a 20-foot yellow surfboard, and sang "California Girls" as he "floated" above the floor. The crowd, following the singer back to the stage, was ecstatic.

The band played two encores, "You Really Got Me," and "Jump," featuring Roth's patented toe-touching, mid-air splits, putting the icing on an already sweet cake.

After a long career as the main man for one of America's most popular and successful rock'n'roll bands, Roth still has the ability to energize any audience. Constantly crouching and posing in surfing stances, with dozens of Broadway dance-line high kicks and a somersault or two, he remains the most acrobatic, dynamic and thrilling performer in rock today.

Although the concert was definitely the "Dave Show," no glory should be taken away from the other members of the band, who make up Roth's accomplished foundation.

Guitar wizard Steve Vai, graduate of the New York City Julliard School of Music and former member of Frank Zappa's band and Alcatrazz, was amazing all night. Emitting animal grunts and squeals from various guitars while playing both left- and right-handed, Vai is obviously just beginning to show his stuff.

Drummer Greg Bissonette previously performed with trumpetist Maynard Ferguson, a famous jazz musician.

Warm-up act Poison, which actually hasn't stopped touring since the release of its initial LP last year, is busy plugging a soon-to-be-released second album, as well as becoming an enjoyable band to watch.

Opening shows for various groups have given this flash/glam rock group much needed experience for future headline status, while lead singer Bret Michaels, whose delivery is similar to "Diamond Dave" Roth, has seemingly learned a bit from watching his mentor. A rendition of Kiss' "Rock and Roll All Night" received the most enthusiastic response for the group.

Cinco De Mayo

Raoul's Celebration

May 5, 6 & 7th, 1988

215 S. Seth Childs 539-3410

CINCO DE MAYO

Parades, festivals, and dances mark the anniversary of the battle of Puebla in which Mexican troops defeated invading French forces. Festive, upbeat promotions tie in with this traditionally colorful day.

And what better way to celebrate Cinco de Mayo than eating out Mexican. Raoul's Escondido is one of west side's favorites.

And don't forget barbecuing. After all, May is also National Barbecue Month. We are now offering smoked meats. See our ad on "Pig On The Run."

Jackson faults opponent; Dukakis condemns policy

By The Associated Press

Jesse Jackson, who has been sharpening his rhetoric as he slips in the delegate race, vowed Sunday to "turn up the heat" on Democratic presidential rival Michael Dukakis. But Dukakis, looking toward a fall face-off with Vice President George Bush, made the Reagan administration his chief target.

Bush, his grip on the GOP nomination secure, was in Washington Sunday, with no campaign appearances planned. However, he had a week of campaign appearances planned beginning today.

Both Jackson and Dukakis were campaigning Sunday in Ohio, which holds its primary on Tuesday, with 159 Democratic delegates at stake. Indiana and the District of Columbia hold their primaries the same day, with delegate prizes of 79 and 16 respectively.

Jackson was talking up his chances in Ohio, despite a series of losses to Dukakis in recent weeks and polls indicating he lagged far behind in the state.

"Our campaign of hope continues," Jackson told backers at a Baptist church in suburban Cleveland. "Our support base gets broader and bigger every day."

Up until recently, Dukakis and Jackson had exchanged few harsh words. But Jackson told supporters he was ready to "turn up the heat" for the rest of the primary season, which wraps up with big primaries in New Jersey and California on June 7.

Jackson derided Dukakis' cool technocrat image, saying: "The kitchen is clean and cool. Ain't nothing cooking."

Jackson was also airing ads Sunday and today in Ohio suggesting that Dukakis would be reluctant to make the kind of fundamental changes he himself advocates.

"Bush wants to stay the course. Dukakis wants to manage the damage," the ads say. "Jackson wants to change the course of America."

And Jackson insisted that he, not Dukakis, has set the campaign agenda with, among other things, his anti-drug drive.

"I am pulling him," Jackson said. "I'm not pushing folks behind me. I'm leading them."

Legislature struggles

Wrap-up session may be longest in history

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Stymied in its search for consensus on tax revision, the dominant issue of the 1988 session, the Legislature bogged down again Sunday night in its effort to adjourn a wrap-up session that threatened to become the longest in history.

The House did score a breakthrough on legislation designed to alleviate an overcrowding problem in the state prison system.

But with no break in the impasse over tax revision, it appeared virtually certain the wrap-up session would continue today, the sixth day. It took lawmakers until Monday afternoon to finish the 1987 wrap-up session. At the pace a compromise on tax revision was being worked out Sunday night, that record definitely was in jeopardy.

Sunday's session was the fifth on the Sabbath during the past six years for the Legislature during its wrap-up sessions.

The wrap-up began two decades ago as a special extension of the regular session to consider vetoes by the governor. It has evolved into a marathon during which controversial issues finally are decided after 90 days of procrastination.

The House passed, 98-27, one bill that provides funding for increasing inmate capacity in the penal system by developing a work facility at Hutchinson and enlarging three other institutions at Ellsworth, Stockton and Norton. It also approved another bill, 114-11, that contains $750,000 to plan construction of a new state prison.

Those two bills went to the Senate in late evening for debate and votes there.

Lawmakers still were groping Sunday night for a way to return part of an income tax windfall and for agreement on how much of the windfall to give back to taxpayers who paid it as a result of federal tax changes. Since Kansans now pay the federal government less, they have more take-home income for the state to tax.

Two Johnson County legislators, Sen. Bud Burke of Leawood and Rep. Bob Vancrum of Overland Park, both Republicans, outlined a plan at an unusual informational meeting for both House and Senate members late in the day, and appeared to sell at least part of their proposal to the Senate.

The tax conference committee was expected to meet in very late evening Sunday to add deduction of federal taxes on state returns, a key provision in the Burke-Vancrum plan.

Nicotine may be addictive

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An upcoming report by Surgeon General C. Everett Koop will declare that nicotine is an addictive drug, the head of the federal Office of Smoking and Health said Sunday.

Dr. Ronald M. Davis said he hopes the report will spur the public to understand that cigarette smoking "is more than just a simple habit."

"We have to at least give it the serious attention that we do for the illicit drugs such as heroin, cocaine, etc.," Davis said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

Government officials have been saying for years that nicotine is an addictive drug "just like cocaine, just like heroin and other drugs that people commonly accept as addicting."

"But this report, which will be released in a few weeks, looks at the evidence in far greater detail than we've ever looked at before. It compares this drug nicotine versus other drugs," he said.

The report would be the first by a federal official with as high a rank as the surgeon general to declare nicotine addictive.

Davis noted that the 1986 surgeon general's report on smoking, which documented the health hazards of passive smoking, accelerated the trend toward restricting or banning smoking in public places and in the work place.

Wrap-up session stalled

Filibuster ends tax reform debate

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House debate on a tax revision plan tied up the Kansas Legislature's drive for adjournment Monday night, with opponents threatening a filibuster-type delay most of the night unless the bill was reworked.

The Legislature's wrap-up session already was the longest in history, and the lengthy House debate raised the possibility of adjournment and a reconvening this morning.

By 10:30 p.m., the chamber had debated for two hours without taking a vote on a motion to reject a compromise agreed upon by a conference committee in late afternoon. If that motion was defeated, the House planned to vote on adopting the conference report, which would send the plan to Gov. Mike Hayden.

However, opponents said they would keep talking to block that vote, some vowing to take all night if necessary to force the leadership to return the bill to conference. They wanted to return more of an income tax windfall to taxpayers than the $35 million in the plan, and they also wanted to retain as a deduction on state returns the amount of federal taxes paid.

Monday was the sixth day of the wrap-up session, which began last Wednesday, and a record was set at 3:23 p.m. for this being the longest overtime session. The 1987 Legislature adjourned its wrap-up session at that time on Monday a year ago.

A joint conference committee reached agreement at 5:20 p.m. on an income tax overhaul plan, and the Senate approved it, 22-17, after only a half-hour debate in early evening.

That sent the conference committee report to the House, which had not debated tax revision since last year, when a bill was passed by that body and sent to the Senate — where it was allowed to die in the 1987 session.

The plan approved by the Senate basically is the one endorsed by Gov. Mike Hayden, but with slightly less money being returned to taxpayers than he proposed last week.

Store responds to letters

Publications removed from Kwik Shop

By Steven Zadina
Collegian Reporter

As a result of pressure from students at Manhattan Christian College, adult magazines will no longer be sold at the Manhattan Kwik Shop.

The decision to pull the magazines from the shelves was made Monday morning at the Kwik Shop division office in Topeka, said Joy McGilton, division manager of Kwik Shop stores.

McGilton said it was a business decision and will only affect the Manhattan store.

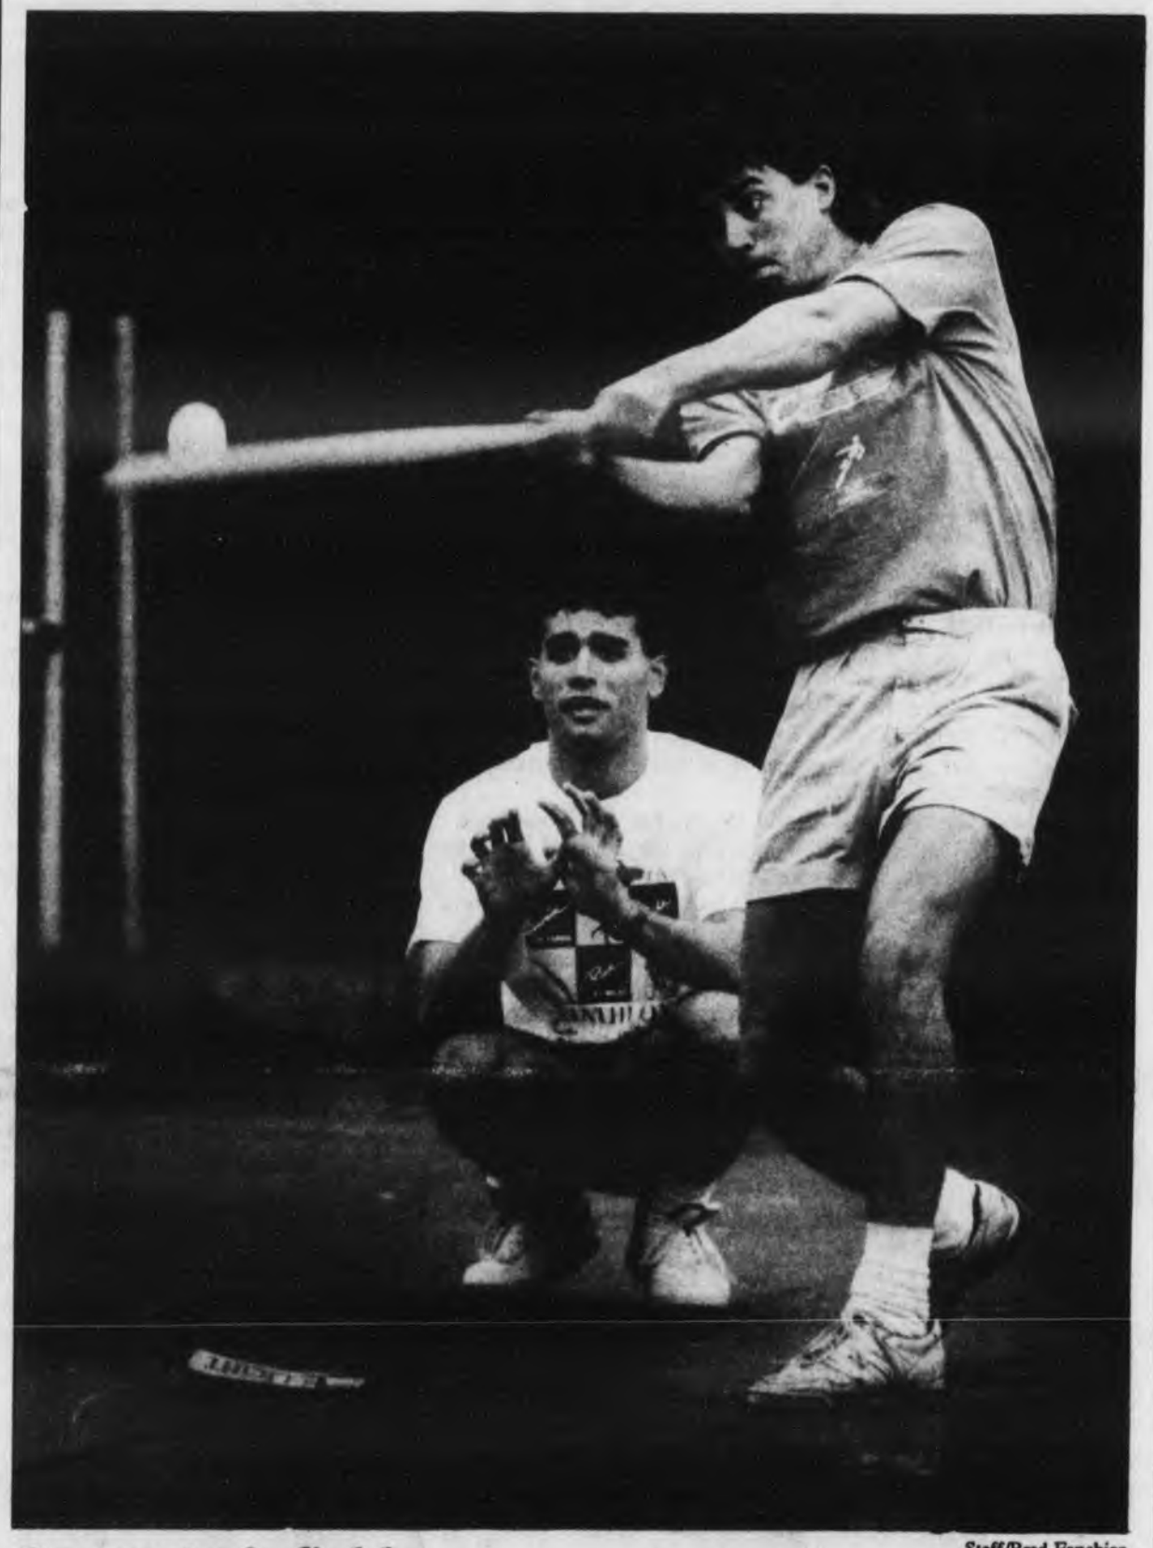
Kathy Tijerina, manager of the Manhattan Kwik Shop, said, "We got a couple of letters here from Manhattan Christian College students about us selling the magazines. We didn't get any letters from any members of the administration or the faculty. All I know is we're not carrying them anymore."

"I can say beyond a shadow of a doubt that none of our administrators have taken any action like that," said Dennis Glenn, vice president for academic affairs at MCC. "The college could be characterized as anti-pornography, but that is no secret."

Tijerina said she didn't know when letters started coming from the students or who those students were, but that the store had received protests as late as last Friday.

Travis Strong, MCC student body president, said it didn't surprise him that students protested to the store. He characterized students at the school as being against pornography.

"I wouldn't put it past students to do anything like that," Strong said.



Strong said the letters may have come from supporters of the college, but there wasn't any student organization behind the letters. Since all student organizations report to his office, he said he would have known about any such letters being sent.

"The only reason I could see why that store was singled out was its close proximity to the college," Strong said. Kwik Shop is located at 1337 Anderson Ave., across the street from MCC.

When the 7-11 store, formerly located at 1455 Anderson Ave., was opened, there was a clause in the contract stating that no alcohol or pornographic material could be sold on the premises.

Shortly after that, the Kwik Shop opened and sold adult magazines. Strong said that he believed that this may have hurt the business at 7-11.

McGilton said she did not think the decision not to sell the magazines at the Manhattan store would hurt business.

Hospital collapses; 14 bodies recovered

By The Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — A new wing of a children's hospital collapsed Monday in Kashmir, and at least 14 people died in a crush of bricks and concrete. Dozens of children, their moans growing fainter, were feared trapped.

"There are fewer and fewer signs of life," one official said. Rescuers were pumping oxygen and drinking water through the debris in hopes of sustaining any survivors.

The three-story building disintegrated shortly after sunrise in Jammu, winter capital of the northern state of Kashmir.

The wing, completed in 1985, had been lined with cracks. An older wing remained standing.

More than 16 hours after the building came tumbling down, Indian army rescue teams were trying to remove the debris by hand and with cranes, but hopes were fading. Some rescuers pulled severed limbs from the wreckage.

"I heard children moaning in the morning, but in late evening there was nothing, a kind of strange silence amid the noise of rescue work," said Kashmir Times reporter Arun Joshi. "They may be dying."

By evening, 14 bodies and 29 survivors had been found. Some news reports placed the death toll as high as 30.

"But the worst is yet to come. At least 50 children and their parents or attendants are trapped on the first floor," Joshi said in a telephone call to New Delhi. "It is a terrible sight up here."

Joshi said a total of at least 75 children and their parents or attendants were caught in the hospital.

A police spokesman in Jammu, 340 miles north of New Delhi, said the collapse was caused by a weak foundation in the new wing of the hospital.

"The entire new wing has come down. Much of it has just gone inside the earth," spokesman Satish Gupta said.

The government ordered an investigation, and three civil engineers who were responsible for construction were suspended.

Gupta said it will take at least 24 hours to remove the debris.

"Until then it is all guesswork, but we fear the toll will go up," he said.

The new wing, which housed three wards, collapsed at 6:30 a.m. Joshi said the wing contained 51 beds, but some were shared by two children.

Israeli troops enter Lebanon

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli troops supported by helicopter gunships and tanks thrust into southeastern Lebanon Monday in search of Palestinian guerrillas, police reported.

Israel said its troops had moved into Israel's self-declared security zone in southern Lebanon.

"The army is combing the security zone because of increasing attempts to infiltrate into Israel for purposes of murder and hostage-taking," an Israeli military communique said.

It did not say how long the operation would last or how many troops were involved. The communique was issued by the military in the northern Israeli town of Metulla.

Lebanese police said reports from the Arkoub region in the foothills of Mount Hermon indicated at least three suspected guerrillas had been seized by the Israelis in the late evening operation.

The area is in the western sector of the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley.

"We have no information yet about the size of the attacking force or the distance it covered in the penetration," said a spokesman at Lebanon's police headquarters in Beirut. He was not identified in line with police regulations.

He declined comment on a report by NBC News that said about 2,000 Israeli troops had crossed into Lebanon in search of Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas and their strongholds.

Last week, Palestinian guerrillas entered northern Israel from southeastern Lebanon in two different incursions. Five guerrillas and two soldiers were killed in fights with Israeli army patrols.

There have been 12 infiltrations or attempted infiltrations since Nov. 25, when a Palestinian guerrilla landed a hang glider near a military base and killed six soldiers before being shot to death.

Israeli officials said recent cross-border raids probably were linked to the five months of anti-Israeli demonstrations in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

An Arab youth died Sunday when he was electrocuted while climbing a utility pole at the West Bank village of Beit Wazan. Hospital officials reported relatives of the victim, Nidal Abdulhak, 16, said he was killed when Israeli troops ordered him to climb the pole to remove a

Farm group prepares for lawsuit

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

As part of its efforts to file a lawsuit against K-State, the Kansas chapter of the American Agricultural Movement is currently investigating K-State's Agricultural Experiment Station to determine where research money is being spent.

The AAM is considering filing a lawsuit against K-State because it believes the University is violating the Hatch Act by conducting research that allegedly benefits corporate farms rather than small, family-owned farms, said Stephen Anderson, AAM member.

The K-State Agricultural Experiment Station was created under the Hatch Act of 1888 to provide information to Kansas farmers.

"K-State is destroying water, soil and the family," Anderson said. "The low cost-low input options of production have been abandoned."

"'Agriculture 2000' advocates the use of chemicals, which large farms need, but small farms can't afford," he said.

"Agriculture 2000" is a plan published by K-State concerning the future of the experiment station.

Kurt Feltner, associate director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, said "Agriculture 2000" was "an opportunity for direct citizen input to determine the direction of K-State's research."

Thirty farmers and ranchers from across the state served on the committee to write the report, and they held meetings that were open to the public, Feltner said.

Most of the response to the report has been positive, he said.

"People have become specialists in one field and have lost sight of the big picture," Anderson said. "We can't spend money in just one area."

"The whole body has to be well to feel good," he said.

Anderson said it is "obnoxious" for K-State to ask for a salary increase for professors through the Margin of Excellence when farmers are going bankrupt.

The AAM has been investigating K-State since December 1987.

"We will file a suit by the end of the year, if we do file a suit," Anderson said, adding that the AAM wants "to take the time to do it right."

Richard Seaton, University attorney, said K-State has not been formally contacted by the AAM.

Arab youth electrocuted

JERUSALEM — A 16-year-old Arab was electrocuted while climbing a power pole with a Palestinian flag in the West Bank and the government on Monday closed an Arab weekly that it called a tool for terrorists.

Lt. Col. Ranaan Gissin, a military spokesman, said the army had opened a new detention center in Jerusalem for Palestinians under age 16.

Israeli military law in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip permits arrest and imprisonment of children aged 12-16. Gissin said the youngest detainees in the new center were 14.

In the Israeli-occupied West Bank, 16-year-old Nidal Abdulhak of Beit Wazan, two miles west of Nablus, died Sunday night in Al Ittihad Hospital, the army said.

Hospital officials quoted family members as saying he was electrocuted when following orders from soldiers to remove a Palestinian flag from the pole, but the army said Abdulhak apparently was trying to hang the red, green, black and white banner. Israel has outlawed the Palestinian flag.

134 arrested in Berlin rampage

BERLIN — About 400 leftists rampaged through a working class section of Berlin, smashing windows, erecting barricades and pelting police with rocks, officials said Monday.

Police said 134 people were arrested and 53 police officers injured in the violence in West Berlin's Kreuzberg district. But the city policemen's union said that 87 officers had been injured.

City officials said the violence late Sunday and early Monday was a sign of what officials could expect in September, when finance chiefs gather in West Berlin for a World Bank meeting.

"This was just a trial run for the World Bank meeting," city interior affairs chief Wilhelm Kewenig said.

Polish labor turmoil spreads

WARSAW, Poland — Lech Walesa proclaimed a strike Monday at the huge Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk, where Solidarity was born in 1980, in an escalation of the weeklong labor turmoil in communist Poland.

It was the fourth strike in Poland in a week, the worst wave of labor unrest since the government's Dec. 13, 1981, military crackdown on Solidarity.

Authorities were reported mounting a nationwide roundup of regional leaders of Solidarity.

A Solidarity communique signed by Walesa and issued late Monday said, "A strike wave is covering the country. They are not just local conflicts. They are across Poland because the cause is the economic crisis and the lack of convincing reform policies that would offer prospects for the future."

The Gdansk work stoppage in 1980 shook the communist government to its roots and gave rise to Solidarity, the first independent trade union federation in the Soviet bloc. Solidarity was suppressed and outlawed under martial law.

Rebels say they killed troops

NAIROBI, Kenya — Eritrean rebels said they shelled Ethiopia's second biggest port, Massawa, and killed 222 government troops in a battle near Asmara, the region's capital.

In a clandestine radio broadcast monitored Sunday in Nairobi, the Eritrean People's Liberation Front said it did not have full details of the Massawa attack but that "our combatants inflicted heavy losses."

The radio said front guerrillas fought government troops Friday at Bahri. The site is near Asmara, Ethiopia's second largest town, 673 miles north of the capital, Addis Ababa.

The government rarely comments on rebel claims and there was no other means of confirming the report.

Cremation, murder trial begins

WICHITA — Jury selection began Monday in the trial of a man charged with first-degree murder and aggravated kidnapping in the death of his ex-wife, whose body allegedly was cremated at a funeral home where he worked.

Randy Pioletti, 29, of Wichita, was charged in December in the death of Karen S. Baile, 32. He was arrested after allegedly leaving a bucket of human ashes in a friend's garage.

Investigators identified the ashes as Baile's remains.

Pioletti worked part-time as an usher at Lakeview Mortuary.

Baile disappeared after leaving to meet her ex-husband to Christmas shop for their daughter.

Following preliminary hearing testimony, a district judge suggested Pioletti could be charged with unauthorized cremation, which is a misdemeanor.

Policemen kill valuable dogs

HUTCHINSON — Police officers shot and killed a pair of valuable shar-pei dogs who were roaming the Kansas State Fairgrounds over the weekend and posing a threat to people, authorities said.

The dogs were shot Saturday, several hours after the owners reported to police that the animals were missing and urged officers not to shoot them.

"It's an unfortunate thing, but I don't know what else the officers could have done," Police Chief Jack Heidebrecht said Monday. "The dogs were vicious and were attacking people."

The owners, Francis and Paula Gay, said the dogs were not dangerous and that they had asked officers to let the family round up the dogs when they were found. The Gays said they paid $3,800 for the dogs when they bought them as puppies.

An employee of the fairgrounds, Dale Corkins, reported seeing the dogs on the grounds about 9 a.m. He said one of the dogs charged at him when he shouted at it. Three public events were being held at the fairgrounds at the time the dogs were roaming, police said.

The two officers who were dispatched to the fairgrounds were unaware the owners had urged police not to shoot the dogs. The animals were shot with 12-gauge shotguns, and when one of the animals ran off after being wounded, an officer killed it with a police revolver.

Union associate director chosen

A new associate director for the Union has been selected by Director Jack Sills and has already begun work.

Vera L. Carr will take over the business side of the Union which includes personnel, payroll, accounting and budget functions.

Carr had been associate director of finances at Rhode Island since 1977, and for one year served as acting director of the Memorial Union and the office of student activites.

She was named an honorary alumnus of the University of Rhode Island in 1986; received the "Excellence Award for Human Relations" from the committee of minority student affairs in 1983; and was named "Woman of the Year" for the South County Business and Professional Women's organization in 1981.

Honorary cleans up crossing

Members of Sigma Lambda Chi, a construction science honorary, spent Sunday morning cleaning up Pillsbury Crossing.

The Pillsbury Clean-up and Picnic has become a biannual event that promotes responsible use of the preserve.

The preserve was made available for public use by E.J. Frick, who donated the land to the Kansas Fish and Game Commission.

Heart Association to receive $6,500 from ninth Fite Nite

By The Collegian Staff

Organizers of the Sig Ep Fite Nite have one final punch to throw — a $6,500 punch.

The ninth annual Fite Nite, which was April 10-12, was the biggest ever, raising more than double the amount from previous years for the American Heart Association, said Danny Green, senior in marketing and chairman of the event.

The fraternity plans to present the donation Wednesday or Thursday, he said.

Green said that the donation, according to the Heart Association, will be the largest one this year from this region.

Green attributed the event's success to its being moved to Weber Arena, the new weight classification system used for participants with an open number of classes, and the opening of the classes to residence hall students.

"The change in the facility helped tremendously," he said.

By using the arena, the number of spectators that could attend the event increased from a few hundred to a "virtually unlimited" number.

About 1,500 people attended Fite Nite over the three nights.

The response to the event from students who live in residence halls was a good one, Green said. Not only were there a large number of boxers from the halls, but there were also more fans from the halls attending the event.

The event's profits resulted from entry fees, promotions, spectator fees and T-shirt sales, Green said. For the first time, shirts were sold to the public. In the past, he said, the fraternity only printed shirts for its members.

"We thought this year if we made them cool enough, other people would want them, too," Green said.

Although there were some mistakes made in planning the event, Green said he still believed it went over well.

"It seems like it's one of the more popular philanthropies," he said.

However, the challenge of filling Weber every year is somewhat intimidating.

"It was scary, but it turned out OK," he said.

Republican group passes away

By The Collegian Staff

SGA registration removed

Even though the Republican Party is reaching its high point with a presidential nomination due this summer for the November election, its K-State affiliate has reached its low.

The College Republicans at K-State have ceased to exist this year as a Student Governing Association registered club.

The decline of the organization had been coming for quite a while, said Walt Debacker, the organization's president last year and senior in finance.

"The main area you get active in is the local campaign. There's really not much national campaigning done in Kansas," he said. "And most of the people here are not from Riley County and it is very hard to get these people to dive into those races.

"For some reason, the people coming into the college weren't that interested, or they weren't that interested to become active in (College Republicans).

"From what I hear, the same trends have happened in most any type of political organization at universities everywhere," he said.

"There's really not much national campaigning done in Kansas."
—Walt Debacker, former president, College Republicans

Ed Frankenberg, who was a member last year, said he plans to reorganize the College Republicans in the fall.

There are still people on campus who used to be in the College Republicans who want to see it active again, he said.

"Since it is an election year, I am going to try to get something going for the Bush campaign," Frankenberg said.

For the time being, Frankenberg said he hopes that those interested in the College Republicans will stay in touch with him until he is able to recruit new members in the fall.

Summer workshop participants cut housing department costs

By The Collegian Staff

As a way to offset costs during the summer, the Department of Housing uses residence halls to house students participating in summer workshops.

"(The residence halls) are completely self-supportive," said Thomas Frith, director of the Department of Housing. "It costs money to have the buildings standing — insurance, maintainance and such. If we can recover some of the money through having these groups stay, students can pay less during the regular school months."

The residence halls only house about 200 to 300 students during the summer months, Frith said.

"It's incredibly cheap to sub-let an apartment during the summer," Frith said. "We even have hall staff doing it."

A room in a residence hall for the summer is about $500. A single room costs about $40 more, Frith said.

But besides planning for this summer, students should start planning for the fall semester.

Already 240 more residence hall contracts have been turned in for the fall than were turned in at this time last spring, Frith said.

"It's a good idea to turn in a contract before leaving this semester if you want a place to stay this fall," Frith said.

"People should start thinking ahead like they did in the past at K-State," Frith said. "They used to have to reserve their residence hall rooms before they left for the summer. This fall we'll be close to full."

K-State's future plans more than idle wishing

Did you ever sit around before Christmas and look through the Christmas catalog trying to decide what sort of goodies you wanted? Sure, you knew you weren't going to get even half of what you circled in the old wish book, but it was great to give Santa Claus and the parents a place to start.

Maybe that roughly describes what Facilities Planning does. The officials decide what they would do with K-State if they had gobs of money and nothing better to do with it.

It sounds like a good time. You can imagine K-State with reflecting pools, parking garages, no traffic problems and beautiful classrooms, but the Facilities Planning people are the ones who put it all down in black and white.

So, what good does it do? Is all of this time spent sketching utopian plans for K-State just more money wasted?

Surely the probability of the University spending the amount of money involved to do these renovations and improvements is slim. Are we just wasting our time and getting our hopes up?

Not really. Larry Garvin, director of Facilities Planning, should be commended for setting up a tentative, 30-year plan for K-State. The campus deans should be open to a presentation of it in the fall.

It is not a waste of their time, nor is it a waste of money. In fact, it could potentially save the University money in the long run.

By having a plan in mind, future renovations will be more thought out and, thus, more cost-efficient and beneficial to the parties involved. By taking the time to look at the University as a whole before problems arise, problems can be averted early — at much less cost to the University.

Sure, not everything in the plan is going to be done. But it is comforting to know that changes at K-State aren't done in a haphazard fashion and that someone somewhere has a master plan.

It's profit vs. principle in adult magazine war

It came down to profit vs. principle.

And profit won out.

Effective immediately, the Manhattan Kwik Shop will no longer sell adult magazines. The decision came largely because of letters the store had received from students at Manhattan Christian College, about two blocks down Anderson Avenue.

Kwik Shop management termed the removal of the magazines a "business decision," and that probably makes sense. After all, neither protests nor boycotting customers are good for profit.

And it's likely Kwik Shop eventually would have had both had it not removed the magazines from its shelves. However, Kwik Shop's action raises an enticing question: Will the Union remove the adult magazines it sells? It undoubtedly has received complaints about the magazines on its shelves.

And, in light of the recent controversy over a denial to allow a student to hang posters that contained the infamous "f-word," is the Union being hypocritical in its definition of morality?

Perhaps some answers from the Union should be forthcoming.

Jackson remains powerful

Bush, Dukakis avoid real issues

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

In a recent attempt at intelligent dialogue, Vice President George Bush has once again found himself in that all-too-familiar field of moronic contradiction.

On Saturday, Bush attacked both Jesse Jackson and Michael Dukakis for being against capital punishment. After stating that he favored the death penalty for drug dealers "who poison our kids with drugs," he accused both Democratic candidates of being soft on vital issues such as drugs and crime.

Funny, but I always thought America's drug problem was one of the most important issues of Jackson's campaign. I also was of the impression that Jackson had other important commitments as well — such as education, child care, nuclear disarmament and a desire to end apartheid, among other things.

Where does George Bush stand on these issues?

Can a man who cannot seem to remember anything of importance during the Iran-Contra scam — and who avidly defends Attorney General Edwin Meese III — be fit to be president of this country? Just because Ronald Reagan did it for two terms, is that excuse enough to prolong the agony of Reaganomics and similar policies?

Take the defense of Ed Meese, for example. Remember, this is the man who opposed the Miranda warnings and said that if a person is really innocent of a crime, they would not have been charged with it in the first place. Meese is also the subject of investigation by at least two independent counsels, for charges ranging from corruption involving a private corporation to incompetence in handling the Iran-Contra investigations.

Bush criticizes Dukakis and Jackson for terming Meese part of the "sleaze factor" in Reagan's presidency. "I've heard Dukakis and Jackson talk about 'sleaze.' What are they talking about? Who are they talking about?" Bush said. "Are they convicting someone before the system works?"

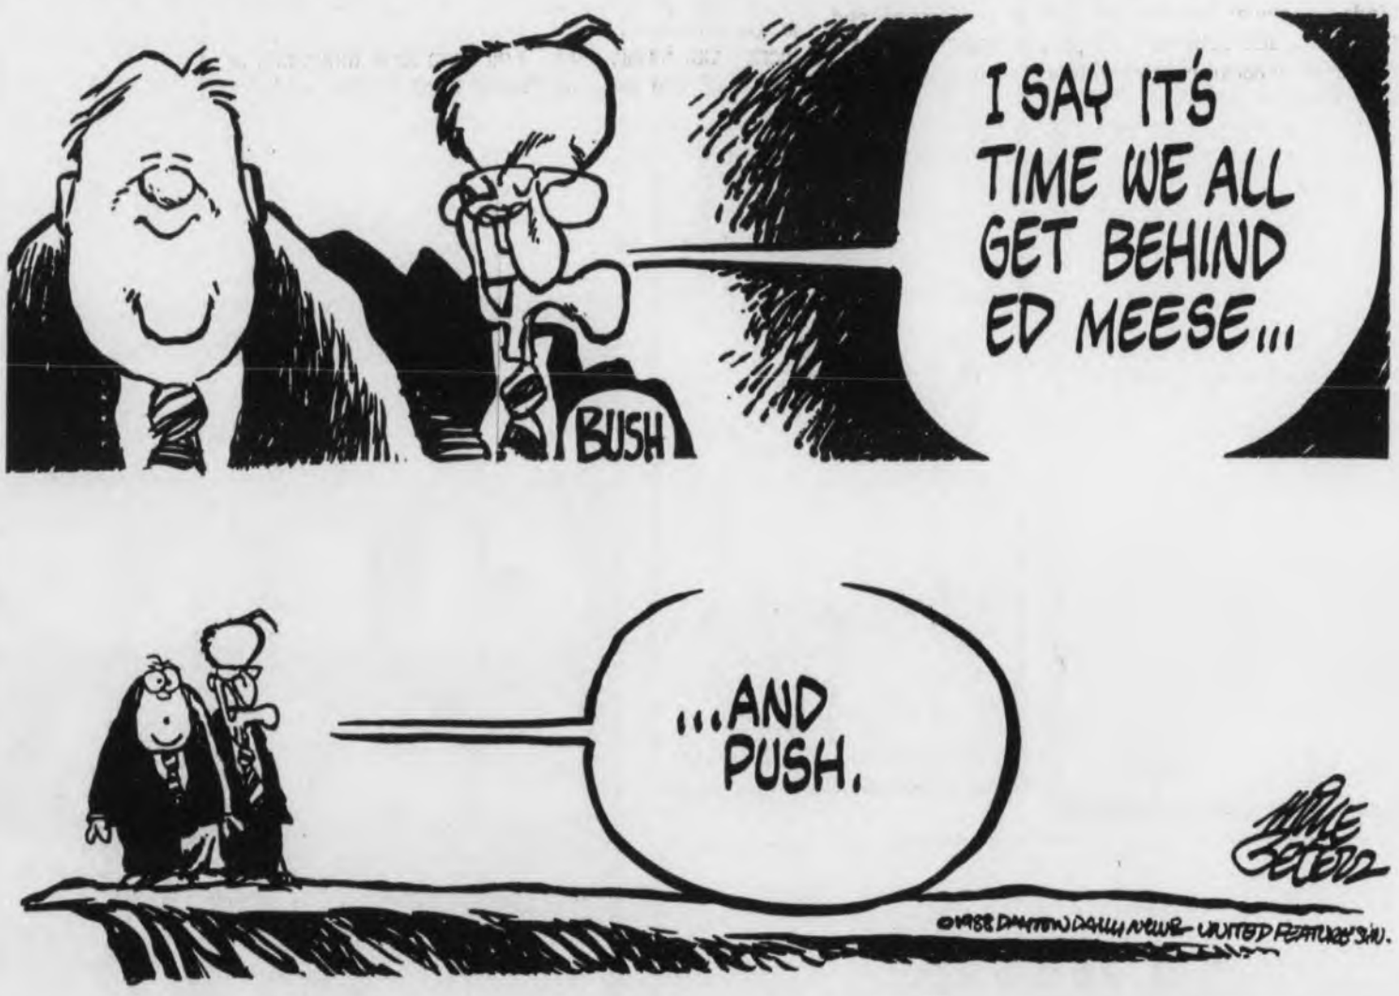
Funny, but I think I've heard that before.

Perhaps I may be considered cynical, biased or just plain strange, but the thought of Bush as our next president redefines the term "noxious" in my mental dictionary. Personal distaste or ideological slant aside, what does the man have to offer this country in the long-awaited post-Reagan era?

Accusing Democratic candidates of being soft on "drug kingpins" may increase his popularity, but what of his stance on other vital issues? What would Bush do with American foreign policy, education or even the drug problem? Will the death penalty for drug dealers solve the drug problem of America's youth, or will it just be another conservative overreaction with no consideration for human rights?

Has Bush shown any interest in committing American money to stop apartheid instead of supporting it, as has been the norm? Or what of Nicaragua, Panama or Israel? Will there be a change in American attitude toward these countries, or will Bush's presidency be aimed at preserving the status quo left to him by Reagan?

Sadly enough, a lack of real issues seems also to be the case with the front-running Democratic presidential candidate, Michael Dukakis. Both are moderates — Bush slightly right-of-center, and Dukakis a slightly liberal yuppie. Even sadder is the fact that Jackson — the only presidential candidate who possesses thought-provoking ideas and who calls for significant change — also threatens an establishment deeply entrenched in the ideology of another era.



With Dukakis expected to win today's Democratic primaries in Indiana and Ohio, Jackson's only hope is to pull an upset in California. If Jackson fails, it will be Bush and Dukakis running for president in November, in which case many Americans will have to pick between the lesser of two evils.

Whereas it may seem that the progressive ideals Jackson has been expounding will be absent from the Democratic platform, it does not have to be so. Jackson's Rainbow Coalition certainly represents the largest coherent block of voters within the Democratic Party. He is obviously the only candidate with a constituency built around a set of ideals consistently articulated and definitely at odds with the current administration.

I hope Dukakis will have the foresight to recognize the fact that without Jackson's followers, he will have little chance of winning the election. The only way to beat Bush will be to have a united Democratic Party, and the only way to achieve that will be to include Jackson's Rainbow Coalition, many of whom will not vote for Dukakis just because he is a Democrat.

In other words, in order to have any chance at all of becoming president, Dukakis will have to sufficiently modify his platform to convince Jackson followers that he actually intends to release this nation from the shackles of Reaganite conservatism.

Jackson is not finished as a candidate for the upcoming presidential election. He may not win the nomination, but he has a considerable group of followers who will definitely influence who is to be chosen as our next president. Campaigning for Jackson is not a useless effort; the more support he gets, the more likelihood there is that a significant change will occur in American politics.

Weak attempt

Editor,

Mr. Rizwan Mithani, in his column "Debating God's Existence" in the April 8 Collegian, made a weak attempt to discredit evolution and the fact that man has descended from more primitive forms of life (i.e. apes). In the process he made a monkey of himself.

George Gaylord Simpson describes scientific truth in his "Concession to the Improbable" (1978): "A fact is something that can be observed and that can be confirmed by the observations of others." Scientific theories about the past are based on verifiable facts (highly corroborated hypotheses) and they represent attempts to explain those facts.

People with little or no elementary scientific training who are not acquainted with the essential nature of science make up a large part of the general public. It is not surprising that people, such as Mr. Mithani, who prefer emotional stimulation to analytical thought frequently turn to hallucinogens, mysticism and religion — psychological crutches that replace self-discipline, responsibility and rational doubt.

Mr. Mithani draws an example from the writings of the famous 18th-century theologian William Paley when he asks, "Does not a watch imply a watchmaker?" Mithani's argument, just as Paley's, is made with passionate sincerity, but it is wrong, totally and utterly wrong.

How, then, did we come into existence? The answer, Darwin's answer, is by gradual, step-by-step transformations from simple beginnings, from primordial entities sufficiently simple to have come into existence by chance.

Mr. Mithani asks "Where is God?" We certainly have not "killed" him. How can you kill something that never existed in the first place? He blames the problems of our world, particularly the indiscriminant killing of millions of people, on a lack of religious belief in God. He should take a history lesson and count the number of millions that have died in the name of religion.

Life becomes a very precious thing when you accept the fact that you only live once — period.

Hiring process

Editor,

I am writing in response to an editorial that appeared in the April 25 Collegian about recruiting black faculty members. Yes, it is deplorable in an institution of this size to have only two black faculty members. Yes, correcting this situation should be a high priority. Yes, this is a key factor in recruiting black students.

However, I do want to shed some light on the difficulty of carrying out this top-priority item. I'm not sure students, and even some of the faculty, realize the hiring process the University must follow. I'll simplify:

When there is an opening, it must be advertised nationally. In response, interested persons send the department a copy of their vita with a cover letter. On the basis of information contained therein, the search committee must decide which of the applicants is most qualified, and then call and invite the finalists to interview. If the finalists agree to come, arrangements are made.

Only when the applicant arrives does the department know the color of his or her skin. It is illegal to ask, in any way, shape or form, the race of a job applicant. Granted, it is more obvious when the applicant has an oriental name, and so must be judged strictly on their qualifications for the position.

Qualifications — now isn't that a novel way to choose a faculty member? It would be just as wrong, in my opinion, to hire someone because their skin color is dark as it would to not hire him or her for this same reason. Until there are more qualified black applicants, it will be a long, slow process to build up the number of black faculty members on this, or any, campus.

Thanks, DuPont

Editor,

I would like to applaud DuPont's efforts to save the ozone layer. I feel the company has gone out of its way to help protect our future and the future of our children. When the depletion of the ozone layer is of top concern, this makes me feel good to see something being done about it instead of just talking about it. I would like to see other corporations which produce chlorofluorocarbons to take similar action and stop production of CFCs.

I would also like to see the government tax the production of CFCs so these companies would be forced to find a cheaper alternative. This would help save the ozone we have left. When an alternative to CFCs is found, we could all breathe a little easier. We just need more companies like Dupont to take action and help solve the problem of ozone depletion.

Word protection

Editor,

I was so happy to hear that Jennifer Dohl's obscene poster had been banned by the Union officials. If I had seen that word, I would have been devastated. Surely I have never seen it before, and my moral structure couldn't stand the strain. Just the sight of such an offense would turn me to a wicked life.

I am so grateful that someone else takes the responsibility to protect me from such devils as Dohl who put things like the F-word on posters trying to snare me from the righteous way. (Say, I noticed that her name has four letters too. Hmmmmmmm.)

Perhaps we should really complete this thing. Maybe we could monitor all the classes to make sure that no professor ever says one of those words. Better yet, let's rifle through the library and class reading lists to make sure that no "obscene" words are read by students or faculty. I rest comfortable knowing that I personally don't have to confront such major moral decisions or look at things that might offend me. I might have to react emotionally, or — even think. Then what kind of University would this be?

Redford makes 'Milagro' from bits, pieces

Developers, town fight war for beanfield in film

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

It all begins with an accident.

In a flurry of anger, Joe Mandragon kicks the control gate which regulates the water flow out of an irrigation ditch that runs by Milagro, N.M. The gate opens and water gushes down into an abandoned beanfield.

Mandragon gets an idea — he decides to ignore the state regulations that prohibit use of the irrigation trench and boldly plants his beanfield anyway, starting a series of events which came to be known as "The Milagro Beanfield War."

Directed by Robert Redford, "The Milagro Beanfield War" is a funny, charming, larger-than-life film about a dying New Mexico town and the huge land development company which plans to use the area around Milagro as a recreation resort for wealthy tourists.

Mandragon's beanfield is the start of a war which pits local townspeople against corporate giants.

Movie Review

Redford has assembled a cast with loads of talent and familiar faces. Sonja Braga, Christopher Walken, Melanie Griffith, Daniel Stern, Rueben Blades, John Heard, M. Emmit Walsh and others fill out a cast which shines in every scene. Very rarely has a town been created in which each citizen is so uniquely funny and intriguing.

Amarante, the oldest citizen of Milagro, wanders through the town talking to his pet pig or to a down-to-earth saint who wears a sombrero and plays a small squeeze box. Amarante quietly, but effectively, spreads the word of Mandragon's decision to open the irrigation gates that have been closed for years by law.

The town is naturally shaken by this disturbance of their quiet existence — torn between admiration for Mandragon and fear of what the land developers will do.

While watching "The Milagro Beanfield War," it becomes evident that Redford learned a lot while filming "The Natural." Once again a story is created which may seem somewhat ordinary or simplistic on the surface, but is in actuality much more.

Redford magically assembles the bits and pieces given to him and creates characters and situations that are much larger than life.

Milagro is not simply a small, dusty, sleepy town. It is the only hope the little man has left in his battle against corporate big shots. The citizens of Milagro are not just people, but instead they are all heroes in their own right.

The script is based upon the novel written by John Nichols. Nichols also co-wrote the screenplay, which undoubtedly accounts for a solid representation of the original text. Never does the film seem like a clipped and spliced version of something bigger. Rather, the story is a tight, well-balanced base upon which to build.

Apart from a somewhat sluggish beginning, the pace and direction of the film is pleasing. Redford keeps a firm grip on the story and the characters, teasing us with laughter and then plunging us into a tense, climactic moment, only to be followed by an appropriately light, comic bit. Even a sarcastic poke at friend Paul Newman was perfectly placed so the jab became comic without becoming so obtrusive that it distracted from the flow of the scene.

It seems fitting that "The Milagro Beanfield War" has been released in spring. Just as nature stirs from its winter hibernation, so do we also witness the stirring of a once sleepy, worn New Mexico town as it battles its own Goliath.

If a diversion from finals is what you need, don't hesitate for a moment to buy a ticket to "The Milagro Beanfield War." It will take you away for two hours of charming laughter, and, perhaps, it will be only one of many A's in your future.

'Virus' strikes computers; software spreads programs

By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

When people are infected with a virus, they become capable of spreading it to others around them. The same thing holds true for a computer virus — once it's in a system, it can spread rapidly.

A computer virus is a program that has been attached to another program, according to Maarten van Swaay, associate professor of computing and information sciences. The additional code has the capability to propagate itself to other programs.

Tom Pittman, assistant professor of computing and information sciences, said a computer virus can "infect" its surroundings by inserting itself into other programs.

"A virus reads a file and then puts itself on that file," van Swaay said.

Pittman said a computer virus is very similar to a biological virus in that it needs a host in order to live.

"A virus cannot do something by itself. It needs software," he said.

Van Swaay said the conditions for computer viruses have been around for a long time.

"The problem of computer viruses has been possible ever since software has been around," he said, adding that viruses spread so rapidly because of the vast amounts of computer software available.

"When you get a huge, informal river of software floating around the world, it makes for an atmosphere that is good for viruses," van Swaay said.

Van Swaay said computer viruses are made by two kinds of people: "mavericks" with no conscience, and crooks. He also believes these people create viruses for two reasons: because the capability is there, and because they want to create "mayhem."

Computer viruses can create mayhem by doing anything a person can make a computer do. Van Swaay gave one example.

"If you infect a system at a bank, you can make your computer slice a dollar off every account and deposit it into your Swiss bank account," he said.

However, both Pittman and van Swaay said most viruses are written for fun and are not designed to cause destruction.

"It is not in the interest of the virus to destroy its host," van Swaay said. "It is similar to biological warfare; if you want to create an epidemic, you want a virus that only incapacitates, not destroys."

Pittman said most computer viruses can be detected and that there are some limitations to the virus's use.

"No virus can spread outside the computer language it was written for," Pittman said. "The virus can spread only as fast as the activity of the machine being used."

"You can't plant the virus in a system if you don't have access to that system," van Swaay said.

Pittman said getting rid of the computer virus depends on the characteristics of the virus itself.

"There are traits which can be recognized, but there is no generic recognizable element," Pittman said. "You can write programs that clean up the system or that are immune to the virus, but the only sure defense against viruses is isolation."

Computer viruses are spread in two ways: by floppy diskettes from personal computers, and by a national network through electronic "bulletin boards," which are similar to a bulletin board found outside a supermarket. A person can access a bulletin board over the telephone with a computer.

According to van Swaay, current programs are usually posted on an electronic bulletin board for users to copy, with the original program remaining on the board. Van Swaay said this is a great way to spread a virus.

"The electronic bulletin board is a marvelous spreading technique because users make a copy of the infected program from the bulletin board, but leave the original there," van Swaay said. "You soon have thousands of copies of that program (being used by the public)."

Pittman and van Swaay said computer viruses became a problem because there are many computers and many people — an equation that is bound to get some mavericks, some of whom are malicious.

Van Swaay said virus programs tend to be small, so they are not detected in the codes of a program. If a virus was large, it would show up and, therefore, cause some suspicion.

Work not needed for certification

Leisure studies program changes requirements

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

The Department of Physical Education and Leisure Studies' specialization in recreation and park management program has become the first accredited undergraduate program in Kansas.

There are only 70 accredited programs among the 300 existing programs nationally.

Because of the accreditation, future graduates will not be required to work two to five years professionally before becoming eligible for certification as leisure professionals, said Don Lindley, associate professor and coordinator of leisure studies.

This certification can mean the difference between getting a job and not getting one, he said.

"A lot of positions are being advertised that require a person to be certified," Lindley said.

Now that the program is accredited, it will be reviewed every five years to ensure that standards are being maintained.

The number of faculty, their educational and professional attainments and research productivity, quality of students, curriculum content, and the availability of support services will all be monitored.

Students in the leisure studies program are required to take a variety of courses from the Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Architecture and Design, Business Administration and Agriculture.

Before the accreditation, Lindley said the program underwent some changes.

The new program has a "broadened disciplinary base, plus additional courses in the core," Lindley said. "We were changing our curriculum regardless of the accreditation."

Now that the program has been accredited, Lindley said the department will be getting the information out to junior and community college students.

"About 80 to 85 percent (of our students) come to us as juniors, either from other colleges or other disciplines within the University," he said.

The department applied for accreditation in October 1987. After submitting a self-study report and hosting an on-site inspection in February, the program was approved by the Council on Accreditation in Kansas City in April.

Lindley said leisure studies is a growing area that promises a wide range of jobs for graduates.

Public recreation, park services, private organizations, youth services, corporate, military and commercial recreational outlets hire leisure studies professionals.

According to recent estimates, 10 percent of the gross national product, nearly $300 billion, is spent on recreation and leisure activities each year, he said.

Lindley said there has been a recent trend toward social activities rather than isolated ones.

Instead of playing games such as racquetball, people are taking up activities that have a strong social component, such as softball.

"Perhaps (this is) because we are becoming so tied to our computers, we are looking for social connections in our recreational time," he said.

Two professors win graduate awards

By The Collegian Staff

Two K-State professors have been selected for the 1988 Distinguished Graduate Faculty awards.

Sociology professor Cornelia Flora and chemistry professor Richard McDonald will both receive $1,500 in recognition of their scholarly contributions and teaching excellence at a special ceremony during the Graduate School commencement May 13.

Flora, who joined the faculty in 1970, earned a bachelor's degree from the University of California at Berkeley, a master's in rural sociology and a doctorate in developmental sociology from Cornell University. In 1986, she became the first recipient of the Award for Excellence in Research from the Rural Sociological Society. She also is the author of more than 100 journal articles, research publications and several books.

McDonald joined the faculty in 1960 and earned a bachelor's and master's degree from Wayne State University and a doctorate from the University of Washington. In 1978 he was selected as one of K-State's six Mid America State Universities Association lecturers.

He served as a research chemist with the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service and held a similar position with the E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. in the chemical research division.

Increased enrollment affects housing

Demand increases; planning ahead ideal

On the average, half of what a student spends during a year at K-State is spent on housing. Budgeting can be tight, regardless of where a student lives.

Add to that the fact that increased enrollment may also limit space during the upcoming fall semester — not only in residence halls, fraternities and sororities, but also off campus.

Regardless of where students opt to live, they must plan now where to live this fall and how to pay living expenses.

Residence halls

On-campus living is generally considered less expensive than off-campus living, according to K-State publications.

It costs $2,100 to live in a residence hall for two semesters. This price includes room, 20 meals a week and laundry facilities. A resident may pay $1,050 for a semester at one time or can pay $265 four times during the semester.

Residents do not pay for utilities, but telephone bills average an extra $115 a year per student.

A $25 non-refundable application fee is charged by the Department of Housing. Money collected from this fee is used to fund programs and activities sponsored by the halls.

More than 4,000 students live in 10 residence halls. Living options include small and large halls, and male, female or coed halls.

"I imagine we'll be full (this fall) at the rate things are going," said Thomas J. Frith, director of housing. "As of last Friday, we're 200 (residents) ahead of last year at this time.

"It bodes well for the University and for housing," he said.

K-State's residence hall food service offers one meal plan for all residents. It provides for every meal except Sunday evenings.

"The meal plan we have with 20 meals a week provides the most students with the lowest total cost per meal," Frith said. "If we varied meal plans, we'd have to raise the cost per meal, and the students would pay more per meal. Actually, the students are only charged for 70 percent of the meals."

Another option for females living on campus is the Smurthwaite House, currently promoted as a living group that encourages leadership. It costs $1,580 to live at Smurthwaite for two semesters.

The cost includes the same benefits as the other residence halls, but residents are expected to work four to six hours a week.

For married students and students with families, Jardine Terrace Apartments is an option under the Department of Housing.

One- and two-bedroom apartments, available furnished or unfurnished, range from $156 a month to $193 a month.

The rent covers gas and water utilities and trash pickup. Renters pay for electricity, telephones and meals.

Fraternities and Sororities

More than 3,000 students choose to live in the 25 fraternities and 12 sororities at K-State.

The cost for living in one of these houses is about $2,300 for two semesters. This includes room, all meals except for Sunday evening, dues, social activities and intramurals, said Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser.

New members also have a one-time charge ranging from $150 to $200, which is primarily an initiation fee.

Robel said the fraternity and sorority houses are filled to capacity this year, and next year they will be full or even overfilled.

Off campus

Most students choose to live off campus at some time while attending K-State. The cost for off-campus housing varies greatly.

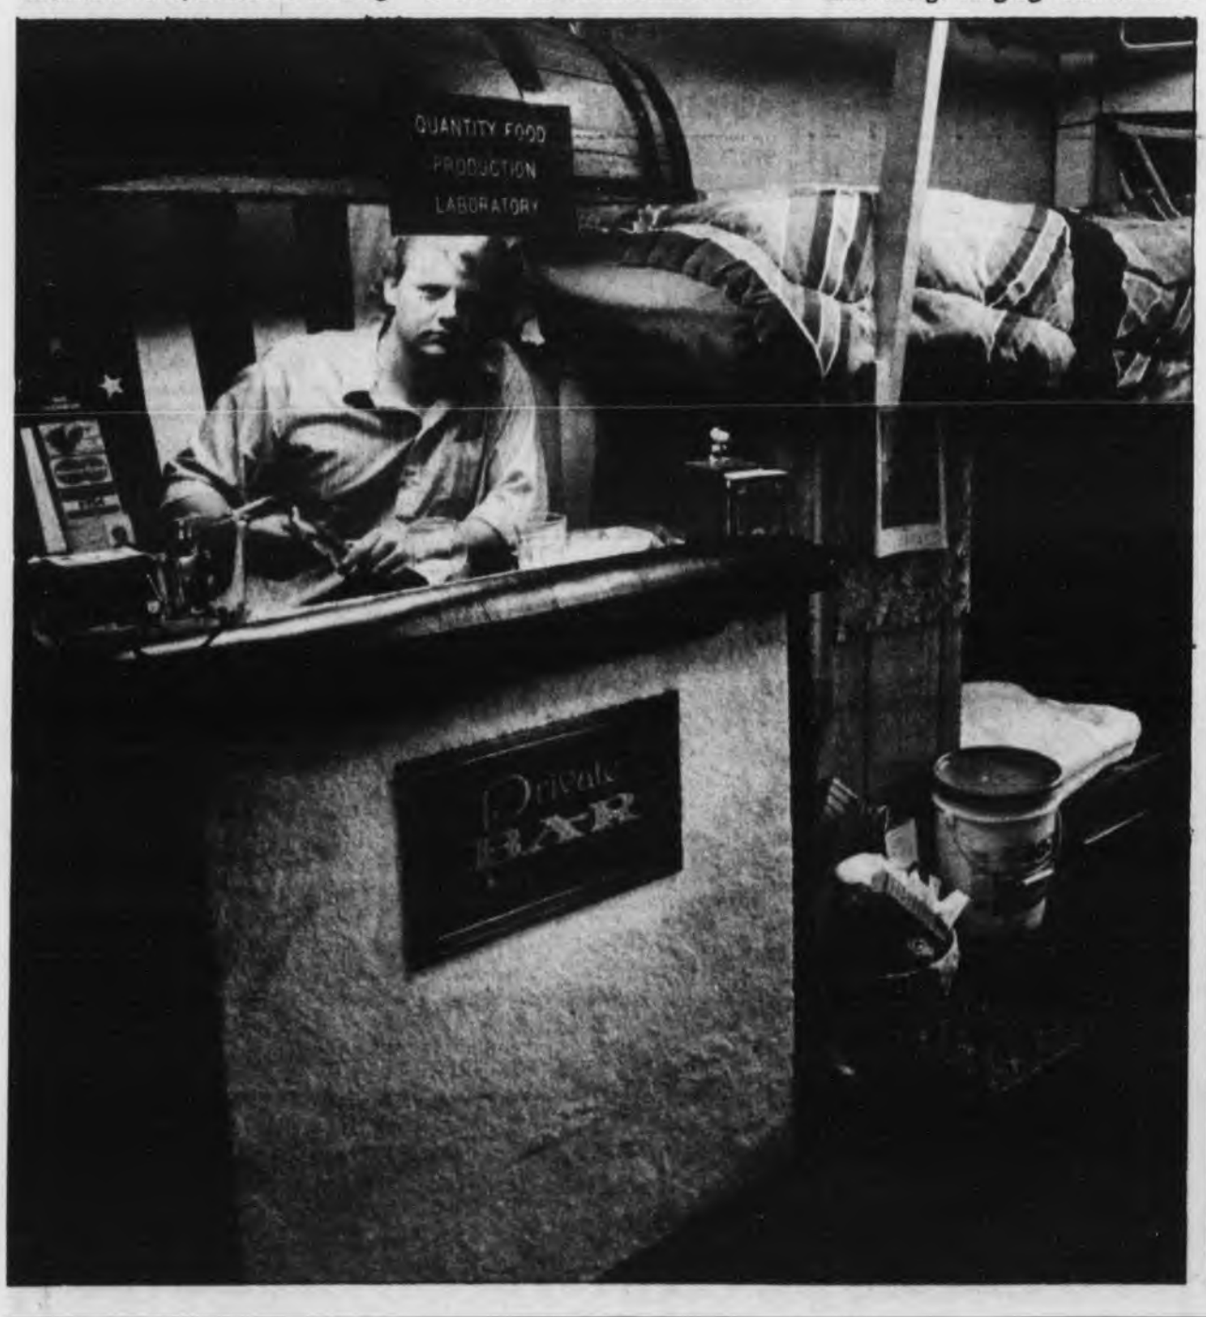
A survey conducted by a Personal and Family Finance class found that average rent for one person would cost $1,646 a year, and the average utility cost is $340 a year, including telephone costs.

The survey found that food for a year would cost about $720.

Expenses not included in these figures are cable TV fees, utilities hookups and deposit costs, as well as laundry.

Tim Trubey, vice president of McCullough Development Inc., said most apartments in Manhattan range from $250 to $310 per month for one-bedroom apartments, and $350 to $450 for two-bedroom apartments. If the apartment is within walking distance from campus, Trubey said it would probably add about $30 to the cost of a one-bedroom and $50 to the cost of a two-bedroom. He said he considers walking distance to be six blocks from campus.

Trubey said the average utilities cost for a one-bedroom is about $40 a month, and for a two-bedroom about $60 a month.



"It depends a lot on whether it's gas heat or electric heat," he said.

According to Trubey, the landlord pays for water and trash pickup in almost all apartments in Manhattan.

Students should start looking for apartments during the spring semester for the next school year and make a commitment by the end of April, he said.

"There's a lesser selection if (students) come back in August. And, especially this year, the demand for two-bedrooms and up has exceeded the supply," he said.

All of McCullough Development's leases are 12-month, he said.

Studying records teaches sound investment

'What if' game a shrewd homework lesson

Commentary

STEPHEN P. HARRISON
Collegian Columnist

One nice thing about being a "records junkie" is being able to go back to those lean stock market years and plan "what if" with your favorite investment.

All the information you need is in the records, and it's fun to play because you can't lose any money. But more importantly, if you do your homework carefully, it will show you how to avoid losing money if the market turns sour in the future.

The Dec. 31, 1974, edition of "Wiesenberger's Mutual Fund Management Results" provides a prime example.

Wiesenberger Services is a nationally recognized research company that specializes in statistical data on mutual funds — no sales pitch and no gloss, just numbers.

The year 1974 brought back the reality of the stock market for both high-rolling and conservative money managers. It proved, once again, the importance of looking for reasonable investment results in good times and downside protection in bad times.

This may sound simple, but it's easy to get carried away in the euphoria of a bull market. Greed, the mistaken illusion that trees can grow to the sky, often impairs one's better judgment.

Let's take a look at 1974 and play "what if."

What if you had invested in a "maximum capital gain" mutual fund at the beginning of 1974?

With maximum capital gain funds, fund managers usually seek stocks they believe will give fast profits. Dividend income is considered incidental.

This, however, isn't without risk. Of the 98 such funds Wiesenberger Services reported in 1974, only one showed a gain. The average fund lost 27.7 percent.

What if you had invested in high-flying performance during these years? If you were in the fast lane and willing to take a loss, you probably did. If you invested in one of these mutual funds looking to get rich quick with little or no risk, you faced an unwelcome surprise and a quick depletion of your investment dollars.

Looking at the five-year period of 1970-1974, the average loss was 36.9 percent. There's no doubt these were difficult years in the stock market.

In 1970 the Dow Jones industrial average hovered around 600. By 1974 it briefly broke the then-magic 1,000 mark, only to begin a steady downturn and end in 1974 back where it started.

In contrast to the fast-moving performance funds, the more conservative growth and income funds continued to pay their shareholders dividends during these difficult times.

In many cases, those dividends even increased. Of course these funds lost share value, but those investors who reinvested their dividends benefited by purchasing depressed shares at bargain prices.

When the market eventually turned around, all of the shares — including the bargain buys — increased in value. Those investors who bought mutual funds with reasonable expectation and patience were able not only to survive those difficult times but also to prosper in good times.

While it may be tempting to purchase a more risky mutual fund in hopes of getting rich quick, don't be shortsighted. Only solid mutual funds will provide reasonable results both in the good times and the bad.

windfall the state collected because of federal tax changes.

It would accomplish that by lowering individuals' income tax rates, raising personal exemptions to $1,950 for this tax year and to $2,000 for tax year 1989, and making other changes in state tax laws. It also would eliminate taxes paid to the federal government as a deduction on state returns.

The compromise struck by the six members of the conference committee involved the Senate giving up federal tax deductibility and the House negotiators agreeing to put in $10 million more into the plan than they wanted.

Maximum interest rates under the plan would be reduced from 9 percent to 5.3 percent for married taxpayers, and from 9 percent to 6.1 percent for single taxpayers. Effective tax rates considering deductions were projected at 4.9 percent for married taxpayers and 2.8 percent for single taxpayers.

Only one income tax group would not receive a tax break under the plan. Single taxpayers with taxable incomes between $50,000 and $100,000 would see their state tax bill go up slightly. Every other tax group would get a modest tax reduction.

Fittingly, tax revision became the last issue for the Legislature to address. It was the dominant issue of the session that began in January, with the debate centering on how much of a $135 million windfall to return to the taxpayers who paid it, and how best to return whatever amount was selected.

Under a summary of legislative spending and available revenues presented to lawmakers Monday afternoon by Richard Ryan, director of the Legislative Research Department, the Legislature could spend $35 million on income tax revision, fund everything else it has approved this session and still have a $126.6 million treasury balance at the end of next fiscal year.

That scenario assumed Hayden would veto a $15 million appropriation the Legislature made to cities and counties for additional local property tax relief, but did not include a $14 million increase in tax revenues above the estimate that came in during April.

If the $14 million revenue excess holds up the last two months of the fiscal year, the state's ending balance would be around $140 million. Hayden had proposed a $146 million ending balance.

Before getting down to serious business on tax revision, the Legislature sent to Hayden a $56.4 million omnibus appropriations bill that the governor is expected to reduce to $41.4 million by a stroke of his pen. Nobody expects him to allow to stand a $15 million line item appropriation for additional local property tax relief. He vetoed it after the regular session ended April 9.

The last spending measure of the session, drew fire in the House, where it was approved 74-50. It sailed through the Senate, 30-7.

Much of the legislative debate centered on the $15 million in property tax relief. Opponents said it was included only as a sop to those who want to return more of the windfall to taxpayers than the state can afford, and allowed them to tell constituents they voted for it, knowing full well Hayden will veto it.

Kathy Peterson, Hayden's press secretary, acknowleged a Hayden veto of the item is probable. "They know the governor vetoed it before," she said.

Lawmakers also debated a $1.3 million appropriation that would increase aid to some urban school districts.

That money will offset cuts in general state aid the districts took because of changes made in the school finance formula in a bill sent to Hayden earlier.

Topeka will receive an additional $628,059 under the hold-harmless provision, while Lawrence will get $251,632, Wichita $191,083, Hutchinson $81,349, Kansas City, Kan., $57,003, Topeka Seaman $37,894, Salina $33,894 and Leavenworth $26,918.

House approval, 69-54, sent to the governor a bill that would require judges to consider the amount of insurance money plaintiffs have received before the judges award damages in tort cases.

A bill sent to Hayden on Saturday would place a $5 million cap on punitive damages.

Palestinian flag.

The army said Abdulhak apparently was trying to hang the flag, which is outlawed by Israel.

His death brought the number of Arabs killed since the uprising began Dec. 8 to at least 177. An Israeli soldier and Jewish settler also have been slain in the violence.

There have been reports of an Israeli military buildup since guerrilla incursions last week. The Israeli military censor on Monday prevented journalists in Israel from reporting details about the buildup.

Israeli officials have blamed Syria for the cross-border guerrilla attacks on grounds the guerrillas were from the Bekaa Valley that is controlled by Syrian forces.

Timur Goksel, spokesman for the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon, was asked about the report of 2,000 Israeli soldiers crossing into Lebanon.

"An operation of that magnitude would have to through the UNIFIL area and we see nothing," he told The Associated Press in Jerusalem by telephone from his headquarters in the the Lebanese border town of Naqoura.

UNIFIL has peacekeeping units in southern Lebanon.

The police spokesman said the attacking force was supported by militiamen of the Israeli-allied South Lebanon Army, a predominantly Christian paramilitary contingent in control of Israel's self-designated security zone in south Lebanon.

The drone of warplane engines also was heard over Beirut, the Lebanese capital.

Stress accompanies finals

Eat right, exercise to beat effects

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

With finals approaching, students need to prepare to deal with stress.

"Learning how not to get stressed is a skill that students need to work on early in the year," said Dave Danskin, counseling psychologist for the Counseling Center in Holton Hall.

Students need positive stress, or eustress, Danskin said. Without it, life would be unexciting because stress adds challenge to life.

But too much negative stress, or distress, can affect a student's physical and mental well-being as well as academic performance. It's impossible to live totally without stress and distress, but students can prevent or minimize distress, he said. Stress can work for instead of against students.

Danskin said students react with more stress than necessary — between 150 and 250 times a day. Examples of minor stresses are waiting in line to cash a check and waking up late for class. Because students react so many times a day, they need to release pressures through exercises such as aerobics, swimming, jumping rope, walking or jogging, he said.

Quick stretches or exercises, which only take a few seconds, also help reduce stress. An example is the Tense-Release, which is an exercise that involves tensing the body all over, one part at a time, then taking a deep breath and holding it for five seconds, then letting go all at once.

"To keep the stress from building up, every 30 to 45 minutes take a short walk," Danskin said. "When you sit, blood collects in the lower part of the body and less oxygen goes to the brain. Walking helps the blood circulate to keep you more alert. It also provides a change of environment."

Students need to keep up with their regular routines, such as getting up at the same time every day, Danskin said. This helps them stay alert.

Getting enough rest is also important. Resting can take place in the form of sleep or relaxation, he said. If students can't fall asleep, they should do something else until they get tired.

"And eat good food," Danskin said. Eating a variety of foods — including fruits, vegetables, cereals, milk, meat, eggs, poultry and fish — is good for a person.

"Don't rely on caffeine or sugar," he said. "Be cautious. The short-term effect provides immediate energy, which wakes you up to keep you alert for studying, but the long-term effects are depression and not being able to think clearly.

"Twenty teaspoons of sugar suppress the white blood cells of the body's immune system 95 percent for five hours, so students are more likely to get a cold."
—Dave Danskin, counseling psychologist

"Twenty teaspoons of sugar suppress the white blood cells of the body's immune system 95 percent for five hours, so students are more likely to get a cold," Danskin said.

Sharing the stress and talking to friends about concerns and worries can help students because others may see the problem in a different view, he said.

Danskin said problems beyond a student's control may not be able to be changed, so students need to learn to accept the problem until it can be changed.

When studying for finals, students should take study breaks by reading a good book or listening to music, he said. Recreation is important because brains that are constantly faced with challenges need time off to digest the challenges.

Finally, students should set realistic goals and not plan for more than can be accomplished in a given time, Danskin said.

Devil worship to be discussed in youth's trial

By The Associated Press

CARTHAGE, Mo. — A southwest Missouri teen-ager accused in a bizarre beating death was obsessed with violent music and may have prayed to the devil, his attorney said as trial began Monday in Jasper County.

Ronald Charles Clements, 17, of Carl Junction, pleaded innocent by reason of mental disease or defect to first-degree murder in the death of Stephen Newberry, 19, also of Carl Junction. Clements and Newberry were classmates at the high school in Carl Junction, which is just northwest of Joplin.

A jury of eight women and four men, and a woman alternate, was chosen to hear Clements' case after 57 potential jurors were interviewed Monday. Opening arguments were to begin this morning.

Witnesses will discuss his use of drugs and alcohol and his "obsession with what we call heavy metal music," defense lawyer Ross Rhoades of Neosho told prospective jurors in Jasper County Circuit Court.

"There will be testimony that ... Ron was involved at some point in his life in belief in the devil, that he may have prayed to the devil, that he may have worn certain ornaments associated with the occult and satanism," Rhoades said at the beginning of jury selection Monday.

Rhoades asked potential jurors if their ability to make a judgment would be affected by graphic testimony. No one on the panel indicated a problem with the testimony outlined by the lawyer.

Clements has pleaded innocent by reason of mental disease or defect to first-degree murder in the death of Stephen Newberry, 19, also of Carl Junction. Clements, Newberry and two other youths charged with murder were classmates at Carl Junction High School in southwest Missouri.

Authorities said Newberry was beaten at least 50 times with baseball bats the night of Dec. 6. His body and the carcass of a cat that also had been beaten to death were found Dec. 7 in 10 feet of water in a cistern near the Missouri-Kansas border.

James Hardy, 18, of rural Joplin, pleaded guilty Friday to first-degree murder in exchange for a promise that prosecutors would not seek the death penalty in his case. Theron R. Roland II, 17, of Carl Junction, pleaded innocent by reason of mental disease or defect and was to be tried in Pettis County starting May 24.

Jasper County Prosecutor David Dally said he was seeking the death penalty against Clements and Roland.

Norman Rouse, assistant prosecutor in Jasper County, asked the panel of prospective jurors Monday whether Clements' young age would make it difficult for them to determine his guilt.

"Is there anyone here who could not convict a 17-year-old of a crime?" Rouse asked. "Is there anyone here who could not for any reason ... sentence a 17-year-old to prison, to the Missouri Department of Corrections, for life without the possibility of parole?"

"And now the tough question: is there anyone here who for any reason ... could not sentence someone to death?"

Clements, who according to court records was the first to give a statement about the killing and led sheriff's deputies to Newberry's body, told investigators that he and his friends often talked about violence.

House rejects Washburn bill

Regents funding of Topeka school 'dead'

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House rejection of a proposal to switch Washburn University's funding from the State Board of Education to the Board of Regents means the issue probably is dead this session, lawmakers said Monday.

Some lawmakers regarded the measure, proposed by Gov. Mike Hayden, as the first step toward placing the municipal university in the regents system.

"This is a major step," said Rep. Jim Lowther, R-Emporia, during House debate Sunday. The Senate approved the switch Friday, but the House killed it Sunday and did not reconsider its actions Monday.

"It won't come up again," said Rep. Don Mainey, D-Topeka.

Under the proposal, Washburn would have received its state aid through operating grants approved by the regents. Now, Washburn gets its state money from the Board of Education based on the number of credit hours taught to students, just as community colleges do.

The Legislature has debated for years whether to move Washburn into the regents system. Many lawmakers think the six current regents universities will get less state aid if that occurs.

"This is a divorce, that's what the bill is," said Rep. Ed Bideau, R-Chanute, said Sunday. "It's a divorce that will provide no good results to anybody outside Shawnee County."

Other lawmakers think Washburn is becoming too expensive for Topeka residents and should be treated like the state's other major public universities.

Washburn gets its money from the state, local property taxes and higher tuition rates than the regents universities charge. Regents universities are financed almost entirely by state money.

Wichita State University was a municipal university, like Washburn, before joining the regents about 20 years ago.

The Washburn proposal was further complicated this session because it was contained in a bill that would have increased aid to the state's 19 community colleges by $1.9 million.

Thus, when House members killed the Washburn bill Sunday, they also killed the increases for community colleges.

However, the House resurrected the increases for community colleges by placing them in a separate bill Monday, and approved it, 119-5. The Senate then approved the bill, 40-0.

"This is just a vehicle to help you all cover your rear," Rep. Don Crumbaker, R-Brewster, told House members when explaining the new bill.

Because of the extra $1.9 million, community colleges would get $28 for every credit hour taught to students, up from $26.25 now. They would get $24 for every out-district aid hour, up from $23 now.

Washburn would get about $4.5 million in state aid next year under the bill.

Bond considered for Missouri man

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A request to allow a bond to be set for a Kansas City man held for a month on sex charges while police seek evidence that could link him to other crimes is being considered by Missouri's Western District Court of Appeals.

After hearing arguments Monday in the case of Robert A. Berdella, 39, presiding judge Charles Shangler said the three-member panel would rule in two or three days.

Berdella, a flea market merchant, was arrested April 2 after a man wearing only a dog collar fled from his home, saying he had been held captive there and subjected to sexual abuse and torture.

The investigation led to discovery of a human head buried in the back yard at Berdella's midtown home, and a human skull was found in the house, along with hundreds of photographs showing men apparently being sexually tortured.

Berdella has been charged with seven counts of forcible sodomy, one of felonious restraint and one of first-degree assault, all related to the 22-year-old man who fled his home.

A Jackson County associate circuit judge and two circuit judges all refused to set bond for Berdella, prompting the public defender's office to take their request to the appeals court.

A married man's worst nightmare becomes stark reality when the woman with whom he has had a casual affair refuses to believe it was just a fling. Starring Michael Douglas (who just received an Academy Award for "Best Actor") and Glenn Close, "Fatal Attraction" is a tense cliffhanger that is both terrifying and deeply moving. The story of the life and death struggle wages between a lonely woman who has finally slipped over the edge of sanity and a desperate man trying to protect his family, is a provocative commentary on adult relationships in the '80s. WALL STREET

Charlie Sheen and Michael Douglas star in Oliver Stone's morality tale about green and power in corporate America. Charlie Sheen plays Bud Fox, a bright, blindingly ambitious young Wall Street broker who gains a spectacular career but loses his soul, at least temporarily. Douglas plays Gordon Gekko, a corporate raider who serves as Bud's hero/father figure in his quest for having it all. Rated R Friday & Saturday, May 6 & 7, 7 and 9:30 p.m. $1.75 KSU ID required.

Wildcat football program should come out in black

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Though K-State's football team was a loser on the field during the 1987 campaign, it doesn't appear the Wildcats will be a disaster financially.

Though nothing will be official until after June 15 when final checks are entered into K-State's athletic coffers, Mike Jones, athletic department business manager, expects K-State "to finish in the black" financially.

"I won't know exactly how much money we'll receive from some of the bowl teams, ... but it looks like we'll finish at least $600,000 ahead of what we budgeted," Jones said.

K-State's football program made about $500,000 after the 1986 season, the first under Coach Stan Parrish.

Jones is waiting to hear from the University of Nebraska and Oklahoma State University about K-State's share of money from the two schools' appearances in bowl games. Under Big Eight Conference rules, each member school receives a one-eighth portion of profits from postseason competition and television revenues.

Nebraska made an appearance in the Sunkist/Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., and Oklahoma State went to El Paso, Texas, for the Sun Bowl. The schools' profits from those bowl games are distributed after expenses are deducted, Jones said. Only Oklahoma, which represented the conference in the Orange Bowl at Miami, receives a guaranteed commission. K-State's share from that game was $284,104.

"People are always coming up to me and saying, 'Drop football or join the Missouri Valley Conference,'" Jones said. "But as long as we're in the Big Eight, we're always going to make money."

But if it wasn't for K-State's share from the three bowl games, the Wildcats would be in financial trouble. Wichita State University, a member of the Missouri Valley, underwent financial difficulties last year and dropped its program after losing more than $800,000 from the previous season.

K-State came up $238,000 short in gate receipts from what was budgeted, and $41,000 short from what was budgeted for guarantees at away games.

K-State lost the most as far as individual ticket sales are concerned from the Austin Peay game played during Labor Day weekend. In addition to the game, a Willie Nelson concert was staged, and additional profits from the game/concert were to be awarded to Farm Aid.

But 20,000 people needed to attend for Farm Aid to profit from the event, and an estimated 17,000 attended. K-State was $148,000 under projected revenues alone, and barely made enough money to pay Nelson his guaranteed $75,000, and Projects West — a co-promoter — its guarantee of $25,000. Farm Aid received nothing.

Jones said two reasons caused the less-than-expected turnout.

"Every wide spot on the road had a Labor Day softball tournament," Jones said. "It was also the last long weekend for people to go to the lake."

The game/concert was also competing with the annual Railroad Days celebration held in Topeka which featured three concerts — including one by country and western signer Lee Greenwood.

K-State also came more than $82,000 under budget for the Wildcats v. Army game. Because it was Ft. Riley Day at KSU Stadium, tickets were sold to soldiers and their families for a discount price.

"Because Army was playing, the authorities over there ... convinced us to sell the tickets cheap. Though we had an attendance of about 24,000 people, and it was the best crowd we've had for Ft. Riley Day, we were still short about 5,800 people of breaking even," Jones said.

The only home game where K-State came out ahead was the intrastate rivalry with Kansas. More than 37,000 people attended the game in Manhattan, and K-State finished $17,225 ahead of what was budgeted.

In away games, the 'Cats struck gold by playing Iowa at Iowa City, Iowa. K-State recieved more than $377,000 in gate receipts from that game, as opposed to $171,000 for playing Nebraska at Lincoln. This is a strange comparison considering the Cornhuskers have sold out 156 straight games at 73,650-seat Memorial Stadium.

"There's a Big Eight rule that says visiting teams can only receive a maximum of $175,000. The Big Eight also has a rule that says student and faculty tickets are counted as only 50 cents, public tickets count $8 and the profits are split 50-50 between the two schools," Jones said. "At Iowa, the student and faculty tickets were counted at $1 apiece so we doubled our money right there. It was a good deal for us."

K-State finished ahead of what was budgeted in programs, parking, concessions, radio and television contracts and seat rentals.

Football's budget of $2.9 million for 1987 is about 53 percent of the $5.5 million budgeted for K-State's entire athletic program. But Jones said the football team will have to stop relying on the Big Eight and attendance will have to increase in the future if all of K-State's athletic programs are to continue operating on the plus side.

"All the sports will have a slight increase in money for next year, but after that I don't think you can count on it unless things change with what should be our big money maker, which is the football team," Jones said.

"You can't count on three Big Eight teams going to good football bowl games with guaranteed incomes, and I don't think you can count on the Big Eight generating $450,000 for us in the NCAA (postseason basketball) tournament every year. The TV money for football is going to start dropping off because we've kind of reached the saturation point in that," he added.

Jones said a 9-percent increase is planned for student aid to all athletes next year, but that is to cover the 4-percent increase expected in housing, the 2-percent planned increase in in-state tuition and the projected 12-percent increase in out-of-state tuition.

K-State's basketball team looks to be the real financial winner, bringing in a projected $1.2 million for 1987-88. Jones still insists, however, that football is where money can be made.

"Although there's more games in basketball, ticket prices are $6 or $8. In football they're $15. We can get more than 40,000 people in KSU Stadium, and only about 10,000 in Ahearn Field House," Jones said. "You only travel so many times in football, and when we do it's usually profitable. We get around $175,000 for playing at Nebraska in football, and only about $19,000 for playing up there in basketball."

But Jones has another problem. How do you project income for next season when the 'Cats went 0-10-1 last year? He expects at least a 4-percent drop in student season ticket sales alone.

"There's so many factors to consider," Jones said,

"How many people are going to give up because we didn't win a game last year? I'm afraid we'll be down to the die-hard fans who attend every game. Then there's the basketball team. Will the excitement from their season carry over to football?"

Football and men's basketball are the two profit-generating sports for K-State.

Stahl wants elusive title

'Cats' runner shooting for All-American

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

For K-State trackster Ron Stahl, an illustrious career is moving down the back stretch, but a couple of hurdles are left to clear.

Stahl, a senior distance runner from New Lenox, Ill., was named the top performer of the Big Eight Indoor Championships, crowned a Big Eight champion three times, set three K-State records and qualified for both the NCAA track and field and cross country championships. But still there are two things that have elluded him: being an All-American and qualifying for the Olympic Trials.

"I haven't made All-American yet," Stahl said. "That's my top goal and something I would really like to do. Right now my emphasis is on qualifying for nationals.

In track, the top six finishers in each event at the national meet gain the All-American status.

"I've been feeling real well," Stahl said. "The conditions just haven't been there (for him to make the qualifying mark). The best weather we've had was when we went out to UCLA and a lot of people turned (personal records)."

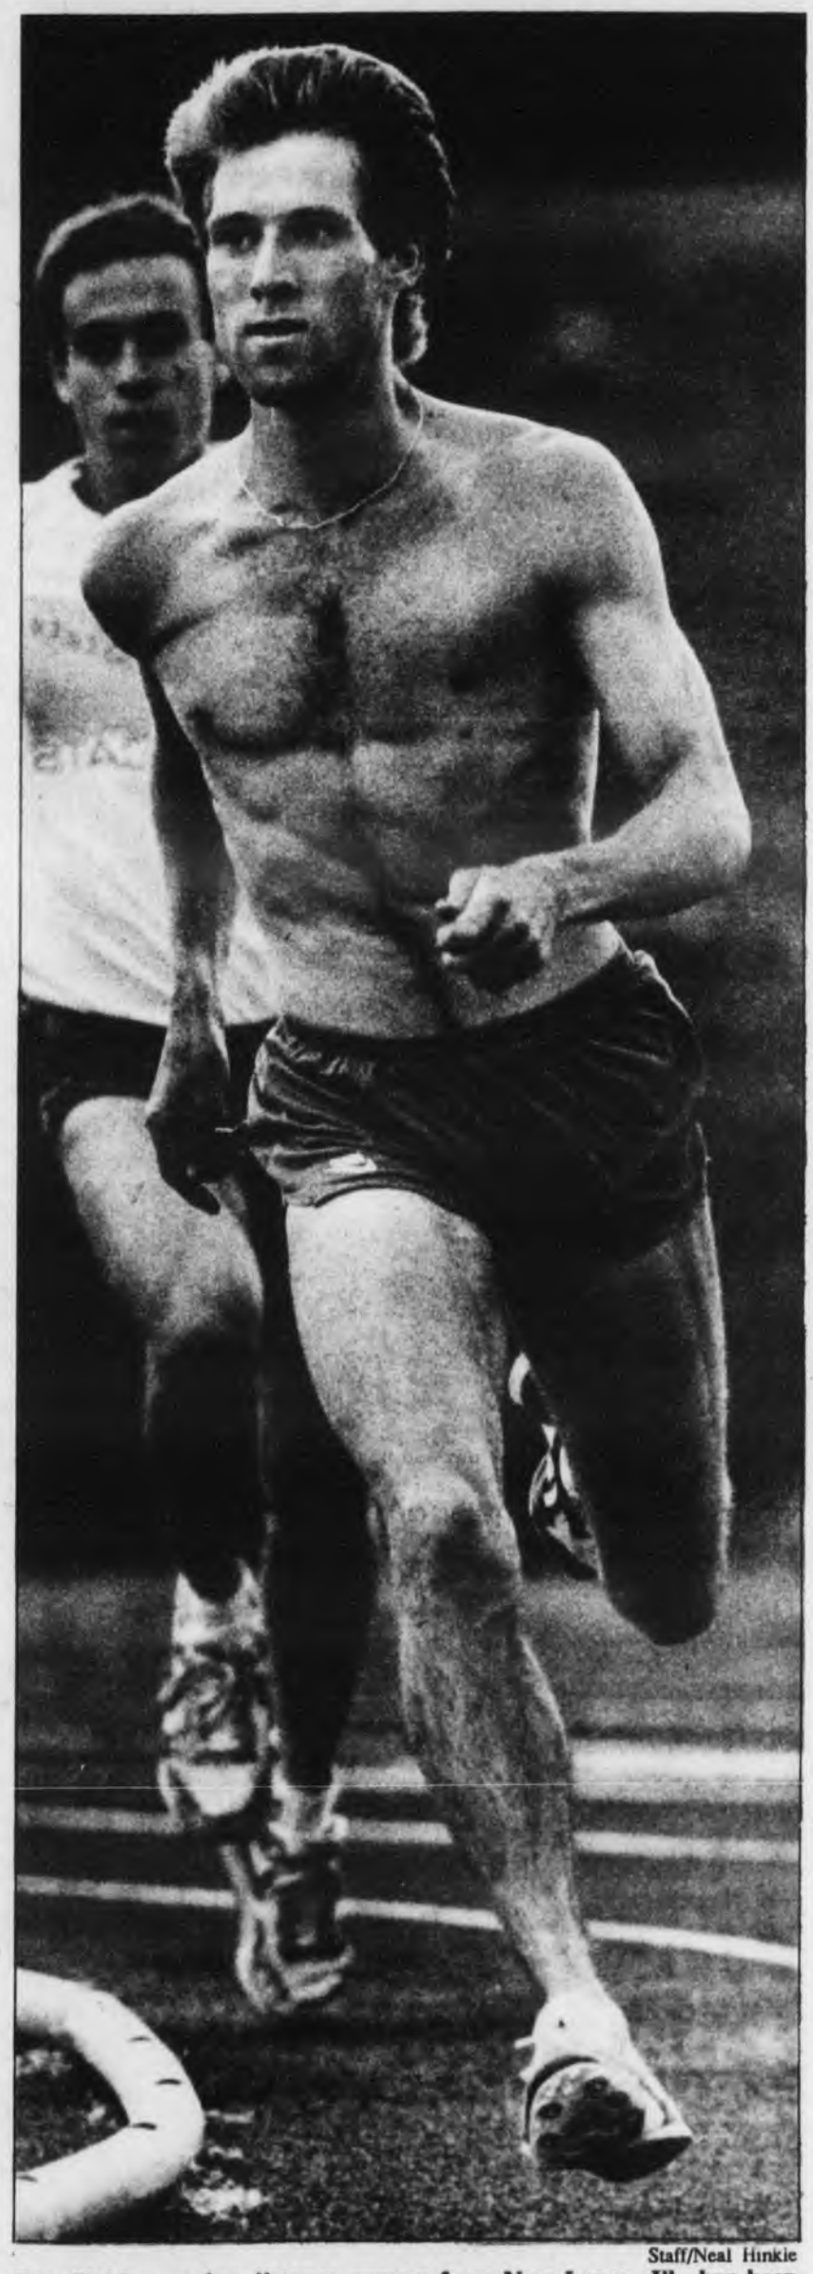
Stahl got off to a great start this outdoor season as he was undefeated in his first three meets. He began the campaign with a victory in the 5,000-meter run at Nebraska. In rainy and cold conditions, he won the 1,500-meter run at the KSU Pepsi Open. He then went on to net two top-spot finishes at the UCLA/Houston Triangular by winning the both the 1,500- and 3,000-meter runs.

He has finished out of the top spot only once this season, with that taking place at the Drake Relays over the weekend.

"He's done a great job for us," Coach John Capriotti said. "He's a real hard worker. All he needs is for the conditions to cooperate (to qualify for nationals)."

Stahl qualified for the national indoor meet a year ago but did not finish in the top six, and thus did not gain All-American honors. During that same season, he won two events at the conference championships and was named the most valuable male performer of the meet. At the outdoor conference meet, he earned his third Big Eight crown with a win in the 10,000-meter run.

"I would have to say that last year's (indoor) Big Eight meet and qualifying for nationals in cross country are the top highlights for me at Kansas State," he said.



Stahl, an electrical engineering major, will be graduating this month and is finding that both his studies and athletics deserve a great deal of attention.

"Both are pretty much equal in importance at this time in my life," Stahl said. "In the so-called younger years of your life, you want to do everything you can and be as active as possible."

After graduation, Stahl sighted the possibility of working in California so he can continue his training in a climate which will allow him to train throughout the year. He also alluded to the great number of meets that are held in that state.

"He's going to be graduating in electrical engineering and is one of the one's to keep (K-State) on the map as far as athletics and academics are concerned," Capriotti said.

On assessing his career at K-State, Stahl said: "I would have to say I am pretty content with it.

'Cats host two games today

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State's baseball team has added two games to its spring schedule.

The Wildcats will play a doubleheader against Tarkio College today at 2 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

The Wildcats, 29-20 overall and 7-11 in Big Eight Conference play, will host nationally-ranked Wichita State at 7 p.m. Wednesday before Oral Roberts comes to Manhattan for single games Saturday and Sunday. ORU is coached by former K-State coach Gary Vaught.

Spring semester holds highlights which will not soon be forgotten

Commentary

TOM MORRIS
Sports Writer

Though it has been said that one must look to the future and one can't live on memories forever, K-State's athletic teams this semester have provided enough memorabilia to keep even the most avid Wildcat fan satisfied until next fall.

Of course, the top story this spring was the basketball team's journey through the NCAA's postseason tournament before losing to Kansas in the Midwest Regional finals at Pontiac, Mich.

One also has to look back and smile when remembering the win against eventual national runner-up Oklahoma in Ahearn Field House, and the sound defeat of eventual national champion Kansas at Allen Field House in Lawrence, which ended the Jayhawks' 55-game homecourt winning streak.

K-State's finale in Ahearn Field House against Missouri was a grand farewell to a building which has served the University well. Though the 'Cats won the game against the Tigers by 10, that wasn't the real story. It was a time for goodbyes, and among those present to help bid adieu to Ahearn were former coaches Tex Winter, Cotton Fitzsimmons, Jack Gardner and Jack Hartman.

Missouri's players even went so far as to wear sweatshirts during their pregame warmups which said "Thanks for the memories..." to Ahearn and its four former coaches.

Contrary to popular belief, Tigers coach Norm Stewart does have class.

The top public relations move K-State's athletic department made this semester was sponsoring the "Just say no" program which sent athletes to schools in Manhattan, Junction City and Fort Riley.

Athletes told their student audiences to avoid alcohol and other drugs, and, in turn, learned something that is impossible to create in a classroom setting — the value and importance of a human life.

The quote of the semester also resulted from this program. After hearing a speech by a Wildcat athlete, it convinced Woodrow Wilson Elementary School third grader Cory Dieball to say no to drugs.

"Drugs are bad, 'cause if you take drugs you'll live on the streets and you'll get run over by a car," Dieball said.

One of the strangest stories that developed during the semester was the possible professional careers of K-State football players Kent Dean, John Williams and Tony Jordan.

Dean and Williams were invited to the National Football League Scouting Combine in Indianapolis, an exclusive workout for 300 of the nation's top gridiron talent, but Jordan was the only 'Cat selected in the NFL's draft.

Though most of the Wildcats' seasons this spring are far from over, the memories these teams will create will have to be recounted at a later time.

Comedian Bob Hope is well-known for his closing theme song, "Thanks for the memories." After two years at K-State, this sports writer has to steal this line when talking about K-State sports this semester. I can only hope next fall will be just as memorable as well.

Sports Briefly

Thrower signs with K-State

Greg Winn, a senior at Minneola High School, inked his name on the line and became the first thrower and 12th track athlete to sign a national letter of intent to attend K-State since the signing date began on April 13.

"Greg is from a small town," Coach John Capriotti said. "He is very talented but is also raw. He has some growing to do and needs to get stronger, but in a couple of years he will be a very good addition to our squad."

Winn won the discus at the KU Relays on April 23 with a throw of 171-5.

In state competition, he won the discus as a sophomore and junior and holds the state record. He also placed third in the shot put at nationals.

Tennis banquet Wednesday

Tickets are now on sale for a banquet to honor the 1988 Kansas State women's tennis team.

The banquet will be held this Wednesday beginning at 8 p.m. at Valentino's in the Village Plaza. Cost of the tickets for the buffet meal is $6.50 each.

Tickets can be purchased at the K-State tennis office located in Room 206 of Ahearn Field House, or can be reserved by calling that office at 532-7198. Tickets will also be available at the door on Wednesday.

Bush, Jackson criticize Dukakis before primaries

By The Associated Press

George Bush charged Monday that Michael Dukakis advocates policies that would return America "to the misery" inherited by the Reagan administration in 1981, while Jesse Jackson accused the Democratic front-runner of caution "where we must operate with courage, clarity and candor."

Dukakis, anticipating landslide presidential primary victories today in Ohio and Indiana, turned Jackson's comments aside by saying, "I'm not just a talker. I'm a doer."

The Massachusetts governor, returning Republican fire, also took aim at embattled Attorney General Edwin Meese III. "We want an attorney general that you and I can be proud of, not ashamed of," he said.

Dukakis added that the Reagan administration has failed to provide sufficient funding for day care programs for children.

Ohio, Indiana and the District of Columbia offer a total of 254 Democratic National Convention delegates in Tuesday's primaries. Dukakis is heavily favored to defeat Jackson in Ohio and Indiana and may capture 200 or more delegates in the three races combined, thus padding his substantial lead over his sole remaining opponent.

The Massachusetts governor has nearly 1,300 of the 2,081 delegates needed to claim the nomination, according to The Associated Press count. The slow, steady trickle of party leaders to Dukakis' side continued during the day, as Sen. John D. Rockefeller IV of West Virginia announced his support.

Jackson is favored to win the District of Columbia primary.

Bush already has enough delegates to assure his nomination at the GOP convention in August, and has no active Republican opposition in today's primaries.

The day's campaign comments fit a pattern that has emerged in recent days, with the vice president criticizing Dukakis for being inexperienced and advocating policies that are too liberal and Jackson seeking to prod his Democratic rival into moving to the left.

In a day of campaigning in Indiana, Bush said the issues in the fall would be peace and jobs, and added, "The country wants to move ahead, not go back to the misery we inherited through the very policies Jackson and Dukakis are talking about."

"Inexperience in foreign policy could hurt not only our national security, but also our economic strength," Bush added.

The vice president visited a factory where Hummer defense vehicles are made and promised to try and keep the production line open.

"We took a $31 billion cut in defense because of the opposition in the Congress, a lot of it affecting what happens on this very production line in the future," he said.

Jackson campaigned through Ohio, jabbing at Dukakis while calling for an increase in the federal minimum wage as well as a "corporate code of conduct" to prevent American jobs from being exported overseas.

In a luncheon speech to the City Club in Cleveland, he said the minimum wage should be raised to an amount equal to half the average wage in America.

The most recent Bureau of Labor Statistics report pegged the average non-agricultural wage as of March at $9.19 an hour.

Residents try to save farm

New highway will change rural Lenexa

By The Associated Press

LENEXA — In a quiet glade shaded by box elders and elms, a vision of what Johnson County once was may disappear soon, replaced by symbols of what it has become.

Philomene Bennett and Lou Marak share their farmhouse and barn with three wild turkeys, two goats, and other animals. But the site may be condemned so a highway can be widened in this suburb of Kansas City.

But before the wrecking balls and bulldozers pull up the farmhouse and barn, which are nearly 100 years old, Bennett and Marak have decided to make a last stand.

They have posted a petition on their split-rail fence, seeking signatures from anyone who thinks the farm should be saved. About 300 people have signed their names in the week it has been up.

The controversy is over plans to expand Renner Boulevard from a two-lane road into a four-lane highway.

Because a natural gas pipeline runs along the east side of the road, city officials said the additional lanes have to be built on the west side, in the couple's front yard.

Lenexa Mayor Richard Becker said the city council is not trying to "shove" the road project on to the couple. He said most of the property owners along Renner Boulevard signed petitions asking that the project be done.

Becker said the city is studying the possibility of buying land behind the couple's property to relocate the farmhouse and barn. But the couple are not enthusiastic about the plan.

Lenexa Councilwoman Patti Armstrong said she was undecided about the wisdom of condemning the land. She also was not sure moving the farmhouse and barn made sense.

"That's a beautiful setting, no question about it," she said. "But when you get Renner Road in there with four lanes and major office parks all around you, what's going to happen to the ambiance? There's no way you can maintain it. It's going to be gone."

Earl Hoehn, whose family owns a pasture across from Marak and Bennett, said the family has given a development company an option on its land for a $100 million office, retail and retirement center project. The project is tied to the expansion of Renner Boulevard.

"It seems like Lenexa is moving west," Hoehn said. "They say you can't stop progress, so I guess that's kind of the way it is."

Today's Best Kept Secret Is . . .

Who makes more student loans than any other bank in Kansas? The Bank of Horton! Who? Yes, that's right the Bank of Horton. I told you it was a well kept secret.

How can I get my student loan from the Bank of Horton?

It's quite simple! Upon receipt of your financial aid award letter for the 1988-89 academic year, you will be asked to select a lender for your Guaranteed Student Loan if you are eligible. If you did not choose a lender while completing the Family Financial Statement (FFS) form earlier this year, that's where we come in. With your award letter you will receive a list of lenders to choose from. Simply write our lender code (804346) on the form that is to be returned to the financial aid office and the process for your loan will already be started. No more hassles or worry about whether your check will be there when you enroll next fall. You will receive some paperwork in the mail this summer to complete your loan. Please make sure the financial aid office has your permanent home address.

What if I already have loans with another lender?

If you choose the Bank of Horton, we can purchase your loans from your previous lender. With your consent we will make the necessary arrangements to purchase your previous loans.

What if I have questions about obtaining a Guaranteed Student Loan from the Bank of Horton.

Simply give us a call at (913) 486-2851. What no toll free number? That's right, we have learned from past experience that you would rather call and get a quick and friendly answer to your question. No busy lines, no tape recorded messages, just a friendly voice to answer your questions.

So come on, get started today! Remember the Bank of Horton (804346) for your student loan. So you can worry about your summer vacation and not whether your check will be at school next fall!

Storms spread dust, snow in western U.S.

Weather causes traffic deaths, crop damage

By The Associated Press

A storm dumped more than a foot of snow in parts of the Rockies, closing schools and highways Monday, and its powerful wind blew up dust storms that cut down young crops and contributed to two traffic deaths.

"Dust was blowing so it covered everything like a film of oil. You couldn't see in front of your face," said Colorado State Patrol Trooper James E. Price.

The storm also contributed to weekend wind in Southern California that left one boater dead and another missing and believed drowned.

The weather system rolled onto the Plains on Monday, spreading locally heavy rain and thunderstorms ahead of itself, and it also kicked out a funnel cloud over southeastern Colorado that dissipated without causing damage.

Interstate 80 in Wyoming was closed Monday morning from Laramie west to Walcott Junction, then was reopened about five hours later. But police later closed U.S. 287 south out of Laramie because of poor conditions and a series of minor accidents that clogged the highway.

Wind gusting to 40 mph created blizzard conditions around Cheyenne, parts of which had no power during the morning. The wind combined with temperatures in the 20s across most of Wyoming to drive the wind chill factor to 2 degrees below zero, the weather service said.

Schools in Cheyenne were closed and workers in federal offices there were told to follow their department's bad weather plan. State government workers living in rural areas were told their pay would not be docked if they chose not to drive into Cheyenne, said Dennis Curran, spokesman for Gov. Mike Sullivan.

The Colorado State Patrol closed a 70-mile section of Interstate 70 from just east of Aurora to Limon in both directions Monday morning because of numerous accidents, heavy snow and poor visibility.

That section of I-70 was closed for more than two hours Sunday because of zero visibility when 50 mph wind caused a dust storm. Two major pileups on the highway killed two people and injured 17, officials said.

The storm also caused some school closures Monday in eastern Colorado. At Denver's Stapleton International Airport, flights were delayed up to 1½ hours because of poor visibility, said airport spokesman Richard Boulware. He said only 33 planes were able to land every hour, down from the usual 75.

The storm left up to 14 inches of snow in the mountains and foothills of south-central Montana, with up to a foot of snow in the mountains of northern Colorado. Snow also fell in western South Dakota, with 4 inches on the ground in the Black Hills.

Eight inches of snow fell in northwestern Wyoming, closing Yellowstone's eastern and southern entrances Sunday. South of the park, 5 inches of snow was reported in Moose and Jackson, where downed power lines caused blackouts.

Heavy rain fell in advance of the snow, with 2.25 inches in 24 hours at Alliance, Neb., and 1.86 inches at Rapid City, S.D., the weather service reported. Half-inch hail stones fell at Sidney and Alliance, Neb.

The wind whipped loose topsoil into a dust storm around Aberdeen, S.D., forcing some drivers to turn on their headlights in the middle of the day Sunday.

Lack of hopper cars may cause rotting for summer wheat

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — American farmers may be faced with piles of rotting wheat this summer if rail companies don't boost the number of hopper cars used to ship the grain, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., said Monday.

"If we don't get more cars to move the grain from the farmers to the ports soon, I'm afraid we're going to see a replay of the 1970s, when farmers were storing their crops on the ground, and wheat was just rotting in the rail yards," Slattery said at a hearing on the hopper car shortage.

Slattery, who chaired the hearing held by the U.S. House of Representatives' subcommittee on transportation, tourism and hazardous materials, said after the hearing that if the rail companies and private carriers were not able to work out a solution within 30 days, Congress may get involved.

"If the Interstate Commerce Commission can't get the rail companies and private car owners to get things rolling, we're going to have to put pressure on Congress for some action," said Slattery, who is also a member of the House Energy and Commerce Commituee.

"In the long run, though, I think the commission is better qualified to act in this case," Slattery said.

Heather Gradison, chairwoman of the ICC, said at the hearing that the commission did not intend to order U.S. rail companies to step up grain shipments or add hopper cars to their fleets. She said the ICC would intervene only if the entire grain transportation system collapsed.

"We'll step in in the event of a breakdown, which means the inability to transport a major portion of the demand," Gradison said. "What we have now is a bottleneck, not a breakdown. There is just a shortage relative to demand."

Gradison said 33,000 carloads of grain were being shipped each week now. That's 13,000 carloads more than at this time last year, she said.

Another factor leading her to recommend against ICC action, she said, is that grain shippers have inflated the number of cars they say they need.

Oil-enriched eggs reduce blood fats

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Eggs laid by hens that were fed fish oil reduced blood pressure and blood fats in a small group of people and, unlike regular eggs, didn't raise their cholesterol levels, a scientist said Monday.

The eggs used in the study smelled and tasted like fish, but that could probably be avoided by feeding hens deodorized fish oil, Suk Y. Oh, an associate professor of nutrition at the University of Utah, said during the annual meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

If Oh's preliminary findings are confirmed in a larger study, "consumption of such eggs will not increase the risk of developing coronary heart disease" no matter how many are consumed, he said.

Oh said fish oil-enriched eggs could join existing low-cholesterol egg substitutes in markets by summer 1989, but because of the price of fish oil, the eggs would probably cost about 40 percent more than regular eggs.

"It sounds really wonderful" because U.S. egg consumption dropped in recent years due to public concern over cholesterol in eggs, said Pam Peterson, nutrition manager for the Egg Nutrition Center operated by the United Egg Producers and American Egg Board.

Oh's development of the eggs drew cautious praise from the American Heart Association, which recommends people eat no more than 300 milligrams of cholesterol daily because high levels of the fat-like substance in blood are linked to increased risk of hardening of the arteries, heart attacks and strokes.

In Oh's study, 12 healthy people with normal blood levels of cholesterol and triglycerides — fatty substances which also contribute to heart disease — were divided into two groups. Each person ate four eggs daily for eight weeks.

Oh's study, funded by a fish oil manufacturer, "is the type of research that is needed.

Local cocaine raid ends in 3 arrests

$300,000 in drugs seized

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

The largest cocaine raid in Manhattan history left the Riley County Police Department with $300,000 worth of cocaine and marijuana Monday.

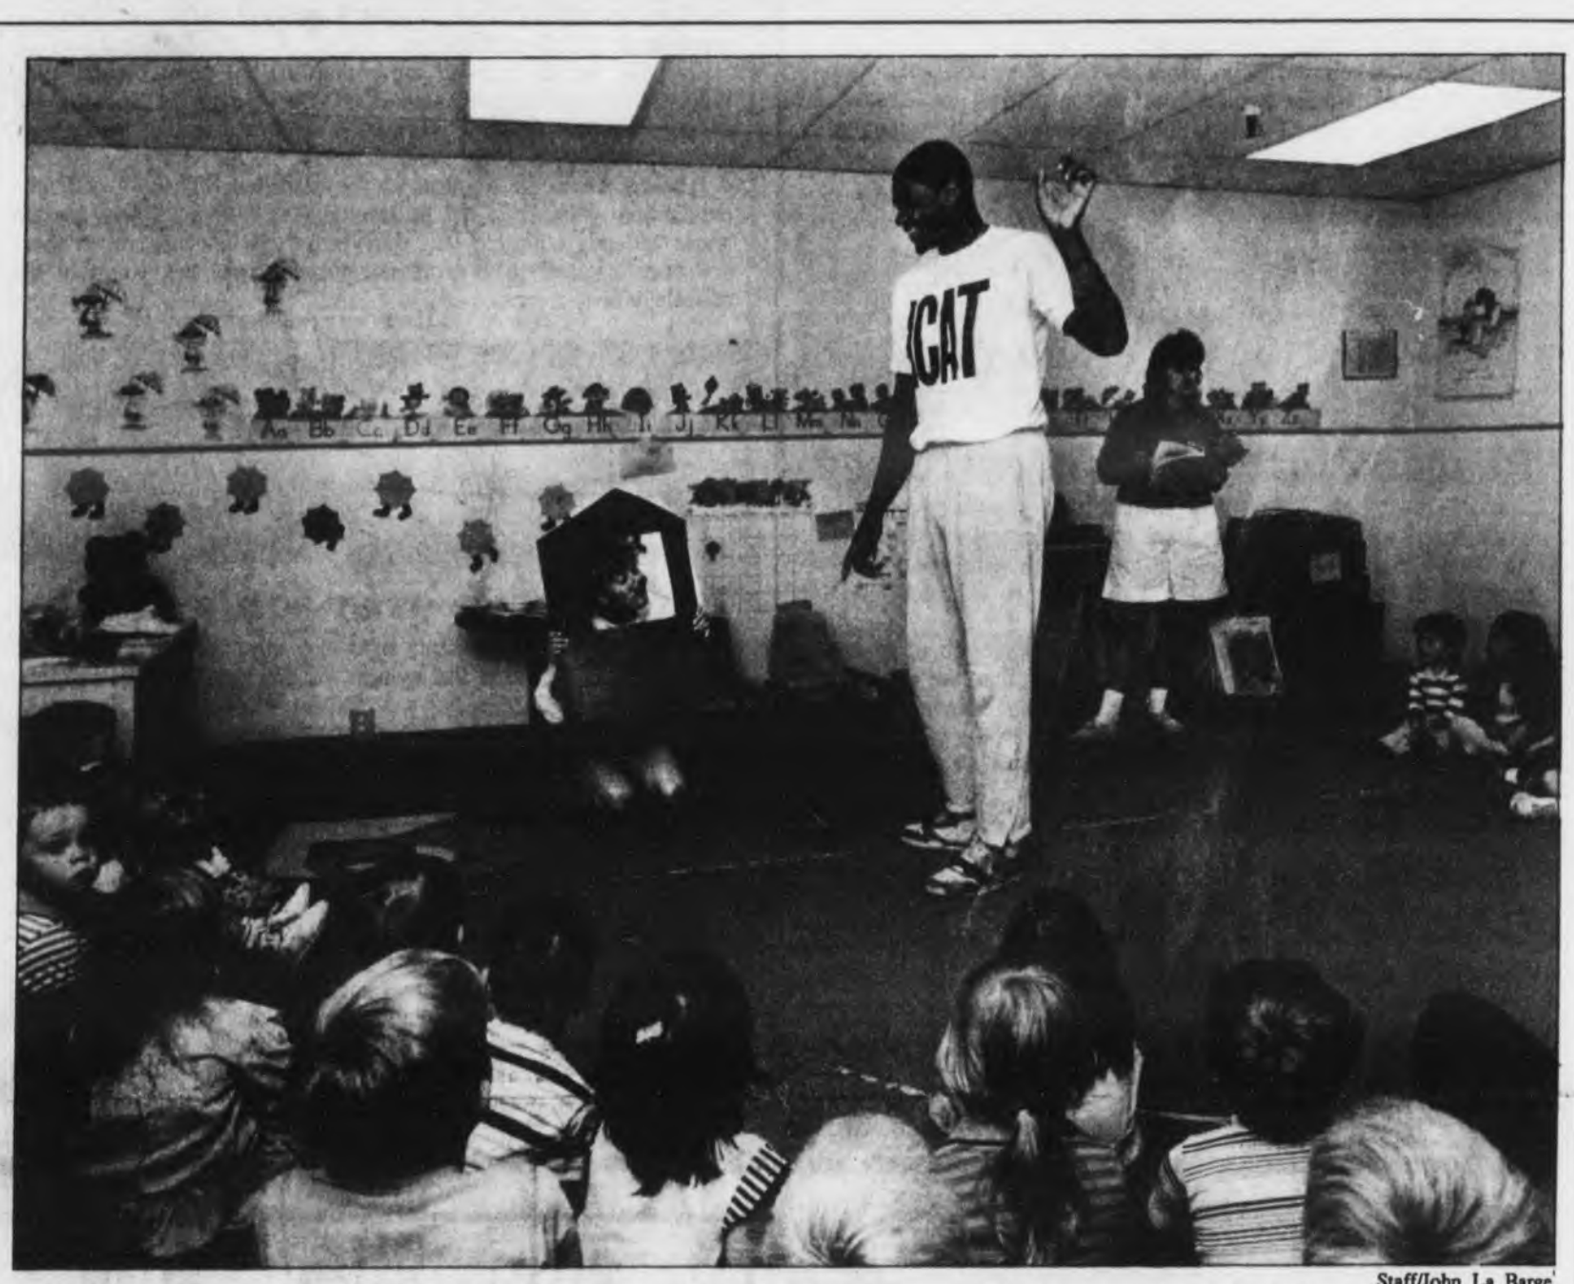
Three men, who were apprehended with the drugs late Sunday and early Monday, are being held without bond in Shawnee County Jail while waiting federal proceedings.

"That is the most cocaine I have ever seen at one time," said Capt. Larry Woodyard, director of criminal investigations for the Riley County Police Department.

According to Woodyard, Gregory Albertson, 48, of West Hollywood, Calif.; Henry Abram, 31, of Los Angeles, Calif.; and Jesse Moorehead, 33, of Manhattan, were arrested and charged in connection with the incident.

Police have been concentrating on the case for the last three weeks as part of their continuing drug enforcement efforts, said S.L. Bieler, assistant director of the RCPD.

"Generally, it has been our experience that once we uncover criminal activity, it is not occurring on the spur of the moment," Bieler said.



Two other individuals were connected with the arrests, Woodyard said.

One, identified only as a "local resident," was questioned and released by police at the scene.

The other is Debra Moorehead, 31, of Manhattan. She was arrested by Riley County police officers on the grounds that she was in constructive custody of a controlled substance. She was released by federal authorities without being charged.

Riley County police, in conjunction with the Pottawatomie Sheriff's department and the federal Drug Enforcement Agency, seized just under three pounds of cocaine, 1½ pounds of marijuana and small amounts of heroin. These items, along with $30,000 in cash and miscellaneous drug paraphernalia, have a combined street value of about $300,000, Woodyard said.

Three of the arrests occurred shortly after 9 p.m. Sunday. Albertson was arrested at the Super 8 Motel, 200 Tuttle Creek Blvd. The Moorecheads were apprehended on Tuttle Creek Boulevard as they were leaving the motel. Abram was arrested at 2:40 a.m. Monday when he arrived at the motel in a taxi. He had been driven to Manhattan from Kansas City International Airport.

Private consultants threaten financial assistance system

By Chad L. Sanborn
Staff Writer

In order to get as much financial assistance as possible, many students are consulting private financial aid advisers.

However, these private advisers have come under fire from financial aid advisers connected with the academic world who question the legitimacy and legality of their private sector counterparts.

Because some of the private firms may lead clients to falsify federal information, many academic financial aid advisers have branded these firms a threat to the entire financial aid system.

"Definitely they are a threat to the whole system," said Larry Prather, president of the Kansas Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

The KASFAA is an organization for Kansas academic financial aid advisers that shares information, trains high school counselors in financial aid matters and offers advice on financial aid legislation.

Prather said most of the problems with these firms are in their wording, such as an agency guaranteeing to find scholarships for clients.

"There are legitimate groups out there that can find scholarships," he said. "But there is a question when they use loopholes that have — and haven't — been created."

Larry Viterna, K-State director of student financial assistance, said he advises parents that private financial aid assistance firms' services should "definitely cost less than $50," and the firms should provide clients with

Storytellers perform for children

By John La Barge
Collegian Reporter

It's not often students get the chance to bring out the children in themselves — and have their grades depend on it.

Assignments for the storytelling class, taught by Mary Nichols, instructor of speech, are not always completed in the classroom. Students perform more than 20 programs for children outside of class.

In groups of two or three, the students work on several different stories to tell to elementary children and pre-schoolers as part of their final class project.

"I thought storytelling was going to be easy," said Judi Walter, senior in journalism and mass communications. "I found out it's not easy to stand in front of a crowd and tell stories."

"I like little kids. They look up to me," said Fred McCoy, sophomore in pre-professional business administration. "I just wanted to pay them back for their support by giving them my time and my ability to make them laugh."

Storytelling is an oral art that children and adults both enjoy, Nichols said. Today's eye-minded television society has neglected the spoken word for emphasis of the visual society.

"I've seen a lot of students come into my class shy and become some of the best storytellers," Nichols said. She has taught storytelling at K-State for the past six years.

"My job is to get (the students) to overcome their shyness so they can be themselves and feel comfortable around the children," Nichols said. "Each person has a talent and it's my job to get it out in the open."

Along with McCoy and Walter, Mary Johansen, senior in journalism and mass communications, presented four skits for the children at Seven Dolors Child Care as part of their final project.

When telling stories, the narrator learns to cater to the audience, Walter said. The process requires a good deal of action and a simple theme.

"There are some basic principles I've learned from this class," Walter said, including presenting materials in a creative way and to not be afraid when speaking.

Fairmont residents pressure water company

Customers file complaints with KCC

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

Relief may be in sight for at least one customer of the Fairmont Heights Water Co.

Last month, three formal complaints were filed with the Kansas Corporation Commission in Topeka against the company and its owners, Everett and Virginia Stilley.

The complaints ranged from poor water pressure in the lines to bad taste and odor in the water.

Analysis

"My problem was the pressure," said Helen Vathauer, one of the three complainants. "In the summer, it is so low I can't even wash clothes."

Vathauer said she filed the complaint because she "was tired of the fighting.

"Because when you let up on the pressure on Stilleys, the water pressure goes down. When the pressure is bad on Stilley, I get decent water pressure. That's why I filed the complaint," she said.

Fairmont Heights Water Co. is a privately owned company that services about 115 residences and businesses in the Fairmont community, east of Manhattan across the Kansas River.

The company was purchased in 1979 by the Stilleys. Some residents say they have had problems ever since.

"During the summer months, the water pressure is so low that we have to wait until 10:30 p.m. for showers," Vathauer said.

However, she said, Stilley told her April 25 that he would provide her with a pressure tank and pump within 30 days to improve pressure.

"I have no idea why he's doing this," Vathauer said. "I think he's been ordered to do it."

The water company is under the jurisdiction of both the KCC and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said Bruce Ney, KCC public information officer. KDHE governs water pressure and quality, while the KCC regulates water bill rates and quality of service — which, in a roundabout way, can be interpreted as pressure and quality, Ney said.

In May 1987, KDHE wrote and told Stilleys to install some 4-inch water pipes in their system to improve the low-pressure problem. The system has 4-inch pipes on all but about a one-mile stretch of the line.

"You should be aware that your system is probably substandard from a public fire protection standpoint, while it may be able to provide sufficient quantities of safe domestic use water," the letter said.

Many residents of the community agreed, saying they were not only concerned about the quality of their water, but with the fire protection aspect as well.

Currently, the community has no fire hydrants. The only form of fire protection is a pickup that carries a 200-gallon water tank.

In July 1987, KDHE again wrote Stilley, saying, "We cannot agree with your request to delay the 4-inch line improvement ... we request you move forward with these improvements, as previously agreed to, this summer."

Stilley wrote back to KDHE, saying that improvements would cost $14,000 to $15,000. "That is something we do not have," he said.

Now, nearly a year later, the pipes remain the same.

"He hasn't gotten around to doing it (installing the pipes)," said Pat McCool, of the technical services section of the Bureau of Water Protection at KDHE. "The pressure is what we're concerned about, because if pressure is low, contaminants can get in."

Stilley, however, contends that pressure is not a problem. "We are above the state-allowed water pressure," he said last October.

In his answer to the complaints, Stilley said he recorded the pressure at the Vathauer residence last summer for a 24-hour period.

"Our recording recorded 28 pounds per square inch at the lowest hour and well above most of the rest of the time," he said.

The state minimum requirement for water pressure is 20 pounds per square inch. However, most cities keep their water pressure at 40 to 50 pounds per square inch, said Richard Black, associate professor of agriculture engineering.

McCool said that while the pressure is definitely a problem, the water quality is not.

Guerrillas kidnap foreigners

BOGOTA, Colombia — Leftist guerrillas said Tuesday they had kidnapped five foreigners, including two Western German honorary consuls and a French diplomat, officials said.

The other two men seized were Swiss trade officials. Honorary consuls of France and Panama escaped kidnap attempts.

The abductions were claimed by the National Liberation Army and the People's Liberation Army, which form part of the National Guerrilla Coordinating Organization, an umbrella for the main armed rebel groups in the country.

Sigfried Marketkurt, 59, the West German honorary consul in Bucaramanga, 200 miles from Bogota, was grabbed by four armed guerrillas at his metals company on the outskirts of the city as employees watched, local police said.

Callers claiming to represent the Maoist National Liberation Army later told radio stations the abduction was a "political act." They said he would be freed in three days with a message for the Colombian government.

Hellmuth Lucker, the honorary consul in Medellin, also disappeared Tuesday. Radio stations received calls from the Uraba Camilista Front, part of the National Liberation Army, claiming the kidnapping.

Reagans interested in astrology

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said Tuesday he has never based any policy or decision on astrological forecasts, but the White House acknowledged that Nancy Reagan checks the positions of the sun, the moon and the stars to help schedule the president's activities.

The president did not deny consulting the writings of astrologers, who make forecasts based on the belief that the heavenly bodies form patterns that can reveal a person's character or future.

Asked if astrology played a part in shaping his schedule, Reagan told reporters with a smile, "You know I'm still looking for the fellas that tell me every day what I'm going to be doing."

To the dismay of the White House, the Reagans' interest in astrology was put in the spotlight by advance word of the contents of a forthcoming book by former chief of staff Donald T. Regan, who frequently was at odds with the first lady before being forced out of his job early last year.

Regan reportedly wrote that Nancy Reagan consulted astrologers to determine the timing of presidential speeches and announcements. Thomas Dawson, a spokesman for Regan, refused to discuss the book Tuesday.

Number of deaths not affected

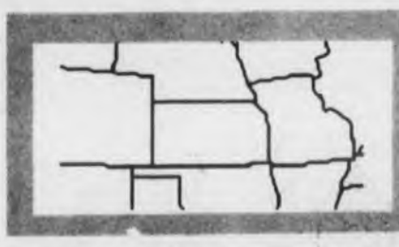
WASHINGTON — Raising the speed limit to 65 mph on some rural stretches of interstate highway has had no effect on the traffic death rate, Transportation Secretary Jim Burnley said Tuesday.

"We're just not finding any distinction" between fatalities on the higher-speed highways and on those where the speed limit remains at 55 mph, Burnley said.

Congress last year passed a law allowing states to increase lawful driving speeds to 65 mph on rural portions of interstate highways, covering about three-fourths of the 43,000-mile interstate system, and on about 7,000 miles of non-interstate highways.

Critics had warned the higher speeds would mean higher traffic fatality rates.

Burnley, following a speech to the Society of Automotive Engineers, said aggressive enforcement of the higher speed limit was important to holding down fatalities.



"A 55 mph limit that is not enforced can be more of a problem than a 65 mph limit that is enforced," he said.

Auction brings $25.3 million

NEW YORK — Ten days of Andy Warhol-mania ended Tuesday when Sotheby's auction house brought down the last gavel on its sale of the late artist's personal collection. The grand total: $25.3 million.

The sale, which featured more than 10,000 items owned by Warhol, attracted an estimated 60,000 people to the Sotheby galleries and set tongues wagging and jaws dropping throughout the art world.

Proceeds from the auction vastly exceeded Sotheby's official pre-auction estimate of $9 million to $13 million. While auction house officials admitted that they purposely underestimated the collection's value, they expressed surprise over the extent of the miscalculation.

Parents sue over son's death

PARSONS — The parents of a boy who died in an accidental shooting have sued the owners of the home where the shooting occurred.

Jerry W. and Janet M. Kinsch are seeking more than $10,000 in the death of their son, Jared. The 7-year-old boy was killed in an accidental shooting in November 1987.

Named in the suit were Roger and Linda Sexton. The suit claimed they were negligent for leaving a shotgun and ammunition in a place accessible to small children and for failing to adequately supervise the children.

Labette County Attorney John Bullard said at the time that the shotgun was mounted in a gun rack. Three other children were in the house at the time, including a 14-year-old girl.

"It appears the children had been playing with the gun earlier, but (Jared) apparently obtained the gun and loaded it himself," Bullard said in November.

Linda Sexton declined to comment on the suit.

Art student given scholarship

While most students will be taking summer classes in Manhattan, Amy Hansen, sophomore in interior design, will be taking her summer courses in Gatlinburg, Tenn.

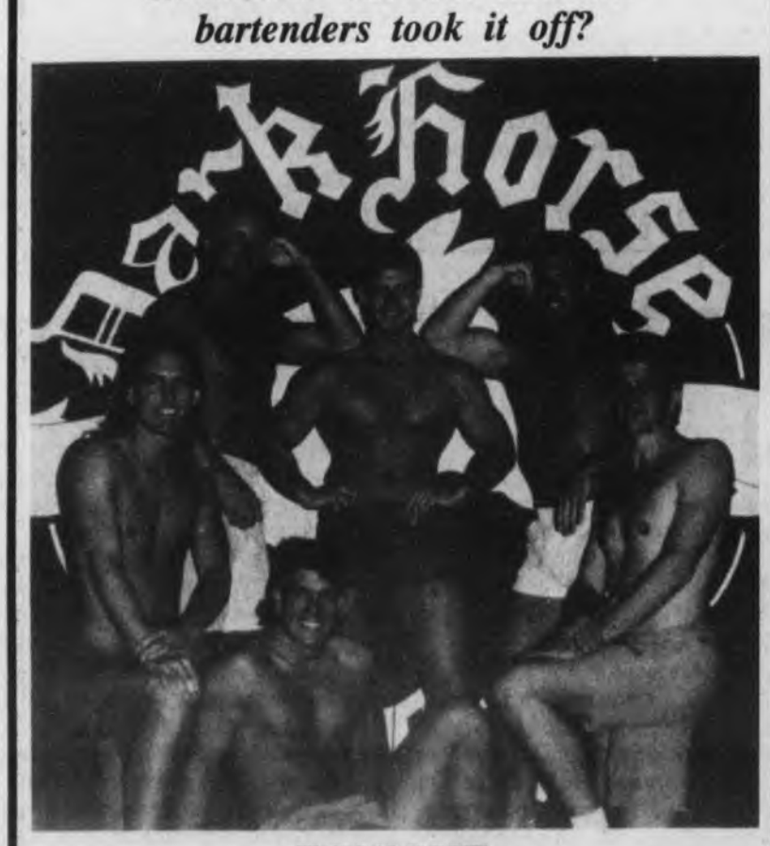
On April 15, Hansen received one of 17 $200 scholarships given to students to enable them to enroll for the summer session at Arrowmont School of Arts and Crafts in Gatlinburg.

The Marianne Reid Wild scholarship is given to students to enable them to enhance their abilities in art. While at Arrowmont, Hansen will be enrolled in oil painting course.

Veterinary professor awarded

A professor of veterinary medical genetics was selected April 13 to receive the 1988 Norden Distinguished Teacher Award.

Horst Leipold was selected for the award by students in the College of Veterinary Medicine. He was a 1987 recipient of the National Association of Animal Breeders Research Award.



Norden Laboratories recognize outstanding undergraduate teachers in up to 28 participating colleges of veterinary medicine in the United States and Canada each year.

Dark Horse Tavern to close doors May 14

New drinking age, taxes cause of failure

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

Dark Horse Tavern, located on the west end of Aggieville, will be pouring its last pitcher of beer May 14 after 17 years in business.

Don Ramey, owner of Dark Horse, attributed inflation of rent, maintenance, liquor costs, taxes and the increase of the drinking age from 18 to 21 as the causes of closing the bar.

"The raising of the drinking age cut 70 percent of my customers," Ramey said.

It has been speculated that Varney's Book Store, located next door to Dark Horse, will buy the bar, but at this point it is only being discussed, Ramey said.

Jon Levin, part owner of Varney's, said he has no knowledge of any transaction taking place, but he said it may be discussed in the future.

Future plans for the bar are vague, but the possibility of another bar taking the place of Dark Horse looks slim, Ramey said.

"If Varney's buys it, they won't let it sit empty for long," Ramey said. "I just can't believe someone would be stupid enough to open another bar in Aggieville."

The building in which Dark Horse sits housed a Duckwall's variety store 17 years ago before it was turned into a bar by John and Sam Gilman, Ramey said. The Gilmans now own part of Varney's Book Store.

"I've worked here for 17 years and owned it for 13," Ramey said. "I hope for an orderly closing-out party on May 14."

If the loss of the underage crowd has hurt Dark Horse, it seems to have helped those bars which permit minors to come in but not drink.

"Ever since the drinking age went up we've had less business," said Eldon Clark, manager of Dark Horse. "If the underage know they can get in down at Brother's and can't get in here, where do you think they're going to go?"

Dark Horse did let minors in last fall, but the tavern started getting ticketed for underaged drinking and discontinued the practice, Clark said.

"We started obeying the law and now we're closing," Clark said.

Brother's allows minors' entry into the bar, but underaged drinking is not allowed, according to law.

"We put a lot into making sure no one underage drinks," said Steve Covert, one of the owners of Brother's. "We have four doormen walking the floor making sure the underage aren't drinking. If we catch a minor drinking, they are kicked out and not allowed to return for a year."

However, Covert said, it's impossible to always successfully police bars.

"I'm sure there are some people who get away with it," Covert said. "You can't stop all of the people all of the time."

Heading toward 'techno'

K-State's scope becoming more narrow

Commentary

STEVE MILLIGAN
Guest Columnist

What type of individual does K-State want to form? What is the ideal? I hope there is no specific idea except that of someone who is open to ideas, well-educated, and — in a sense — well-"trained" in important techniques if a student majors in a technical field. The University should seek to develop a diverse student body of wide-ranging interests.

Diversity is the essence of a university. The word "university" describes a place of learning which is "universal" in knowledge. Unfortunately, K-State is not and will not be a full university.

For true universal availability of knowledge, strong colleges are needed across the board. To the chagrin of the truest educators, official policy states that specific colleges will be emphasized at each of Kansas' main universities. Thus, other colleges are certainly to be de-emphasized. This is considered by many to be a political and fiscal necessity for a state with an abundance of universities.

The University Strategic Plan is a well-developed and necessary asset for shaping the future of K-State. However, the relative de-emphasis on the College of Arts and Sciences in the future clearly means that K-State is going to become even more of a "techno-" and agricultural institution than it already is. With the anticipated decline of the already ailing humanities, it is important that K-State strive to maintain and improve the offerings of a diversity of knowledge.

As the diversity of fields narrows and the quality of some programs diminishes, the diversity of the student body can be expected to diminish somewhat. High-quality electives will decrease even if more electives are required. The range of ideas gained through student interaction will decrease. Nothing can take the place of courses and of specific degrees.

But there is a vast wealth of knowledge regularly available for stimulating and educating students on this campus — and it is rarely fully utilized.

K-State has an abundance of educational lectures every year. University Convocations, Lou Douglas Lectures and lecturers brought in by student groups and community groups present excellent opportunities for students to interact with authorities in many areas.

From the very first day a student sets foot on this campus, that student should be made aware of the wide range of new ideas available from guest lecturers. And the student should be frequently reminded of that resource.

I do believe that if University administrators truly have a commitment to contributing fully to the exchange of ideas, they should loosen their upper lips and promote all the lecture series available. Why not turn some of the salesmanship efforts now devoted to "Purple Pride," campus recruitment and the "prestigious" Landon Lecture series toward promoting diversity of ideas and, consequently, education?

We are all well aware of the lethargy which plagues public institutions. Fortunately, University President Jon Wefald is a real go-getter. If he decides to try to do something, it usually gets done.

Fully promoting all lectures will improve K-State and give those who choose to do so even more to brag about.

Despite AAM protests, K-State benefits farms

K-State may be sued.

The American Agricultural Movement believes K-State's Agricultural Experiment Station is not doing the job it was set up to do. The 1888 Hatch Act created the agricultural experiment stations around the nation in order to provide agricultural information to farmers.

The AAM said the experiment station's current research only benefits large corporate farmers and leaves the small farmers to fend for themselves. Of particular concern to the group is part of a report K-State published called "Agriculture 2000." It examines the future of Kansas farming and the most efficient methods to adapt to the changes.

Parts of the plan rely on chemicals that large farmers need and can afford but small farms can't, the AAM maintains.

The AAM needs to recognize the existence of large farms in Kansas. The reality is that much of Kansas' land is owned by farmers who have large farms.

Since this is the case, the experiment stations are not violating the Hatch Act.

Another realization is the future of Kansas farming. Competition around the world is stiffening.

Kansas is not the only state that grows grain, and the United States is not the only nation that exports it. It is in the best interest of the nation to produce and sell grain at the cheapest possible prices. Many times, the bigger the farm, the more efficient it is.

The AAM is not looking at reality. One of its spokesmen called the Margin of Excellence, which would raise K-State's faculty salaries, "obnoxious" because there are Kansas farmers who are going bankrupt.

Granted, the experiment station does not emphasize the parts of farming the AAM prefers. But it does, however, have the Kansas farmer in mind.

Party with some sense during the coming days

Another long semester is finally over. Amid thoughts of studying for finals and finishing up last-minute projects is the idea of partying like crazy when it is all over.

It is almost a tradition. And maybe it should be. After all of the stress and frantic nights of preparing for long exams, we all need a break to just let loose and relax with our friends before the long summer, or graduation, takes them away from us.

But before the revelry begins, remember that it is far better for the summer or graduation to take friends away than for the tragedy of an unnecessary accident to do so. Accidents don't always give your friends back, and when they do, they might not ever be the same.

Don't be stupid this finals week. Either in your tests or in your parties.

Take the time to plan ahead if alcohol is going to be involved in your partying plans. It doesn't take very long to make arrangements to get intoxicated people home safely, and it is an investment worth the time.

Hopefully, if everyone stays somewhat rational and responsible, needless tragedies can be prevented.

And that's the best graduation present of all.

Environmental issues must be dealt with now

Although a number of conclusions can be drawn from the stories appearing in the Collegian section on environmental problems today, one is most apparent: Too little is being done at almost every level to ensure that citizens will have a clean, safe environment.

But, unfortunately, nobody can provide a panacea that will provide a sparkling world when we wake up tomorrow. That world will be made sparkling — assuming, of course, that it can be made sparkling — only when attitudes change.

Attitudes of lawmakers. Attitudes of manufacturers. Attitudes of everyone.

Because everyone has a stake in making sure the environment is safe. And everyone also has the responsibility to achieve that.

The first thing that needs to be realized is that the earth does not have an endless level of tolerance. Unfortunately, everyone who poured every kind of garbage into the earth for decades never seemed to realize the impact their actions would have.

However, there are thousands upon thousands of people today who are paying for the carelessness and ignorance of the past. In addition to changing attitudes, our elected officials must begin realistically dealing with environmental issues and implement strict guidelines to prevent future abuses.

The least they could do is make sure things don't get any worse.

Officials must also provide for temporary measures when people are faced with contaminated water. Residents in Galena, Kan., and even one in Riley County can attest to what happens when that isn't done.

The issues surrounding environmental abuse can't be put off any longer.

Research journals' high prices place our libraries in jeopardy

Commentary

HARRY MARSH
Guest Columnist

Everyone who has gone to school knows what the library is. It is a dry place where the books are kept safely and in good order. Librarians, who can help you find the information you want, work there. Beyond that, the library is a place of refuge, where you can delve into the wisdom and knowledge of the ages to try to make sense of our disorderly dog-eat-dog world.

Unfortunately, the guard at the door has not been able to keep the dog-eat-dog world from invading the library and threatening its ability to do its job. A relatively small group of publishers of academic journals are profiteering at the expense of the libraries and the larger academic community.

To establish and maintain their academic credentials, scholars publish research findings in these journals. To keep up with their disciplines, scholars are supposed to read them. Libraries that subscribe to them hate to break the continuity by not re-subscribing, so the publisher of a respected journal has captive subscribers.

The money involved is peanuts compared to what a few publishers are doing now. Farrell Library would have to spend hundreds of thousands more dollars on journals if it tried to re-subscribe to all of those it currently receives. The same is true at other Kansas institutions and across the nation. The regents schools are trying to make sure the most important journals are available in at least one of their libraries.

Departments at K-State have been asked to list in priority order the journals they can least afford to lose. A list of journals scheduled for discontinuance has been distributed. A colleague who has seen it said it contained more titles than he had ever imagined the library subscribed to.

Louisiana State University has made a study of the problem, reported in the March issue of Library Issues. LSU discovered that three publishing companies — Pergamon, Elsevier and Springer — accounted for 22 percent ($259,000) of LSU's 1987 serials (periodical) expenditures, but only 3.75 percent of the periodical titles. These subscriptions across the board are very expensive, and for the most expensive one-fourth of them, the increases in subscription price have been nine to 10 times as much as the less expensive journals. The few most expensive journals are driving the other journals (as well as books, etc.) off the shelves.

The LSU study also reported on a Plenum Publishing Corp. subsidiary, Consultants Bureau, which publishes Soviet journals translated into English. This year LSU is spending $45,502 on 50 CB titles. That averages $901 per subscription. LSU has doubled its expenditures on CB's titles since 1981.

NASDAQ, a financial securities institution, in its publication of the 100 most profitable companies in the U.S. lists Plenum 18th from the top. It is the only publishing firm in the top 100.

Plenum's annual report quotes Martin E. Tash, chairman, as saying that subscriptions have declined but price increases have more than offset any possible loss of revenue.

Across the board, the number of pages purchased from these four companies have not increased, but the cost has multiplied.

James F. Govan, university librarian at the University of North Carolina, has said that today's publisher "no longer maintains a delicate balance between quality and solvency but is seeking unabashedly to enhance profits." For a librarian, that is strong language.

An emergency exists. Friends of the KSU Libraries has made a small effort to meet it. Departing from its stated goal of enriching the library, it allocated $7,000 this year toward meeting the periodicals crisis, a drop in the bucket. Students, faculty and others who wish to add to this figure and indicate their concern for the injustice may do so by joining the organization before June 1, all dues will be added to the emergency fund.

These and other emergency efforts do not solve the problem. Institutions and their administrators, librarians and scholars must band together with politicians and others to assure fair pricing of research journals. If not, deans will be telling faculty members that to get tenure or promotion they must "publish in those journals we can't afford to subscribe to anymore," and the library will cease to be a dry place to keep the books, because there will be no money to keep the roof in repair.

Letters

News judgment

Editor,

I think it is sad that a photo and accompanying story of the greek chariot races were considered newsworthy enough to receive front page coverage in the April 18 Collegian, while the events and activities of International Week went unreported by the paper.

Perhaps no one put in a news-tip about International Week, but since there was a paid advertisement in the paper every day during that week with a schedule of events, one would think somebody on staff would take note.

There were activities every day at noon in the Union, as well as international films and a potluck dinner on Saturday — please don't tell me nobody in the newsroom knew about it.

The international students account for 5 percent of the student population and deserve the same right of coverage by the paper as do greek events.

Although it may come as a shock, not all of us are members of sororities and fraternities.

OUR TROUBLED ENVIRONMENT

Wednesday
May 4, 1988

A Kansas State Collegian
Special Section

Ours is a throwaway society. Convenience is something with which all of us have become accustomed. And future consequences are something we'd rather not think about until tomorrow.

Those three observations — probably more than anything else — explain why today we are finding ourselves in a troubled environment. And indeed it is troubled.

Water sources are becoming increasingly suspect of contamination, one of our primary sources of energy is under continual scrutiny and critics charge that the federal agency responsible for ensuring a clean environment is doing anything but that.

Even in Riley County, which is often viewed as being far removed from some of the nation's other environmental horror stories — including Love Canal and Times Beach, Mo. — the pricetag for a generation of carelessness is coming due.

And everyone is scrambling to determine who will pay the price.

When people talk about the price of this nation's carelessness, they usually speak of it in monetary terms.

In millions and billions of dollars.

But there is a human price that untold thousands of people are paying every day. It's a price far more substantial than any dollar figure could ever be.

Unfortunately, too many people are already paying that price through their suffering from diseases with long names and ailments that strike without mercy. But, many say, it's the ones who haven't begun paying who are the most tormented.

They can only wait for the inevitable.

Although human suffering is by far most substantial, the monetary price also will be staggering. One official in Washington, D.C., said estimates have been made that it may cost up to $100 billion to clean up the Department of Defense sites alone.

When talk of a cleanup arises, leave out the terms "frugal" and "reasonable."

They won't work in this game.

Through this section, the Collegian hopes to educate its readers on the problems facing this and future generations and efforts being made to solve the problems.

Perhaps through education and awareness we will one day no longer have to refer to our environment as troubled.

Asbestos use creates health concerns

Exposure to fiber considered unsafe

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Asbestos constitutes one of the great environmental problems of modern times. Once called the "miracle mineral," it now poses a health hazard.

Asbestos was used in many products because it was a way to inexpensively add strength and provide thermal and acoustical insulation or fire protection.

Today, asbestos is all but outlawed because of its potential as a health hazard. However, some of it still remains on ceilings and walls, around ductwork, inside ovens and appliances and around water and steam pipes.

The ancient Greeks named the fibrous mineral "asbestos," or "incombustible."

When the fibers are inhaled, asbestos becomes one of the most potent carcinogens known. Its effects are irreversible and usually fatal. No level of exposure is considered safe, and the symptoms of its poisoning are not immediate.

Asbestos fibers — colorless, odorless and sometimes microscopic in size — are everywhere. Their unique aerodynamic properties allow them to remain suspended in the air almost indefinitely.

Until about 10 to 20 years ago, asbestos was used for filtering wine and beer. It was even used to make the gas masks worn by soldiers in World War II.

By far, its largest use in America is in cement products. About 200,000 miles of asbestos cement pipe are still in use, some carrying city drinking water.

Removal and repair

Government regulations state that the removal and repair of asbestos can only be completed by certified asbestos workers.

K-State has certified asbestos workers in the Department of Physical Facilities and Housing Maintenance.

The University's policy on asbestos removal or repair states: "Any Kansas State University department that allows an uncertified individual to engage in asbestos work will be responsible for any fines levied by the EPA, OSHA, Kansas Department of Health and Environment, as well as any additional costs incurred for air monitoring, surveillance and asbestos clean-up."

In recognition of the problem of asbestos, the federal government enacted the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act, or AHERA, governing the management of asbestos levels in primary and secondary schools, in February 1987.

"Currently, only schools with grades kindergarten through grade 12 are affected by AHERA," said John Kent, physical plant supervisor for facilities building maintenance and certified asbestos inspector.

"We as a university don't fall under the AHERA regulations, but there is action in Congress that could extend the requirements to include all public buildings," he said.

If that should happen, every building on campus would have to be inspected by a certified inspector to identify the location of all asbestos in each building, Kent said.

The cost of such a survey could total as much as 20 cents to 25 cents per square foot, and there are about 3.5 million square feet in campus buildings, he said.

Immediate action would have to be taken on any asbestos discovered by the inspector that posed a health hazard to the building's occupants, he said.

Small repairs could be affected in some areas using a special plastic patch or a plastic impregnated tape, Kent said.

"Any work done by asbestos workers must be done in complete uniform, including respirator, boots, gloves and a tie-back suit," he said.

Asbestos that is removed from the buildings is buried at the Riley County Landfill. However, when the landfill closes in July of 1990, the University will be have to find another disposal site, he said.

Kent said most campus buildings contain asbestos in one form or another, including those just recently renovated or built.

Under AHERA regulations, a book identifying the location of asbestos in each building would have to be maintained until three years after the building has been torn down or the asbestos removed, he said.

"That would mean we would have to maintain well over 100 books at K-State," he said. "We have an internal program to help identify asbestos; each department head gets a book on what to look for and what to do.

"We want to know if it's out there. The welfare of the people is our priority."

Health risks

For some time, asbestos workers have been known to be facing a health risk, but there is growing concern about a new wave of deaths and disabling illnesses among demolition workers, custodians, electricians and others exposed to asbestos while working in buildings containing it.

Some professions considered at risk include:

■ Mechanics — Researchers at Mount Sinai School of Medicine estimate that 1 million auto and truck mechanics nationwide may have been exposed to asbestos released during brake relining and clutch resurfacing work. As a result, about 20,000 people are expected to die of cancer within the next 40 years.

■ Firefighters — Three years ago, cancer replaced heart disease as the No. 1 killer of firefighters. Asbestos is suspected of being the culprit in some of the deaths. The clothing firefighters wear to protect against intense heat contains asbestos, and the firefighters are exposed to asbestos when they rip through some walls and ceilings looking for hot spots.

■ Trade workers — Medical screenings of sheet metal workers, boilermakers and rubber workers show alarming incident rates of asbestos disease.

Asbestos has been identified as the culprit in several disabling diseases, including:

■ Asbestosis — a scarring of lung tissue, often disabling because it impedes breathing. This particular form of asbestos disease afflicts an estimated 65,000 Americans. It is an occupational disease related to a heavy exposure. It can be fatal by itself and can lead to lung cancer.

■ Cancer — Scientists conservatively estimate 10,000 U.S. cancer deaths each year can be linked to asbestos, including cancers of the larynx, gastrointestinal tract and internal organs. Cancer may take from 15 to 40 years to develop after the first exposure. For asbestos workers, risk of lung cancer is increased and for asbestos workers who smoke, the risk is 50 times greater than for that of a non-smoker.

■ Mesothelioma — An extremely deadly cancer of the lung and stomach lining that often is the result of low levels of asbestos exposure. Once virtually unknown, it now kills an estimated 1,500 Americans each year and the trend is increasing.

Asbestos at K-State

Steven Galitzer, University industrial hygienist and asbestos coordinator, is responsible for the coordination, inspection, removal, training and safety of asbestos on campus.

He said that while no requirement currently exists, survey teams are being developed in anticipation of AHERA regulations being extended to include all public buildings.

The requirement to identify the location of all asbestos is already in place for all primary and secondary schools nationwide, he said.

Galitzer said that until about the mid-'70s, the use of asbestos was widespread in construction of buildings. And, he said, K-State buildings are no exception.

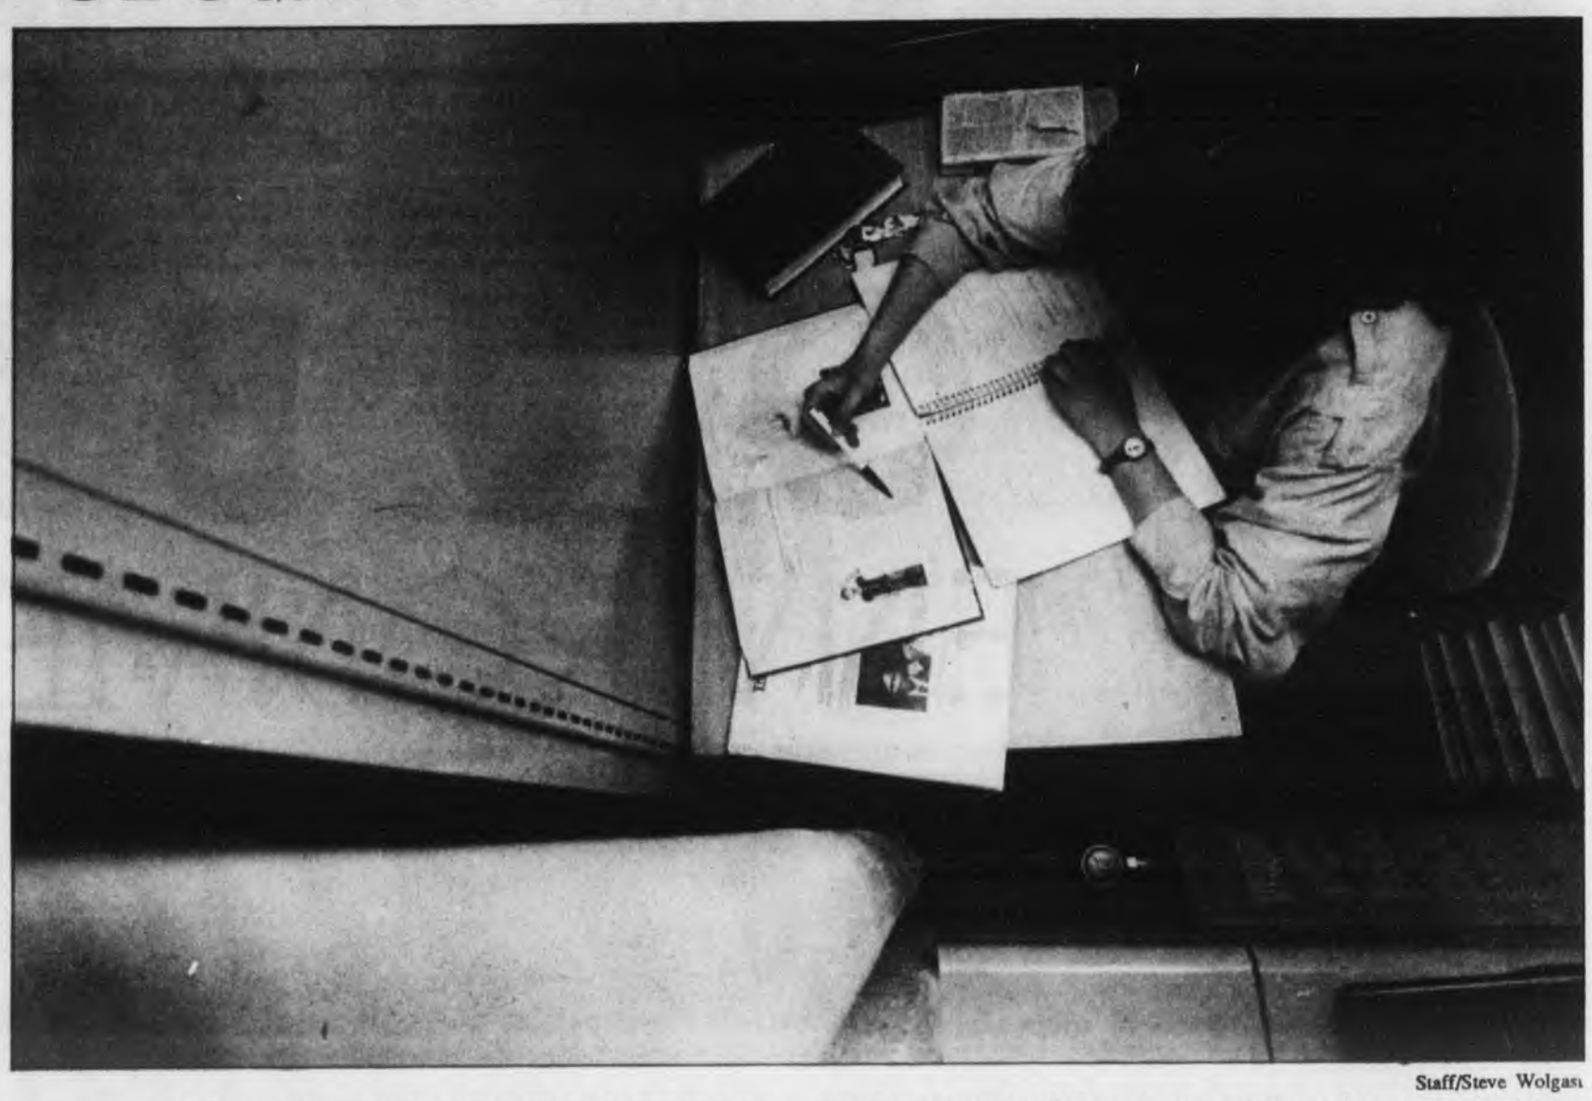
"The KDHE has stringent rules on asbestos, and we follow the rules," he said. "The likelihood of dying in a car accident is far greater than from dying of asbestos.

"I believe those who work in the buildings on this campus are safe."

Galitzer said there is an ongoing program to make people aware of the hazards of asbestos and to enable them to deal with the problem in a rational manner.

"We talk to custodians and maintenance people. We tell them this is what it looks like, and if they find it to let us work with it," he said.

"Just because there is asbestos in your building, you're not going to die."



Everyone susceptible

Everyone is susceptible to asbestos. It's in the air and in the water.

People who live in cities probably inhale asbestos with each breath because, among other sources, automotive brake linings and clutch plates contain it. Indoors, asbestos may be in the air from damaged or aged fireproofing and insulation.

EPA studies have shown hundreds

■ See ASBESTOS, Page 6

Staff/Steve Wolgast

Almost every building on campus contains asbestos, which was commonly used as an insulating material until the mid-1970s. Farrell Library contains asbestos insulation on water and steam pipes, some of which has been damaged by vandalism allowing the fibers to become airborne.

School district plans study of problem

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

In compliance with a law passed in 1986, the Manhattan school district has hired the Max Bishop Co. of Salina to assess the degree of the district's asbestos problem. Public and private schools around the country have until October to meet the asbestos-inspection deadline set by Congress to speed the pace of the battle against the known carcinogen.

"We've known for several years that we have asbestos in some of our buildings," said Richard McKittrick, clerk of the board. "Asbestos was a pretty common building material in the past, and some of our buildings are a little older."

Asbestos, usually used as an insulation material for pipes and boiler systems, is dangerous when it becomes friable or crumbly. Friable asbestos releases fibers that can cause a variety of respiratory ailments, including lung cancer.

"We've been aware since last fall that an inspection of the buildings was required by law," McKittrick said. "We have an architectural company surveying our buildings and sampling what they find. We are expecting a report of the situation in three weeks to a month."

Although there is asbestos in district buildings, it is believed to be non-friable and poses no immediate health problems to students or district employees, he said.

"At this time we are waiting for the management report (from the Max Bishop Co.)," he said. "At that time we will make a decision whether to remove the asbestos or to take other action."

"It is really hard to say at this time how much this situation will cost without really knowing the extent of the problem," McKittrick said.

The 1986 law is in response to efforts made by the Environmental Protection Agency in the 1970s to allow school districts to voluntarily handle their asbestos problems.

In 1982, the EPA issued a regulation requiring every school district to inspect for the substance by January 1984 and to notify school employees and parents if friable asbestos was found. There was no requirement that any other action be taken.

Six months after the deadline, only 11 percent of the districts had complied with the regulation, which had been broadly attacked as too weak.

The EPA also discovered districts that took action to have the substance removed often had unqualified "rip-and-skip" contractors, who filled the air with fibers, do the work.

Under the new law, districts have until October to have their buildings inspected and start plans to deal with any friable asbestos and until July 1989 to begin carrying out those plans.

Professors study drinking water

Sampling includes more than 100 wells

By Steven Zadina
Collegian Reporter

Many Kansans may be drinking water that contains dangerous levels of contamination.

This was the conclusion of a study completed on the quality of drinking water on farmsteads across Kansas by three K-State professors.

The study, which began in 1985, involved sampling water from more than 100 wells in various locations across the state.

"In most counties, we needed two participants. So, we asked county extension agents for the names of five people that they knew had wells used for drinking water on their farms," said James Steichen, project co-investigator and professor of agricultural engineering.

Letters were sent to those individuals explaining the project. Participants received a free water analysis of their well, which usually costs more than $500, Steichen said.

Few wells were found to have dangerous levels of contamination. Those farmers who had dangerous levels of contamination in their wells were informed of the levels and told what, if anything, could be done. No wells were tested in the Manhattan area.

The 50 participating counties were selected based on their number of wells.

The project's first phase determined the extent and amount of contamination in farmstead wells.

Well samples were used to determine the levels of pesticides, nitrates, selenium, mercury, benzene and other contaminants in the water. The study found that maximum contaminant levels, set by the federal government, had been exceeded in many wells.

"Nitrate was the most common contaminant. Twenty-eight percent of the wells tested were above the maximum standard for drinking water," Steichen said.

Nitrates are particularly dangerous to babies and pregnant women, he said. An excessive amount of nitrates can alter the hemoglobin of humans and animals, preventing the proper amount of oxygen to be carried in the blood. This can kill both humans and young farm animals.

From pesticides, atrazine was the most common contaminant.

"We found that contamination was more likely in central and northeast Kansas, but no area was really free of risk," Steichen said.

The study's third phase is the implementation of an education program for farm well users and contractors digging the wells to inform them of possible contamination in the area.

Steichen's co-investigators are James Koelliker, professor of civil engineering, and Doris Grosh, professor of industrial engineering and statistics. Former graduate students R.D. Yearout and A.T. Heiman were involved in the project's first phase.

"Nitrate was the most common contaminant."
—James Steichen, project investigator

The study was funded by a $15,000 grant from the Kansas Water Resources Institute and a $15,000 grant from Kansas Department of Health and Environment. The office of Hazardous Waste Research, a division of the Department of Engineering, also donated money and supplied a graduate student and other student workers.

"I would encourage people who have a private well to have their well tested regularly for nitrate and bacteria," Steichen said.

ASBESTOS

at a glance

What is asbestos?

The term "asbestos" refers to a unique group of minerals that are widely useful because of their special properties. Asbestos minerals are fibrous silicates with a crystalline structure and are found in rock formations throughout the United States and the world. As a result of both natural occurrence and commercial use, asbestos is commonly found in water supplies and in outside and indoor air.

What diseases are associated with asbestos exposure?

Numerous studies of workplace exposures in occupational environments have linked asbestos with three diseases: asbestosis, a fibrotic lung conditional lung cancer; and mesothelioma, a rare cancer of the surface linings of lung or abdomen tissues.

Problems, procedures plague Wolf Creek

Plant 'safe' despite recent occurrences

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

The procedural red tape that makes running Wolf Creek Generating Station "an administrative nightmare" also makes the plant look more unsafe than it really is, according to one nuclear expert.

Dean Eckhoff, head of the Department of Nuclear Engineering and professor of nuclear engineering, said the plant's problems are more procedural than technical.

"The NRC (Nuclear Regulatory Commission) requires a procedure for everything (plant employees) do. There is not anything left for thought. The people are more of a robot," Eckhoff said. "Thinking on your own is considered taboo by the NRC."

Mona Grimsley, information specialist for the plant, said most of the administrators agree that running the plant requires many proceedures.

"It's just the nature of the beast. It has to be that way. But no matter what, you don't think of everything," she said.

Kansas Gas and Electric Co. and Kansas City Power & Light Co. each own 47 percent of the plant, and Kansas Electric Power Cooperative Inc. owns the remaining 6 percent.

Maintenance problems

Problems at the plant, which is located near Burlington, began in September when the plant was closed early due to an employee error. It was scheduled to close in October for a maintenance check and refueling.

It remained closed for 100 days. In October, two employees accidentally sprayed radioactive material on themselves while fixing a clogged hose.

After a contract worker was electrocuted while cleaning a transformer at the site on Oct. 14, the plant was cited for procedural violations. In November, low-level radioactive waste was dumped at the Coffey County Landfill twice.

"What was dumped out there was very low level. We found four items out there with more radioactivity than what we sent," Grimsley said.

Eckhoff, who is a member of the plant's Nuclear Safety Review Committee, said he believes the incident was an honest error.

"Some things become so routine that people think they know the procedure. Then some (people) become a little careless and things go against regulation," he said.

"It's a tough thing to call — is it the fault of the employee or of the procedure? It's roughly equivalent to pulling up to a four-way stop, seeing no one there, and rolling on through."

As a result of the incidents, the plant was assessed a $100,000 fine in March.

"We don't think (the fine) was fair. The NRC doubled the fine from $50,000 because it claimed we didn't take prompt action. But that isn't right. We did take action," Grimsley said.

She said the fine is being appealed and Wolf Creek Nuclear Operating Corp., which runs the plant, is asking that the fine be lowered to the original $50,000.

Whatever happens, Grimsley said, the fine will be paid by the plant's stockholders and will not be passed on to consumers.

Although the fine is twice the normal amount and is a considerable amount of money, Eckhoff said it wasn't important.

"The fine is inconsequential to the whole problem. It won't make that big of a difference. I think they're embarrassed enough to do something about the problems now," he said.

Stevi Stephens, director of the Nuclear Awareness Network Lawrence, said that in 1987 the plant had the worst operating record for pressurized water reactors. Only three boiling water reactors, which are usually considered less safe, had worse records than Wolf Creek.

The permit for the $3 billion plant construction was granted May 17, 1977. It received its low-power license March 11, 1985, and began operations Sept. 3, 1985. It received its full-power license June 4, 1985.

Whenever a physical problem occurs at the plant, the plant's managers are required to file a Licensee Event Report with the NRC.

If the number of LERs filed is compared to the number filed by Wolf Creek's sister plant Callaway 1, near Fulton, Mo., Eckhoff said Wolf Creek's would be higher.

"A big problem (causing) the LERs is the chloride monitors on the plant. They have been giving (plant officials) trouble since day one," he said.

The cost of permanently repairing the monitors is about $300,000 and has been budgeted for next year, he said.

The plant's second major problem is the number of Cognate Personnel Event reports filed, Eckhoff said. The plant's technical specifications call for CPEs to be made on doors that are improperly propped open or packing things and boxes that are stored where they don't belong. None of these incidents require a report at the Callaway plant.

"It's just the differences in the way it is written and the managers. It started out that they were supposed to be identical, and then the deviations started," Eckhoff said. "It's a question of does a procedure make something safe."

Sensitive security

The plant's security is also unusually sensitive, he said.

"There seems to be an unusually sensitive device around the perimeter. If the wind blows a newspaper up against it, the system goes off and a visual check has to be made of it. It has gotten to the point in some cases where they don't check it out," he said.

The plant's security system is controlled by two computers. If both of those computers are down at the same time, even for a matter of seconds, it results in a CPE report being filed.

"If you do some alibiing along the way, the number (of the plant's reports) is reduced to the same base," Eckhoff said. "It's just an administrative nightmare that just goes on and on."

However, Stephens said, the NRC's reaction to problems at the plant and the improper dumping is an outrage.

"The NRC's reaction was a joke," Stephens said. "The public and the press just let it slide by. But it makes you wonder, if this is going on — what else is?"

Although the level of the improperly disposed waste was low, any level of radioactivity is dangerous, Stephens said.

"They claim what they release is within NRC limits, but even some NRC people, who are basically lap dogs to the industry, say those limits are too high," Stephens said.

As an example, Stephens said about 9,000 people in the United States will die from cancer each year that can be traced directly to nuclear power plants' routine release of radioactivity each year.

"I have this (pamphlet) from Wolf Creek that says that the worst accident the plant could have would be equivalent to 30 years of normal releases. They know what they're doing," she said.

Backup systems

Despite the network's accusations, Grimsley said the plant and the area surrounding it are safe because the plant is designed with backup systems.

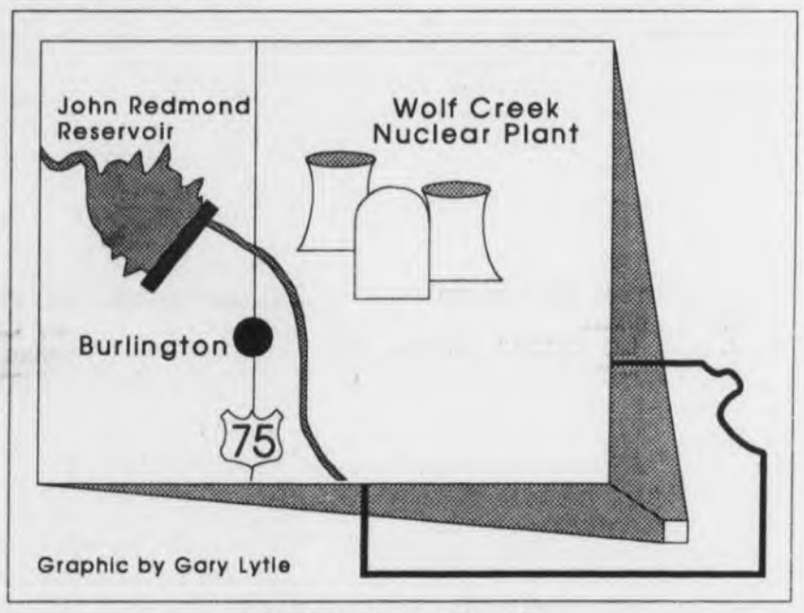
The electrical system, she said, is a primary example of the systems' redundancy.

The plant's first electrical source is the electricity which is produced by the plant. If that fails, the plant has access to two independent power sources off site. Should those fail, there are two diesel generators on site — only one of which would be needed to operate the plant.

"There is one thing after another after another to prevent problems," Grimsley said.

Another example, she said, is the plant's cooling lake. If the dam creating the lake broke, the level of the lake would decrease. However, a lake is constructed within the lake, and it is large enough that it would provide sufficient coolant to cool the plant and shut it down.

As an additional safety measure, the reactor vessel, steam generator, pressurizer and primary auxiliary systems are all housed in a steel-lined, concrete containment building.



"That building is made to withstand a direct hit from a 747 (airplane), tornado, earthquake or anything," Grimsley said.

The walls of reinforced concrete are about 3 feet thick and the inside diameter of the containment is 140 feet. The building is 206 feet high.

It was inside that building that on an average day in 1987 the plant created 12 cubic-feet of low-level solid waste and 8,500 gallons of liquid waste.

"The solid waste is packed in 55-gallon drums and transported to a low-level dumpsite. We fill about 1½ a day," Grimsley said.

Before it is transported on flat-bed trailer, the barrels are stored in the Radwaste Building on site.

Regional waste site

Beginning in 1992, all of the solid low-level waste will be dumped at a regional waste site in Nebraska.

Nebraska was selected to be the host state by the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact composed of Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

The disposal facility is to be in operation for 30 years before a second one is opened in another compact state. The second site is expected to receive the radioactive pieces from seven nuclear power plants that are scheduled to be decommissioned during that time.

Kansas, at one time, was considered to be the possible site for the waste dump. A 200-acre tract about 40 miles east of the plant was considered to be the most acceptable, according to a Kansas Geological Survey.

"Losing the site isn't going to have a real major impact," Eckhoff said. "What is deposited in a low-level dump could be deposited in a sanitary landfill just as safely. It just isn't."

Although the Nebraska site is closer than the three current disposal loca-

NUCLEAR POWER
at a glance

Do nuclear plants affect the environment?
All methods for producing electric power affect the environment. Power plants that burn coal, oil or natural gas emit pollutants such as sulfur and nitrogen oxides. Nuclear plants emit none of the products of combustion because they do not "burn" anything. They do, however, emit very small amounts of radioactive materials.

How reliable are nuclear plants?
Nuclear generating stations have been very reliable producers of commercial electricity since the first practical nuclear power plant went on-line in 1957. They have been as reliable as fossil-fueled generating stations.

Can a reactor explode?
It is physically impossible for a commercial nuclear reactor to explode like an atomic bomb, whether through accident, sabotage or any other reason.

How are reactors made safe?
Reactors are made safe through well-established designs, careful engineering and exhaustive operator training. Designers make use of the multiple barrier concept (using many barriers instead of one) and redundancy designs (providing several backup barriers to accomplish the same task) to provide "defense in depth."

How much exposure do workers in nuclear power receive?
Workers in the commercial nuclear industry necessarily receive more radiation than do members of the public. Of the 45,978 radiation workers in 1978, 65 percent received radiation doses that were too small to measure.

Emergency drills, plans prepare residents for disaster possibilities

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

In spite of all of the planning that can be done for a nuclear emergency, nothing is a test of the real thing.

As public information relations director for the State Division of Emergency Preparedness of the Adjutant General Department, Maj. Joy Moser said the planning for a possible accident at Wolf Creek Generating Station never stops.

"We have plans for the worst case scenario and different scenarios. Some start before 6 a.m. and others start in the evening. We have primary and secondary road blocks; everything is planned," Moser said.

Wolf Creek has 21 Emergency Plan Subzones within a 10-mile evacuation zone surrounding the plant. Residences and businesses within this area are considered to be the most threatened should an accident occur.

Residents near Wolf Creek are given evacuation maps and booklets containing information about radiation poisoning and nuclear energy.

And at least once a year, Moser said, a full-scale drill is performed.

"We had an exercise in September, then one in January. They make sure that we keep our skills up," she said.

About a week before the actual drill, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission announces it to the public. Usually, the drill is scheduled for a 10-mile evacuation; however, it can be for as much as 50 miles. The closest residence to the plant is 1½ miles away.

All of the drills have been given passing marks by the NRC and the nine other agencies that monitor them, said Mona Grimsley, information specialist at the plant.

In the event of a real emergency, an alert siren will be sounded at the plant.

However, since the siren does not reach some of the homes within a 10-mile radius of the plant, some of the homes have radios which are activated by the sirens.

"The radios are tuned to WIBW-AM 580 in Topeka so that the bulletins can be broadcast in the house," Grimsley said.

Problems at the plant can be verified by technicians and released to the governor's press secretary and Coffey County's clerk for the public in less than half an hour, Moser said.

A briefing center would then be established at Nickell Memorial Armory in Topeka, and updates would be broadcast over local Emergency Broadcast System radio and television stations.

Wolf Creek and the Division of Emergency Preparedness have three stages of emergency alerts: shelter indoors, respiratory protection and evacuation.

If residents are asked to shelter indoors, they should go inside a building, closing all of the doors and windows. All vents, heating and cooling systems should be closed and shut off. Pets should be kept inside.

Residents are instructed to protect their breathing by covering their nose and mouth with a folded cloth.

While preparing to leave during an evacuation, residents are encouraged to pack as though they were going on a vacation. A booklet from Wolf Creek lists identification, checkbooks and credit cards, a portable radio, flashlight, baby supplies, blankets and pillows, extra clothing, eyeglasses, dentures and prescription drugs as definite things to pack.

Before leaving, residents should put out fires in fireplaces and stoves, and turn off all major appliances. Also, they should be sure to lock their doors and windows, and turn all of lights off.

"We had an exercise in September, then one in January. They make sure that we keep our skills up."
—Maj. Joy Moser

As residents leave, they are asked to tie a white cloth to the outside front doorknob or their mailbox to signal to officials that they have evacuated.

Students in Burlington and New Strawn schools and day care centers would be taken either to Emporia State University or Lyon County Fairgrounds in the event of an evacuation. Students in LeRoy would go to the National Guard Armory in Iola, and students in Waverly would go to Ottawa High School.

The main thing, according to information provided by Wolf Creek, is to remain calm, disregard rumors and listen to the radio or television for news updates.

Galena: Meeting contamination head-on

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

No one can accuse residents of Galena, Kan., of easily giving up. Those who live in this small southeastern community a stone's throw away from Joplin, Mo., have been handed a problem many other communities would refuse to face.

They have been handed water contamination on a mass scale.

And they are facing it head-on.

"We haven't had any mass migration," said Tom Allen, mayor of this mostly retirement community of 3,800. Instead, the residents are working with local leaders, state representatives and the Environmental Protection Agency in cleaning up the environmental nightmare left over by the mining industry, which went bust some 65 years ago.

In 1983, a 110-mile portion of Cherokee County was added to EPA's National Priorities List because of environmental and health risks posed by abandoned lead-zinc mines. Galena is one of six sub-sites within Cherokee County.

Marvin Thompson, president of the Rural Water District No. 8 Proposed Steering Committee, is heading up an effort to establish a rural water district near Galena that would provide water to the residents who have wells contaminated by the remnants of the mining industry. When the mines were running strong, Thompson said the water that accumulated in them would be occasionally pumped out and disposed of. However, that water wasn't contaminated and future concerns either weren't realized or weren't regarded.

"I think most of the people really didn't think a lot about it," he said.

But that was when the times were good for mining in Galena.

"Whenever they finally ran out of good material to mine, they closed up and filled up with water," he said. "Most people looked at it like just a big hole."

It was with the "big holes" that the trouble began. The water that filled the empty mineshafts became contaminated with high levels of lead, zinc and other minerals and soon began to pollute area wells via the underground waterflow.

Now, 418 households and slightly more than 1,000 residents have a contaminated water source.

Health problems

And the assessment of health problems caused by the contamination is just beginning. Dr. John Neuberger, associate professor of preventive medicine at the University of Kansas School of Medicine in Kansas City, Kan., conducted tests in the area and found that levels of lung cancer in Cherokee County were higher than normal.

However, the cause of the lung cancer has been linked primarily to the mines themselves, not contaminated water.

"We did a case control study and found that lung cancer was elevated among underground lead/zinc miners," Neuberger said. The lung cancer may be linked to excessive amounts of radon gas in the mineshafts, he said. Thirty-eight Galena homes are currently being monitored for radon gas.

In addition to the lung cancer tests, Neuberger said a study determining the prevalence of various illnesses is being conducted and is expected to be complete about June 1, at which time the results will be presented to Galena residents. He would not elaborate on what diseases may be prevalent or if any of the illnesses are linked to the contaminated water.

However, an EPA report released last December detailed the health problems associated with cadmium, lead, selenium and zinc, all of which have shown up in high levels in water from Galena-area wells.

"The kidney is the critical target organ in humans chronically exposed to cadmium by ingestion," the report states. "Exposure to lead can cause severe neurotopic effects that include irreversible brain damage. Selenium ingestion causes depression, gastrointestinal disturbances and occasional dermatitis.

"Excessive levels of zinc can cause stomach disorders. Exposure to cadmium can cause changes in the distribution of zinc, with increases in the liver and kidneys."

"We have a higher incidence of some illnesses in this area," Allen said. But he added: "Without significant data, we don't know the health aspects."

Although Thompson isn't sure of any ill effects caused by the water, he does know that those who have used it in the past are fearful they could face problems in the future.

"The ones who have bad water — yes, they are afraid that it could do harm to their health," he said.

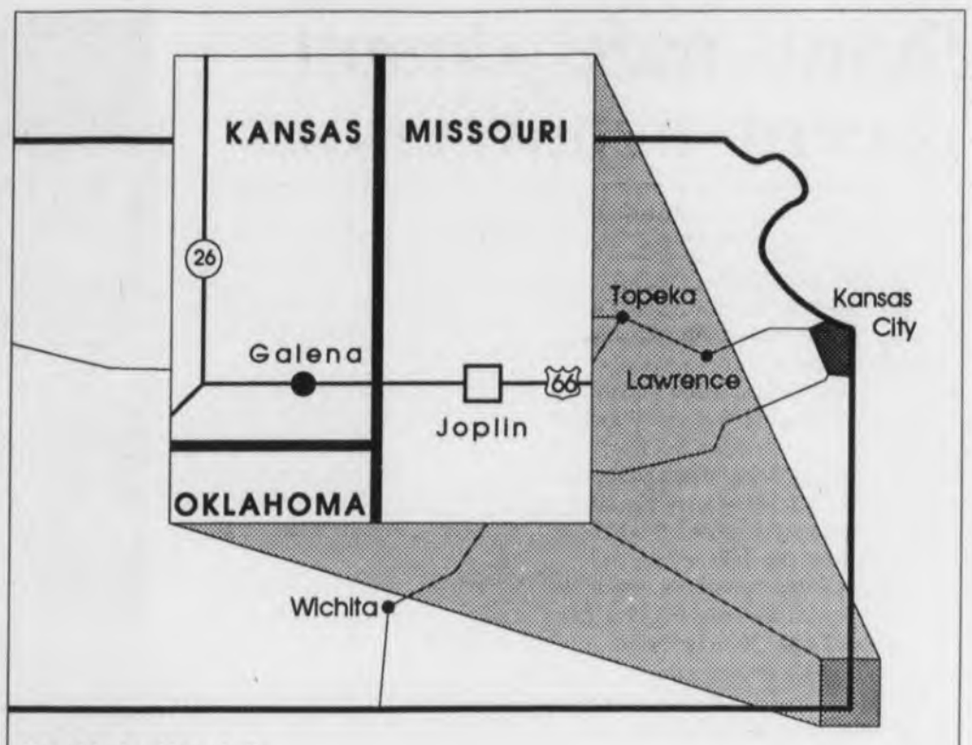
Residents optimistic

In addition, Thompson said he knows a couple whose daughter's blond hair turned red when she used the contaminated water. However, he said, most residents are optimistic that the problems associated with poor water can be overcome.

"These people around here believe we can drill down past the (contaminated source) and get some good water," Thompson said.

While it's clear what caused the current situation, placing responsibility for the problem 65 years later may be difficult.

"I can't say how easy it will be to determine liability," Allen said, adding that none of the mining companies have stepped forward to offer to help clean up the contamination.



But Alice Fuerst, EPA's Region VII project manager for Cherokee County, said EPA has put the wheels into motion for assessing blame.

"We have notified 11 companies that they are potentially responsible," she said.

Fuerst said that by the time the cleanup is complete and an alternate water source is provided, about $9 million will have gone into the project. Slightly less than half of that amount will go toward establishing the alternate water supply, which will take at least one year to set up.

It is on that issue where EPA and Thompson don't quite see eye to eye. EPA has recommended that the alternate water supply come from the city of Galena. However, many residents — including Thompson and other steering committee members — want a rural water district.

"People in the surrounding area want to be independent of Galena," he said. And it is only people outside of Galena who are currently affected by water problems.

Graphic by Gary Lytle

"People outside of Galena are potentially in danger of having contaminated water," Fuerst said, adding that residents who live in the city receive water from the Galena public water system, which provides safe water from a deep aquifer about 1,000 feet in depth.

Although EPA has ruled in favor of giving the rural residents water from Galena, Thompson said the steering committee and others have until July 1 to convince EPA to provide funds for a rural water district.

However, other than petitioning the Cherokee County Commission, Thompson isn't quite sure what else he and his committee must do. He said EPA has never established a firm set of guidelines that would get the agency to change its mind.

"They more or less said that they wanted signatures of others besides those on the steering committee," he said. "There was no magic number or no magic percentage."

Rural water district

Thompson said there are two primary advantages to establishing a rural water district:

■ First, the city of Galena has said that if it is to supply rural residents with water, it will need more than $220,000 in overhead costs. About $120,000 is needed for an office building, and about $100,000 is needed for equipment, including a dump truck, backhoe and other items, Thompson said. About $4 million is needed to set up the water supply.

It is the steering committee's belief that a rural water district would reduce the overhead, and that's important considering that Galena residents may have to pay about 10 percent of the costs to set the system up, Thompson said.

"If we the people are going to have to pick up the other 10 percent, the cutting off of overhead would reduce the amount we have to borrow," he said.

On Monday, the Kansas Legislature sent a bill to Gov. Mike Hayden that would contain $100,000 to help Galena residents set up the alternate water supply. EPA has said a $4 million grant is available if the state puts up about $430,000.

If Hayden signs the bill, which he is not expected to, the other $330,000 would have to be put up by Galena residents. However, Rep. Jeff Freeman, R-Burlington, said the residents couldn't afford the cost.

Town falls victim to mining industry

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

Irony is easy to spot these days in Galena, Kan. Especially when talk turns to water problems.

The industry that was at one time the town's savior is today the town's tormentor. Indeed, it was the mining industry that figuratively and literally gave the town its name.

Ore was first discovered in the Tri-State Mining District — which includes lead and zinc mining in Cherokee County, Kan., Jasper County, Mo., and Ottawa County, Okla. — in 1848, and the first economically significant mine in Kansas was in Galena, where ore was discovered in 1876. The important commercial ore minerals included Sphalerite (zinc sulfide) and galena (lead sulfide.)

The good times for the mining industry began to end in the mid 1920s, by which time the mines had sapped nearly all the minerals they could out of the earth. And they had also begun the process of sapping the area's usable water supply.

But six decades ago, environmental concerns didn't rank very high on the sociopolitical agenda. And the earth's bounties were regarded as endless, as was the planet's tolerance.

There is little today to suggest that the times for the industry were ever good in Galena. What is left over from the industry is something no one would ever want to face, much less claim.

Probably the most sober reminder of an industry gone bad is the mine waste area referred to as "Hell's Half Acre," which is located near Galena. On this plot of land, vegetation is virtually non-existent and mine wastes totally cover the area.

Despite the carelessness of days past, most people now know the earth's resources and tolerance are finite. And nowhere is that awareness greater than in Galena, one of six subsites in EPA's Cherokee County Superfund Site. However, despite the enlightenment — and maybe even because of it — most of the city's residents don't harbor bitterness toward the mining industry.

"I don't think there's any of them who are upset or hold any ill feeling toward the mining companies," said Marvin Thompson, president of the Rural Water District No. 8 Proposed Steering Committee. "They just want to set up a water system and go on with their lives."

County officials seek alternatives to landfill

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

The question is easy: What to do with an average 135 tons of trash each day when the Riley County Landfill is closed July 1, 1990, in compliance with a state order?

It's the solution that's hard.

Finding the solution is one of the jobs Monty Wedel performs as a planner for Riley County. His job is made more complicated by the decision of the Riley County Commission on Jan. 4 to participate in a five-county agreement to study the feasibility of the development of a regional solid waste disposal system.

The other participants are Geary, Pottawatomie, Clay and Marshall counties.

But the study has yet to be started because of a snag in negotiations between the consulting group chosen to perform the study and the counties.

The sticking point is money — $11,500, to be exact.

That figure is the difference between the counties' offer of $59,500 to pay for the study and the consultants' price of $71,000 to perform the study.

"The scope of the work and the dollar figure is not consistent with what we want to be doing," Wedel said.

The consulting group is made up of two area companies and one from the Kansas City area. The two area companies are The Land Design Collaborative, Manhattan, and Kaw Valley Engineering, Junction City.

Franklin Associates from Prairie Village is the third firm in the consultant group.

Officials from the five-county group have asked the consultants to determine if their study could be scaled back in scope and yet still be effective, Wedel said.

"Either they cut back on the scope of their work or we put up some additional money. And that's up to the powers that be who control the purse strings," he said.

If the scope of the study cannot be reduced, then the additional money will come from Riley County.

"Riley County will have to be the entity to put in some more money," Wedel said.

Riley County promised at the time the inter-county agreement was reached that it would appropriate additional funds for the study if it became necessary.

One of the goals of the study is to provide a forum for public input. Allowing county residents to give their opinions about any proposals made in the study is important, Wedel said.

"If you get too far down the road without asking the public what it thinks, you get into trouble," he said.

One of the possible solutions the consulting group may offer is an energy reclamation facility. In such a facility, waste is changed into fuel.

One use for such a fuel would be at the Jeffrey Energy Center in Pottawatomie County. Waste can be treated in a boiler and the remaining substance is burned along with coal.

"When burned with coal, it cuts sulphur emissions," Wedel said.

Such a facility would have to be built by the five counties, Wedel said.

"I doubt very much that Riley County could do it on its own," he said.

But the conversion of waste to fuel would not remove the need for some sort of landfill because in the boiling process a residue is produced which cannot be used as fuel. That residue would be disposed of in a landfill, Wedel said.

The development of an energy reclamation facility would also save money for the five counties because new regulations governing landfills are expected from the Environmental Protection Agency.

"If we're going to build a new landfill, it's going to be very expensive because of new EPA regulations," he said.

The new, stricter regulations for landfills have been expected from the EPA for some time, Wedel said. However, he said it's pure speculation at this point as to what those regulations will be.

And like all recycling efforts, the usefulness of such a fuel is determined by the market for it in the area, Wedel said.

Keeping as many products as possible out of the current landfill is the purpose of another effort of Riley County. Since February, Wedel's office has produced two brochures to inform county residents of the benefits of recycling as well as the agencies in the area that accept waste products.

While acknowledging that the publication of two brochures is a small step in the development of an alternative waste disposal plan, Wedel is encouraged by the response of county residents to what has been done so far.

"We're just trying to promote what's there in the private sector," he said. "...We're getting a lot of response."

"Either they cut back on the scope of their work or we put up some additional money. And that's up to the powers that be who control the purse strings."
—Monty Wedel, county planner

As Riley County begins to deal with the problems associated with the landfill method of disposal for solid waste, Wedel said it is a problem which may affect the rest of the country just as it has affected this area.

"It's a big problem and it's just emerging in Kansas," he said.

What may be required to deal with solid waste is a change in the lifestyle of many Americans away from a disposable way of life.

"We're a consumptive society," Wedel said. "Other societies have learned (the value of recycling waste). Japan is a classic example. In some areas, they recycle up to 75 percent of their waste."

Staff/Brett Hacker

After July 1, 1990, trash may start piling up in Riley County if an agreement is not reached on a solid waste disposal system. Geary, Pottawatomie, Clay and Marshall are working with the county to develop a plan for a new landfill or some other form of waste disposal system.

Government increases water standards

Regulations meet tougher demands

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

Alan Shineman's been on the job 21 years, but his work doesn't get any easier. The government sees to that.

Shineman, superintendent of the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant, said the standards for water purity have increased greatly as demands for better water continue.

"Five years ago, I never heard of any of those things," he said, pointing to a list of compounds for which the city must test its water supply once a month.

The substances, called volatile organic compounds, are just one indication of the tougher standards imposed by the Environmental Protection Agency and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, both of which oversee the Manhattan operation, although in different ways. KDHE directly regulates the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant, whereas EPA is an overseer of KDHE.

Another indication that it isn't like it used to be, Shineman said, is that substances in water are now measured in parts per billion instead of parts per million. And still another indication will become apparent in June, when all water treatment plants that serve more than 25 customers will be required to send their customers notices about possible lead content in the water.

High levels of lead in water have been linked to blood disorders and problems with the nervous system and kidney. In addition, Shineman said, lead can be particularly harmful to young children.

When the city tested its water for lead, 10 samples showed no trace and two revealed traces of lead, one of which was slightly above the limit allowed by EPA, .50 parts per billion. However, Shineman said the nature of the test assured the possibility of a lead presence showing up.

The first test, which produced the two samples that contained lead, was of water that had been sitting overnight. Once the water was run through the pipes for a few seconds, it was retested and showed no lead presence.

Stricter guidelines

"The guidelines are much greater than they used to be," Shineman said. "The best thing we can do is strive for improved treatment."

Despite the greater demands, Shineman said the Manhattan facility has had no problems adjusting to them.

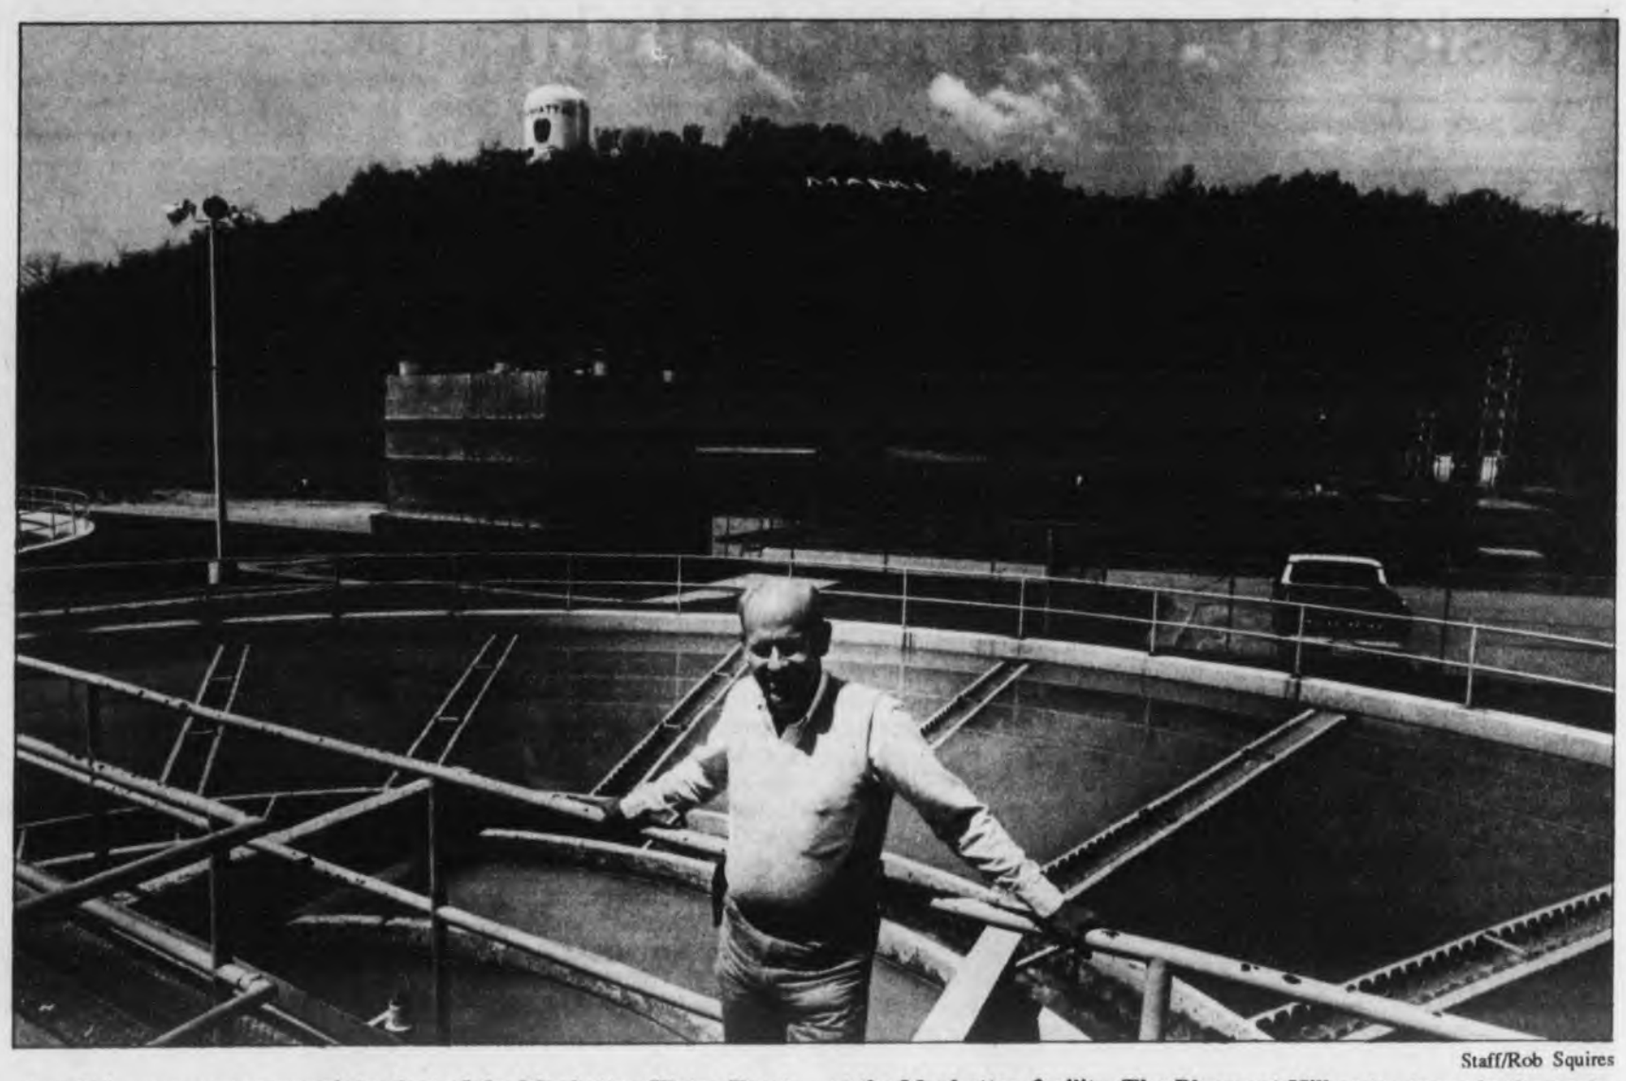
"We have continually been able to satisfactorily meet the standards as enforced by the EPA and (KDHE)," he said.

Testing for VOCs has been mandated since 1986, and it is often difficult to predict when they will show up in water, Shineman said. For instance, a well that tests positive for a particular compound may later test negative, and the change apparently comes without explanation.

"It's a fluctuating, mind-boggling thing," he said.

Shineman said that even if a well tested positive for VOCs, it wouldn't present a problem because the water could be blended with and diluted by water from one of the city's 16 wells, all of which are east of the water plant along the Big Blue River.

VOCs are significantly more harmful than organic bacteria, for which the city runs about 50 samples per month. The plant is required by KDHE to run the tests, and if more than one milligram per liter of bacteria is detected twice within a six-week period, the plant is placed on notice and required by KDHE to publicly notify its users that it failed to meet the government's minimum standards. So far, Shineman said, the city hasn't had to do that.



Water 'finest in state'

Furthermore, he said he regards Manhattan's water as among the finest in the state.

"I'd like to think it the very best there is," he said with a smile. "That's my job."

Unfortunately, not all city water plant managers can be so optimistic, according to an EPA audit made public in mid-March. The audit stated that three out of four municipal waste treatment plants it surveyed aren't able to stop water pollution from industrial toxics.

The audit focused on 265 of the 1,500 publicly owned sewage treatment plants — or POTWs — with EPA-approved plans designed to minimize the amount of toxics reaching the environment.

Staff/Rob Squires

Alan Shineman, water superintendent of the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant, stands in front of the primary and secondary settling basins at the Manhattan facility. The Bluemont Hill water tower in the background is one of four above-ground towers servicing the city.

"The toxic impacts on receiving waters from publicly owned treatment works is more significant than previously thought," James Elder, director of EPA's Office of Water Enforcement and Permits, said when the report was presented at a House hearing in March.

The most damaging portion of the audit is that is cast doubt on the effectiveness of the so-called pretreatment aspects of the Clean Water Act, which is considered one of the nation's most successful environmental laws because it has halted much direct discharging of untreated human waste into the waterways.

Between 100,000 and 200,000 industrial firms of varying size pump their wastes directly into sewers along with the wastes of millions of households and other non-toxic sources, EPA said.

Shineman said he knows harmful substances, including pesticides, herbicides and household chemicals, are dumped directly into Manhattan's sewers.

"They should never be put there," he said. "But we know we get them."

Although they don't affect Manhattan residents, Shineman said they could affect residents down the Kansas River, including Topekans, who use the body of water as their water source.

Shineman said that although he's not aware of any manufacturers in or near Manhattan that discharge toxic waste, the plant isn't prepared to treat toxics if they come through the facility. Instead, he said, they will be dumped directly into the river.

Indeed, the primary problem with the plants, according to EPA, is that they are geared principally to treat human waste and other organic matter, but they are not equipped to treat toxic waste from industry, much of which is deposited into waterways or trapped in sewer sludge and disposed of in a variety of ways, including in landfills.

Report not accurate

While the problems detailed in EPA's audit caused alarm nationwide, an EPA official in Kansas City, Mo., said the report wasn't wholly accurate in its findings. The primary problem was that all of the POTWs that fell under the guidelines were expected to have problems initially in adjusting to the Clean Water Act guidelines, said Paul Marshall, member of the EPA's Region 7 Water Division Pre-Treatment Program.

Region 7 comprises Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska. The Manhattan facility doesn't fall under the Clean Water Act guidelines and therefore was never required to implement a pre-treatment plan.

So sure was EPA that the municipalities would need initial guidance in implementing the programs that failures to meet regulations the first time would result in only an identification of the problems. No punishment was to be implemented initially, Marshall said.

"It's a fluctuating, mind-boggling thing."
—Alan Shineman

"Every program we audited for the first year or two is of that nature," he said. The first audit in Marshall's region came in early 1985.

Since then, he said, a few of the programs have sustained fines, including two of Iowa's 19. As for the rest of the nation, he is not convinced that three out of four plants are negligent in adopting the Clean Water Act guidelines.

"It is not 75 percent — I will guarantee you. It's not 75 percent of the industries in this nation," Marshall said. "It's garbage in, garbage out."

Company offers 'solutions' for contamination

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

I t's a great day here at Mid-Amer ican. Hello, this is Nancy, may I help you?"

Water contamination is nothing new for Riley Countians.

And where there is contamination, there are "cures" for the problem.

"We believe the water crisis is the worst crisis the nation has ever faced," said Chris Cannon, co-owner of Mid-American Clean Water Systems Inc.

Located 2½ miles southeast of Manhattan on Highway 18, Mid-American is a subsidiary of Water Resources International, a Phoenix-based company that manufactures water purification devices. The Phoenix company is the second-largest manufacturer of water treatment systems in the United States, with subsidiaries in 46 states, Cannon said.

Cannon said Mid-American was founded by Manhattan native Bruce Ewing in May of 1987. Ewing got the idea after reading a U.S. News and World Report article that said the water industry was going to vastly expand throughout the country over the next several years, he said.

"The government cannot afford to help with the water problems — people will have to help themselves," Cannon said. "We feel the only way people will get their water cleaned up is to do it themselves."

'Proceed with caution'

Some people, however, aren't so enthusiastic about the water purification business. A January news release sent out by the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department warned consumers to "proceed with caution" when approached about a water purification system.

"Recently a campaign to sell water 'purifiers' to Riley County and Manhattan residents has concerned local health officials," the release said. "The company's representatives give prospective customers a visual demonstration consisting of adding a compound to samples of the home's water, which brings minerals out of solution. The water sample then looks cloudy and small particles settle out.

"In addition, sales tactics involve quotes from news and magazine articles which deal with water contamination, implying that such contamination is wide-spread."

Judy Willingham, who prepared the release, said she did so after receiving a mailer in her newspaper.

"I would tell anyone to get an independent water analysis and not rely on a demonstration," she said. "Theirs doesn't tell you specifically what's in the water."

She said while the purification system is "probably adequate," she did not approve of the methods used to sell the devices.

"I always tell people to be cautious when approached by a salesman who uses scare tactics," she said.

"I think she's talking about us," Cannon said after reading the release. "We don't use scare tactics. We never tell anyone their water is bad. If I ever hear of a rep doing that, they're gone."

Cannon said the company uses media articles to inform consumers about water problems. And the best areas in the state for sales, he said, have been Manhattan, Junction City and Salina, mainly because of recent reported water contamination problems.

"Once the information is shared, we show them what to do with it," he said.

Direct marketing program

He said the process involves a direct marketing program which begins with a telephone survey, then a visit to the prospective customer's home.

During the visit, the representative shows the customer the media articles and explains what Mid-American's system can do to take care of the problems.

The patented system consists of a four-part water processor and a water purifier device. The processor performs four functions: removes taste and odors; softens; adjusts pH and provides tighter filtration; and assures a higher flow rate. The purifier uses pressure to force water through a reverse osmosis filtering membrane to screen out impurities.

The representative then performs a precipitation test on the consumer's tap water to show the sediments that settle out.

"We're not out to scare people; we're just out to inform people," Cannon said. "(But) it does bother some people, because we're telling them what they don't want to hear."

As for the cost, Cannon said he would rather not be quoted. But a spokeswoman for Phoenix-based Water Resources International said the cost ranges from about $3,700 to $4,000, depending on the payment plan selected.

"Our product is probably the most expensive on the market," she said. "But it also has the best guarantee."

Said Rich Diefendorf, vice president and corporate sales manager for Water Resources: "We'd rather apologize for our price one time than apologize for our quality over and over again."

The system comes with a "limited lifetime guarantee," which, after three years, excludes timer valve internals, electrical parts, reverse osmosis membrane and filters, faucet assembly and storage tank.

No wrongdoing

Regardless of the cost of their system, Richard Black, associate professor of agricultural engineering, said Mid-American was doing nothing wrong.

"People are hyper about their water," he said. "And the equipment I'm sure does what it's supposed to do. The difficulty is they seem to be a very aggressive outfit and sell people products we don't think seem to be needed.

"But there's no law against selling you something you don't need."

Black said the markup on such systems is high.

"They're not selling them anything different than other water companies," he said.

STORING UP TROUBLE

No one knows exactly how much toxic waste is disposed of. The EPA regulate million metric tons in 1981. That amount would fill the New Orleans Superdo times over. In 35 years we've disposed of over 6 billion tons in or on our la to increase our exposure to chemicals that can cause cancer, birth def nervous disorders, blood disease, and damage to liver, kidneys, or ge

USING SCARE TACTICS: "I always tell people to be cautious when approached by a salesman who uses scare tactics."

—Judy Willingham

"Basically, they're excluding nearly everything in the system," said Jerry Riniker, a salesman for Sears, Roebuck and Co.

Sears sells Kenmore home drinking water systems and is No. 1 in the United States for water systems sales, Riniker said.

A comparable Kenmore system, which would include a softener, clarifier, pH neutralizer and tank filter, would cost a maximum of $2,000, including installation, Riniker said.

"These are individual systems," he said. "So if something goes wrong with one, you won't have to replace the whole thing."

Riniker said the Kenmore guarantee is one year on all parts and 10 years on the resin tank.

"They're just selling a full load."

One positive aspect of the system, Black said, is that it buys the consumer peace of mind.

"But it's an expensive peace of mind," he said.

Cannon disagreed. If a person buys the system, he said, Mid-American will supply that person two to three years' worth of soap products, ranging from "Clean & Sparkling Dishwasher Powder" to "Rich & Natural Soap Bars."

"That alone will pay for the system," he said.

Cannon said the company was not in business "to rip off little old ladies. We're not a high-pressure sale. We give the people a choice," he said.

The manager of the Rural Water District No. 1 of Pottawatomie County thought otherwise about the sales methods. In a letter to the Wamego Smoke Signal, Larry Eckart said, "The company has very high-pressure sales representatives and they have been known to downgrade the rural water, so we are notifying all customers that their water is tested and safe for consumption.

"If we fail to pass one water sample test, we are required by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to notify all of our water customers by mail and publish notification in the local papers and on radio. So we make every effort to meet all guidelines."

One person who saw the demonstration but has not purchased a purifier system was Joy Zurcher, who lives in the Fairmont community east of Manhattan.

Zurcher said a representative came to her house Feb. 10.

"He took a jar, filled it and put a lid on it with two tubes on it," she said. "Then he hooked it up to electricity and it turned yellow, then dark, then some black stuff came to the top. He told me that's what I'm drinking."

Zurcher said the representative told her he would have the sample tested.

"They still haven't gotten back to me," she said. "I called them about two weeks later and asked for names of some satisfied customers and he said he'd send me some. But I haven't heard anything."

Impressed with demonstrations

Tom Parish, professor of human development in the College of Education, has seen the demonstrations. And, he said, he was impressed.

"I'm really impressed with the system," he said. "There is a need and they have a good product."

Parish said the contamination problems involving the Riley County Landfill and the fact that carbon tetrachloride has been found in the Frankfort water supply prove a problem exists.

"If I had the money at this point, I'd have one in my house," he said.

As for the cost, Parish said he had checked into other brands.

"You can get systems for $300," he said. "But you'll get what you pay for. If you pay

Contamination destroys water supply

Resident continues fight

By Judy Lundstrom

Five months have passed since Charlene Sweet filed a $1 million lawsuit against the Riley County and Manhattan City commissions.

Five months of continual hell, according to Sweet.

It will be three years ago this August since Sweet bought her home adjacent to the Riley County Landfill, and three years ago this November that state officials ordered her to stop using her water.

The reason — contamination.

"I didn't know the water was contaminated when I bought this place," she said. "Of course I didn't. I'd have been stupid to do that."

The suit, filed by Sweet Nov. 24, 1987, in U.S. District Court in Kansas City, Kan., stemmed from water contamination at Moehlman Bottoms, a community situated near the Riley County Landfill about three miles south of Manhattan.

The first contamination was detected in November 1985 on Sweet's property. The second was discovered in November 1986 on the property of John Pratt Jr., 1,000 feet southeast of the landfill.

In letters from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, the owners were notified their water contained several compounds that were "suggested cancer-causing agents and even at the indicated levels could significantly increase the risk of a user developing health problems over a long period of use."

The letter recommended "that this water supply not be used as a source of water for drinking, cooking or bathing."

The suspected source of the contamination was the Riley County Landfill.

According to records in the County Clerk's office, the city opened the landfill in 1961, and Riley County took over its operation in 1976. The city, however, still holds the deed to the property.

In the first several years of operation, no agency existed to regulate the landfill, according to County Engineer Dan Harden.

After the contamination was detected, city commissioners in April 1987 agreed to sell city water to Riley County, which in turn would provide city water to residents of Moehlman Bottoms. County commissioners later that month approved installation of water lines to serve many of the homes near the landfill.

A July 17, 1987, KDHE order mandated closure of the landfill because water testing indicated "beyond a reasonable doubt that contaminated groundwater from the Riley County Landfill has migrated beyond the boundaries of the landfill and has contaminated groundwater...."

Sweet's lawsuit was filed Nov. 24, 1987, and is based on four counts:

- The first count requests immediate closure of the landfill.
- The second count requests a judgment in excess of $10,000, alleging that the contamination deprived Sweet of use of her water and property.
- The third count alleges that the county and city were negligent in locating, constructing and operating the landfill along the Kansas River without taking measures to prevent groundwater contamination. For that count, Sweet again requested a judgment in excess of $10,000.
- The final count is for punitive damages of $1 million.

Sweet said because of the contamination, she has been unable to obtain financing for improvements to her house.

"I wanted to buy a furnace last winter, and the banker wouldn't finance me on account of the contaminated water," she said. "So a friend loaned me an old propane stove. I used that, a kerosene stove and opened the oven door for heat."

Sweet, who is a county employee and works at the landfill, said originally she didn't want to file the lawsuit.

"But I didn't have any other choice," she said.

Her attorney, Peter Rombold, said the suit was filed because "the KDHE order did not provide any remedies for personal or property damage for those affected by the contamination."

Rombold said Monday Sweet's case is currently in the discovery process. The process involves serving written questions to the opposing parties, requesting admissions, requesting the production of evidence by the opposing party, making inspections and taking depositions.

"It can take a long time," he said.

A pre-trial conference is scheduled for June 30 in U.S. District Court in Kansas City, Kan.

"At that time, we'll find out if it's going to court," he said.

Rombold also said that other landowners near the landfill are considering filing lawsuits similar to Sweet's.

In related incidents:

- Last month, a jury awarded a Topeka-area couple $84,600 because of bad conditions at the old Shawnee County Landfill near their home. The couple had complained that the landfill was a nuisance because of the dust, odors, noises and leachate.
- Reno County Commissioners agreed last week to pay a Hutchinson couple $500 for past water expenses and to pay $1.10 a day for bottled water for as long as the couple live or until their water contamination is cleaned up.

Meanwhile, as she waits on the decision about her lawsuit, Sweet said she would be happy just to get her house fixed up.

Currently, most of those living near the landfill are receiving city water — except Sweet. City water was hooked up to a hydrant in her front yard last December, but she has not yet used it in her house.

"I'm afraid to use it, because it would be going through the same pipes and the same hot water tank that has the contaminated water running through it," she said.

So she continues to haul in her drinking water — something she is not fond of doing.

"Can you imagine having to come home from work to this?" she said. "You can't clean it up. It's impossible."

She lives on the three-acre piece of land with her 17-year-old son.

"I worry about him being around all this," she said. "I want to fix this place up. It's all I've got."

tions the plant uses, the cost of disposing the low-level waste will increase.

The current cost for disposing the waste is about $40 to $50 per cubic foot. The projected charge at the Nebraska site is about $150 to $300 per cubic foot.

"When they first started planning the site, they thought there would be more waste than there is. But more efficient ways of compacting and creating the waste have resulted in less waste," Grimsley said.

Wolf Creek's liquid waste is treated by charcoal filters and demineralization beds. Then it is dumped into the Wolf Creek Cooling Lake and is diluted at the rate of 5,000 gallons per minute at the discharge point.

"What we release is 1.4 percent of what is allowed by the NRC," Grimsley said. "It's cleaned up as much as it can be."

The plant's pressurized water reactor is cooled using water from Wolf Creek, Wolf Creek Cooling Lake and the John Redmond Reservoir.

Gas waste created from the energy exchange is held in six tanks on site. Once the tanks are full, Grimsley said, they are taken out of service for 90 days for the waste to decompose.

The primary chemical that doesn't break down is hydrogen. It remains and is released during maintenance work to relieve pressure within the tanks.

High-level waste created by the plant is stored on site, and the plant has the capacity to store 20 years of its own high-level waste, Grimsley said.

"By the turn of the century, the government is supposed to have created a national depository," she said. "If they haven't, the NRC can allow us to rearrange the fuel bundles or build on to our facility so we can store another 20 years worth (of waste)."

Galena

"I'm going to have to oppose the bill for that reason," Freeman said. "We haven't been fair."

- And second, Thompson said the rural water district would be able to set its own rates.

"We feel we could provide water just as cheaply or cheaper than if it was coming out of Galena," he said.

Cleanup

Although providing suitable water is currently the most pressing problem, a much larger one is looming: the cleanup, which is projected to cost $5 million.

"The conditions are the same as they were in 1930," Allen said. The cleanup won't start until next year, and it is expected to be complete by 1992.

Allen said the surface material will undergo a process called remilling, whereby the contaminants are removed and the material is put back into the mining areas.

Although the contamination problem was initially identified eight years ago, "the area's been studied for the past 35 or 40 years," Allen said. One of EPA's main objectives is to ensure that the Roubidoux aquifer, which is about 1,000 feet under Galena and Cherokee County, remains uncontaminated. The aquifer serves a broad area, including the eastern Missouri boot heel.

A cleanup plan proposed in February by EPA and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment consists of four actions:

- Removal and treatment of surface mine wastes;
- Diversion of surface streams around the contaminated areas;
- Recontouring of the land surface; and
- Remediation of deep aquifer wells.

Allen said Hayden is the first governor to take a significant interest in getting Galena's problems solved.

"That's what this area's needed," Allen said. "It's going to take a lot of people to get it done.

"I think it could ultimately be a reward for the state."

$3,500, you'll get a full-house system and the service to back it up."

Oscar Lincoln, a specialist at the water treatment plant in Junction City, said he is satisfied with his $3,400 purchase.

"I have no complaints," he said. "It's beautiful. I can walk up to my faucet and get a glass of water and not worry about getting a bunch of junk in it."

Cannon said he seldom hears complaints from customers — which makes the future look bright for Mid-American.

So far this year, he said, sales have grossed $1.5 million.

The company celebrates its first anniversary Thursday.

New stores are scheduled to open in Wichita in July, and two are targeted to open in the Kansas City area in 1989 and 1990.

"We look for it to get better," Cannon said. "It's incredible. It can't get anything but better."

of cities have asbestos in their water, much of it because the water flows through an asbestos cement pipe. No relationship has been proven between ingested asbestos and the disease, and no standards exist to restrict asbestos in water.

Loose fibers brought home by asbestos workers years ago on their clothing have been suspected in the recent deaths of spouses and children. Scientists say these deaths show how dangerous incidential exposure can be.

Skyler Harper, assistant University architect, said, "Asbestos is a major problem any time you renovate an older building.

"Many of the buildings, like Van Zile Hall, have asbestos shingles on the roof, and they have to be removed one at a time to ensure fibers are not released into the air. The cost of surveying Van Zile Hall for asbestos is 25 cents per square foot, and there are more than 200,000 square feet in Van Zile."

Election will center on running mates

Bush, Dukakis may be forced to give up limelight

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

The preliminary heats are just about over. Barring any big surprises, Michael Dukakis and George Bush will garner their respective parties' nominations for president. One of these two men will be the leader of the free world for the next four years, a time that promises many difficult decisions on the part of the United States. Challenges lie in dealing with the state of disequilibrium that has been created by our current administration in the form of fiscal and trade deficits, hypocritical foreign-policy actions, and the continuing division between haves and have-nots in our society.

Now, I am not a doomsayer who thinks that America is decadent and headed for anonymity. We are still a great nation that holds many freedoms and opportunities which are the envy of the rest of the world. However, the complacency reflected in the electorate that has allowed the current state affairs to build up worries me. It seems to me that America is due for a shake-up — for some excitement other than the emergence of Terence Trent D'Arby as a pop star, the faddish infatuation with retired Col. Oliver North, or the winning of a game by the Baltimore Orioles.

Jesse Jackson would have been a shake-up. Whether or not one agrees with Jesse, everyone has an opinion about him and his platform. Instead, the winnowing of the presidential field has ended up with two candidates who are different shades of gray — but gray nonetheless. Once again, it has been proved that the best way to win an election is to be non-committal and non-specific in dealing with issues and platform, while being a white Ivy Leaguer from New England. Choosing between Dukakis and Bush is like choosing between a Pontiac and an Oldsmobile; the difference lies in the name and the options, but the basic car is the same.

This situation places more importance than ever on the running mates that the candidates will choose to place on their party's ticket. Here lies the most potential for differentiation between the two candidates.

First, let's look at the Democratic side. Dukakis' strengths are a liberal, government-solves-the-people's-problems approach to solving domestic issues and his impeccable Ivy League, technocrat demeanor. He lacks foreign-policy experience, appeal in the South, and the passion to attract Jackson's Rainbow Coalition. The solution? Choose Senate Armed Forces Committee Chairman Sam Nunn as a running mate, while incorporating parts of Jackson's agenda as part of the Democratic platform. Nunn provides a balance for Dukakis in both personality and ideology.

Nunn is a Southern conservative who is widely respected in Washington for his knowledge and savvy in dealing with the military and foreign-policy spheres. His presence would allow Dukakis to lean more left to meet the approval of the liberal factions that Jesse Jackson has gathered together, creating a broad base of support that has wide appeal and that makes the Democratic ticket look very strong for November.

On the Republican side, George Bush has positives from his association with Reagan, support from the East Coast establishment and a flawless resume. His many weaknesses include questions of integrity raised by the Iran-Contra and Edwin Meese affairs, a lack of a specific agenda, coming from a party that is perceived to be against women and minorities, and a "wimp" image that stems from his mindless rehashing of "get tough" conservative rhetoric in that annoying nasal voice with which he has been cursed.

The solution? Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas as a running mate. Kassebaum has popularity in the West and Midwest and respect as a pragmatic moderate who is not afraid to make tough choices while remaining loyal to her party on crucial issues. She is above reproach and would add an element of intrigue as a woman and as the daughter of one-time Republican candidate Alf Landon. She would serve to broaden the Republican base of support as well, while keeping our other Kansas senator, Bob Dole, where he has a great deal of influence, instead of taking a demotion to vice president.

There you have it. The presidential race as it shapes up for 1988. My prediction? Dukakis/Nunn by a neck over Bush/Kassebaum.

Suspect group

Editor,

This week I received an appeal for money from a group called U.S. English. Because others may be on the verge of opening their checkbooks, a few words are in order. The group portrays itself as patriotic, caring, concerned. But if we lift the flag in which they have draped themselves, it appears their real agenda is to keep ethnic minorities and other "different" people in their place.

Their stated purpose is to get a constitutional amendment making English our official language, to repeal laws on multilingual ballots and voter registration materials, to restrict federal funding of bilingual education to short-term transitional programs, and to control immigration so as to protect what Dr. Strangelove might have called linguistic purity of essence.

U.S. English wants to cut long-term bilingual education programs, which Guy Wright, a U.S. English supporter, claims have "fallen into the hands of ... foreign language pressure groups," implying that they don't want to learn English. Nonsense! During several years of involvement in the Kansas Association for Bilingual Education, I never met a single person who thought English should not be a major part of our public education system.

All this talk about protecting English from foreign languages is inflammatory but beside the point. After all, if you speak two or three languages then none of them are foreign.

From a national perspective, we clearly are an English-speaking country and we need no constitutional amendment enforcing that. By contrast, most of the rest of the world is at least bilingual, meaning that at least two languages are learned naturally and used in everyday life by all social classes, ages, etc. Study after study has shown that Americans in fact want more opportunities to learn other languages (for economic and many other reasons). Good, solid, long-term bilingual education programs that build on community resources could be part of the answer.

Sorry, U.S. English, but you get none of my money.

Enlighten me

Editor,

Re: Brad Karr's letter in the April 20 Collegian, "Proven Laws."

I realize you are a "so-called scientist." I do not know very much about science, so I am trying to learn a little bit. I do not know very much about Christianity either, and I am learning it too. I am not qualified to discuss biology with you, so I just want to humbly beg your help, since your letter really made me confused.

I got a feeling from your letter that science and Christianity are contradictory to each other, and God's creation is not backed with "proven laws" as science is. However, my poor knowledge of science tells me that many scientific propositions and laws are backed with assumptions, which cannot be "proven." There may be more assumptions underlying evolution when it's "proven" than creation.

No theory concerning evolution has been verified by observation. Laboratory experiments have failed to repeat the process (at least not at this moment). To accept evolution, people also need to have a great deal of faith. Is it possible that evolution is also a part of God's creation?

I happened to read an article by a biologist before. He indicated that biology has proven that proteins depend on DNA for their formation, but DNA cannot form without pre-existing protein. Which came first? The only possible answer must be that they developed parallel. Good explanation! I realize that this helps solving the 1,000-year-old "chicken-egg" paradox. Chicken and egg might have developed simultaneously! Are you satisfied with this "scientific" inference?!

I have read a few biographies of some famous scientists. I was amazed by the testimonies of those great people. Maybe some of your "proven laws" were based on their contributions. I cannot imagine why Newton would spend the second half of his life in studying theology and proving God's existence.

Was he crazy? Would you be so kind as to find me a scientific explanation with biological "proven laws?" Was that the result of evolution? Or maybe he finally found out that the Bible was the science of sciences?

Well, forgive me for not being able to speak on your level of knowledge. I wish I had done some comparative study between the Bible and biology.

Quality of life

Editor,

The April 18 Collegian editorial regarding Goodnow Park and the Manhattan water treatment facility expansion was a gross oversimplification of the issues in this zoning appeal.

The well-organized and thoroughly researched presentation given by the Goodnow Park residents at the April 13 zoning board meeting strongly illustrated the following points:

■ The city zoning ordinance clearly stipulated that only pumping stations are allowed in R1 and R2 districts. Goodnow residents proved, without question, that the terms "pumping station" and "water treatment facility" are not interchangeable terms. The board recognized the "ambiguous" language of the Land Use Plan and City Zoning Ordinance, but nonetheless voted for water treatment facility expansion.

■ The residents of Manhattan recently voted in the Quality of Life issue. Expanding the water treatment plant seems a direct affront to that affirmation.

Residents of this area are losing a lot more than "a small amount of space." While they may still have a place for their children to play, a ball diamond and a picnic area, their property will no longer have the same value as their neighborhood becomes encroached by industrialization, and the aesthetic appeal of a treatment basin a few hundred yards from their front door will not go far in enhancing their neighborhood's quality of life.

I would hope to see Collegian editorials that are less narrow-minded in the future!

One-sided editorial

Editor,

The purpose of this letter is two-fold. First, I would like to commend your staff writer, Karen Allen, on her fair and unbiased accounting of the water treatment plant expansion hearings at the board of zoning appeals meetings. Although this has been a lengthy and sometimes emotional issue, she has presented all issues in a precise and accurate manner.

Unfortunately, your editorial staff is not as equally informed as Ms. Allen. In an April 18 editorial, the editorial board's view is that "adequate room" will be left after the proposed expansion of the water treatment plant into Goodnow Park, as the park "will only be losing a small amount of space."

The facts are that approximately 40 percent of the remaining park area will be used for this expansion, and in 10 years the next planned expansion will completely obliterate the park. Your article mentions that the park may "still be used for drop-in softball activity and practices," according to Jim Colley, recreation superintendent.

From discussions with the Board of Parks and Recreation, it is my understanding that no future softball activity will be possible in the park after the expansion due to its decreased size.

It is one-sided for your article to quote city officials and assume the intentions of opposing local residents without benefit of consultation. This article is an example of poor journalism, for although written as an editorial, the article sounds more like an interview of city representatives. Your "facts" are poorly substantiated and, in almost every case, untrue.

Your implication is that the residents who oppose the expansion are insensitive to the needs of the entire community. This is a situation where a feasible alternative exists to minimize the impact upon a neighborhood without sacrificing the "good of the entire community." In a city where there exists an obvious concern about the quality of life, this same quality of life should be preserved for residents in every part of the community.

Mythical board

Editor,

Enough is enough! I always thought that the purpose of a newpaper was to report the facts, stimulate thought and allow for the expression of opinions. The Collegian, as a general rule, does an excellent job of this. However, I have been disappointed more than once this semester, as the editorial columnists and the mythical editorial board have used the editorial page to make personal attacks on individuals and groups.

If a person or group makes a decision that the Collegian agrees with, the decision makers have been described as well informed, thinking in the best interest of all, etc. If, however, a decision is opposite of the viewpoint of the Collegian staff, persons and groups are uncaring, uninformed, ignorant or selfish, to say the least.

In particular, personal slams of student senators Bernie Giefer and Juli Kramer have been way out of line. Even though I don't agree with their positions on some "hot" issues, I still respect their rights to express their opinions. I dare say if the entire "editorial board" would attend a Senate meeting rather than relying on one information source, and apparently a lot of hearsay, there would be as many different opinions as there were members in attendance.

At least Chris Kippes and Michael Nichols had enough testicular fortitude to stand behind their misguided columns, which is more than I can say for the "editorial board," right Deron?

Union censors

Editor,

The University censorship banning a so-called "indecent" poster is an atrocity, a vivid example of an attempt to inhibit artistic creativity. Jennifer Dohl's acting recital for completion of a masters of arts degree is entitled "Fuck the Personality for a Minute."

Jack Connaughton, who prohibited her poster from being exposed in the Union, is now merely condemning the aesthetic taste of Jennifer, but he is also underscoring the authority and judgment of the faculty members who approved her material, insulting the moral judgment of any audience member, offending any writer or creative artist who has made use of this and other similar works, as well as provoking the hypocritical action of his own building, as the Union Copy Center photocopied the poster to advertise her recital.

Surely not all of these are "bad people" who have a "bad influence" on society by merely accepting the existence of a single word in our language. It is interesting that Mr. Connaughton was not available for comment to Collegian reporters.

Any governing faction should not have the power to judge what is obscene and what cannot be placed in the common view of society. Major inconsistencies regarding the enforcement of any "law" present a flaw in their argument, even if limiting our view to this campus alone.

The Collegian, in reporting this story on April 29, printed the word "fuck" three times on its front page, and referred to it twice in the editorial. Teachers in several classes in various departments brought attention to the article, saying the word before our own precious, innocent students. The students themselves talked about the controversy, uttering its full word, rather than its "F-star-star-star" abbreviation.

Plays produced by the Department of Speech and films sponsored by the Union contain this same word and others. Farrell Library contains a vast number of books that incorporate these forbidden words and even has a subscription to "Playboy" magazine, available to patrons in Special Collections.

Freedon of expression is the necessity to truly creative art.

Censorship of art negates the purpose of it.

Poor coverage

Editor,

I was slightly disappointed when I opened the paper April 18 and was greeted with a photograph of participants in the Lambda Chi Alpha Chariot Relays and a front-page article on the event. It's not that I have anything against the Lambda Chi's or the Chariot Relays — in fact, I commend Lambda Chi Alpha for organizing a quality competition and for raising $300 for a worthy cause. My concern centers around the comparative lack of coverage for the TAXI Triathlon for multiple sclerosis. Don't get me wrong, we were grateful for the press space that we received; it's just that I felt the TAXI was deserving of much more attention than it was given.

Dukakis triumphant in Ohio, Indiana

Jackson takes D.C. delegates; Bush victorious in primaries

By The Associated Press

Michael Dukakis swept two primary victories in Ohio and Indiana on Tuesday as he rolled past Jesse Jackson toward the Democratic presidential nomination. Vice President George Bush, uncontested as usual, celebrated his certain Republican nomination at a rally a few blocks from the White House.

Jackson won the District of Columbia, capturing a Democratic consolation prize and his first primary victory in six weeks. But Dukakis shed some of his customary caution and proclaimed, "I think it's going to be difficult" for his rival to deny him the nomination.

Countered Jackson: "We're moving right along."

The vote count showed otherwise, and Dukakis was adding almost 200 delegates to his total. "We still have 500 some odd (delegates) to go," he said.

Dukakis fashioned side-by-side landslides in Ohio and Indiana, routing Jackson by margins of greater than 2-to-1. He also padded his substantial lead in national convention delegates and ratified his status as faraway favorite to win the Democratic nomination and meet Bush in the fall campaign.

"I feel great about today," he said at a news conference in Boston.

Bush said he felt great, too, as he addressed a cheering group of supporters at a rally staged to celebrate last week's clinching of the Republican nomination.

"It all boiled down to working together," said the vice president, who exiled the GOP opposition with a 16-state primary sweep on March 8.

"And yet," he told his supporters, "I don't feel any finality to what has happened now at all. We've passed the first step, a tremendously important step. ...But now we've got a long way to go."

Dukakis' twin victories were hailed by some Democratic Party leaders hoping to reclaim the White House after eight years of Republican rule.

"I think he'll be nominated on the first ballot," Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton said.

"It may be boring, but I love it," Democratic National Committee vice chair Lynn Cutler said as she surveyed a race that has gone from turbulent to utterly predictable over the past month with a string of Dukakis primary victories in Connecticut, Wisconsin, New York and Pennsylvania.

Judy Carnahan, Oregon Democratic Party chair, echoed that sentiment, saying the California primary next month "will be the icing on the cake" for the Massachusetts governor.

Dukakis' aides expressed confidence about the primaries still to come, and said they expect their candidate will be able to command a majority of convention delegates by the time the Democratic primary season ends on June 7.

Dukakis, asked if he thought Jackson should recognize his string of victories as a trend, replied, "I hope so."

He declined to say whether Jackson should tone down his recent criticism, but seemed to signal as much when he said, "I don't mind disagreements on issues. I just hope we can both continue to campaign with the respect we've had for each other in the past year."

The day's Democratic delegate arithmetic clearly favored Dukakis, the prohibitive favorite to lock up the nomination weeks before the Democratic National Convention convenes in July in Atlanta. Ohio picked 159 delegates to the Democratic National Convention, Indiana 79 and the District of Columbia 16.

The delegate tabulations were slower than the popular vote.

At his "Over The Top" rally in a Washington hotel, Bush proclaimed the Republican Party is united as it heads into the fall campaign and he took a shot at his likely Democratic rival.

financial aid sources other than the federal sources, such as Pell Grants, which are already known.

To find out about the legitimacy of a private firm, Viterna said to inquire with the Better Business Bureau, the state attorney general or the financial aid offices at the university the student plans to attend.

Viterna said academic financial aid advisers do not have as much time as they would like to work with students, but they do have the information to work quickly and efficiently.

"We respond to each request, maybe not as quickly as (students) like, but thoroughly and accurately," he said.

National Career Planning Associates of Kansas Inc., a Wichita-based financial aid planning firm, guarantees it can get its clients a minimum of $2,000 in scholarships during a college degree program or the firm will refund the client's registration fee.

A March 16, 1988, news release from the Sedgwick County district attorney's office says NCPA charges $199 plus $50 per student. However, the registration fee has since increased to $299.

Formed in December 1987 by Lawrence Becker and E. Dale Bleem of Mulvane, Kan., NCPA operates out of a small suite located in a shopping center.

Rather than saying it uses loopholes, Bleem said the firm just follows the existing rules concerning financial aid. Furthermore, he said, the clients are never asked to do anything illegal.

Bleem described NCPA as a specialist which offers to its clients services that the academic financial aid advisers cannot.

"You consult a CPA when you want help with your taxes; you don't go to the IRS," he said. "You go to someone who specializes in one particular area."

Bleem said NCPA has a "higher success rate" for helping students get money than academic financial aid advisers because NCPA employees have more time to deal with each individual client, and the employees have access to national data bases with scholarship information.

"(Academic financial aid advisers) cannot give (students) the attention they need when they have to process 12 (thousand) to 15,000 applications in a short period of time," he said.

NCPA clients have been awarded anywhere from $2,500 to $8,000, he said, adding that the amount depends on the university the client wishes to attend.

However, since March 16, 1988, the Consumer Fraud Division of the Sedgwick County district attorney's office has been investigating the NCPA after receiving queries from consumers and contacting Wichita-area financial aid counselors about the firm's legitimacy.

Viterna said several financial aid advisers have expressed concern about this particular firm's methods. Reading through a copy of NCPA's brochure, obtained from Prather, Viterna questioned several areas.

In addition to questioning NCPA's professionalism by citing numerous spelling errors, Viterna said the firm may be misleading people into thinking they can get a certain amount of money per year rather than throughout their college careers.

Furthermore, the firm advises clients to apply for the maximum Parent Loan for Undergraduate Students.

"You begin paying back this loan 60 days after you receive it, not after you graduate. You should wait and see if you need to apply for this loan. If you don't, you shouldn't apply," he said.

In a March 16 news release, Clark Owens, Sedgwick County district attorney, said NCPA had violated several provisions of the Kansas Consumer Protection Act by giving clients outdated and incorrect information on how students could achieve independent status and thus qualify for more financial aid.

The district attorney's office has taken action against NCPA in the form of a consent agreement, said Joe Kisner, assistant district attorney for Sedgwick County. He said the district attorney's office is concerned that the people in the program get what they pay for.

Although the agreement ends May 21, Kisner said the Consumer Fraud Division will continue to monitor NCPA as it does all business operation's in its district.

Should the NCPA or any business be found in violation of the Consumer Protection Act, they could face civil penalties of $2,000 for each violation in addition to investigative costs, court costs and restitution for consumer damages. Repeated violations could bring fines of up to $10,000, Kisner said.

"The water is safe to drink," he said, adding that some of the grit in the water is due to hardness. "The complaints are an aesthetic problem."

The most recent extensive water tests of the system were taken Feb. 8, McCool said. In a test taken at the Living Word Church and Christian School on U.S. 177, results indicated that one source of the complaints could be the water's hardness, which was found to be 561 milligrams per liter.

According to KDHE standards, a total hardness greater than 400 milligrams per liter is considered excessive.

"(But) hardness won't hurt anyone," McCool said.

Some residents disagree.

"Our water isn't good," said Gerald Grimes, another of the complainants. "It has a very poor taste, and seems to have a gassy smell sometimes."

Grimes said because of the problem, he started hauling in drinking water from St. George several years ago.

"Stilley has been very uncooperative," he said.

Others on the system said they do not drink the water either.

"We have a lot of sand and grit in our water," said Ellen Couchot, the third complainant. "We don't use it. We get ours from St. George, and have been for several years."

Stilley denied the complaint about the bad odor of the water.

"There is no odor in the supply water," he told KDHE in an April 14 letter. "The problem seems to stem from the anode rod in some of the hot water tanks in the homes. It is not harmful."

Black said, however, that the anode rod smell would only affect the hot water, not cold tap water.

In his April 14 response to the complaints, Stilley also said he was consulting with an engineer on ways to improve the water pressure at the Vathauer residence. No mention was made, however, of installing 4-inch pipes in the remainder of the system.

The formal complaint requires processing and filing under KCC administrative rules. Once it has been filed, the case is assigned a docket number and a copy of the complaint is served on the utility by the KCC.

After receiving the complaint, the utility must either satisfy or answer the complaint within 10 days. On receipt of the answer, the issue is reviewed by the KCC staff, at which time the staff has the following options: grant or deny the complaint; dismiss the complaint because the customer was accorded satisfaction before the utility answered the complaint; schedule the matter for an evidentiary hearing; or issue other orders as are appropriate, such as subpoena records for further review, etc.

Ney said Monday that a hearing date has been set for 9:30 a.m. on June 17 at the KCC offices in Topeka. At that time, a hearing examiner will review the complaints against Fairmont Heights Water Co., then make a recommendation to commissioners on what action should be taken.

"We would like to expedite it as fast as we can," he said. "We will be working with KDHE in trying to get things worked out."

When contacted April 25, however, McCool said he was not aware that the complaints had been filed.

But, he said, "I met with Stilley a couple of months ago and he agreed to make improvements to increase pressure to the two or three residences that were affected."

McCool said KDHE could force Stilley to make the improvements.

"But the fact is, I don't think we have to force him," he said.

McCool said Stilley is working on some improvements. Despite KDHE's recommendations, however, McCool said those improvements don't include adding more 4-inch lines.

When contacted April 30, Stilley said he had no comment on the situation.

"I run a respectable water company registered with the state," he said. "We are correcting the problem as we have corrected every problem, and will continue to do so in the future."

Shellfish: A Taste o' the Sea

The catch of the day today is the collective group of shellfish.

You can't actually go to your favorite, secret fishing hole and throw out a worm on a hook and expect to catch a member of the shellfish family. But with the help of a local grocery store, you can make a nutritious and tasty seafood dish.

Shellfish are creatures that live in water and have a hard outer layer. The shellfish family includes shrimp, crabs, lobsters, clams and mussels. Shellfish are a good source of protein, minerals and vitamins. For the diet-conscious, shellfish are a low-calorie source of food.

Raw shellfish contain less then 100 calories for a 4-ounce serving. Compare that to 352 calories in a 4-ounce serving of sirloin steak, or 408 calories in a 4-ounce serving of ham.

Many of the minerals that are present in sea water are also present in shellfish. The minerals you can get from eating shellfish include phosphorus, potassium, iron, copper, zinc, magnesium, selenium and cobalt. The vitamins you can find — particularly in clams and oysters — are the B vitamins, including biotin and niacin.

Shellfish can be purchased alive, fresh, frozen or canned. Lobsters, crabs, clams and oysters are often purchased alive to ensure their freshness. The way to tell if oysters or clams are alive is by a tightly closed shell. If the shell is slightly open, it should close when you touch it.

If you prefer not to buy live seafood, there are certain things to look for when determining the freshness of seafood.

Oysters and clams should be plump and free of any sour aroma. Fresh shrimp should have a sweet smell and be dry and firm to the touch.

If crabs or lobsters are purchased fresh-cooked, it is a good idea to use them the same day. They should be free of any ammonia odor and have bright red shells. Fresh shellfish meat tends to spoil rapidly, so it is a good idea to use it as soon as possible. To keep shellfish fresh, store it in the coldest part of your refrigerator.

For most college students, the cost of shellfish may be a prohibitive factor. At Dillons Food Store in Westloop Center, 1 pound of medium-size shrimp costs $5.99, and 1 pound of large shrimp is $9.19. A one-person serving portion of shrimp is usually 1 pound.

Lobster at Dillons costs $9.99 per pound and can be purchased live. You should allow between 1 to 2 pounds of lobster for each person.

A serving of king crab costs $10.59 per pound at Dillons and ranges between 1 to 1¼ pounds.

Once you shell out the money for this food group, there are some general ways that shellfish can be cooked. Simmering or steaming are the easiest ways to cook many kinds of shellfish.

To simmer crabs, lobsters or shrimp, pour enough water in the pan so it will generously cover the shellfish. Bring the water to a boil first and then add the shellfish. If you are simmering a live lobster, put it in head-first and tuck the tail under. Otherwise, the muscle reflex of the lobster may splash boiling water. Cover the pan, bring to boiling and then reduce the heat to simmer. A 1- to 2-pound lobster should be cooked approximately 15 to 20 minutes. Crab should be cooked 12 to 15 minutes. Shrimp, depending on size, will take 4 to 6 minutes.

With shrimp, crabs and lobsters, the flesh should turn from translucent to opaque when they are through cooking.

To steam live oysters, clams or mussels, add about ¼ inch of water in a 5-quart pan. Put in shellfish, cover and boil on medium heat.

For clams, oysters and mussels, the general rule for deciding when they are cooked is when the shell opens. For oysters, that can take from 8 to 20 minutes. Clams and mussels take from 4 to 10 minutes.

The shellfish can be served immediately after it is simmered or steamed. If desired, serve melted butter or garlic butter to use for dipping.

Hot Crab Dip

2 packages (8 ounces) cream cheese, softened
½ cup mayonnaise
2 green onions, chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
½ teaspoon Worcestershire
2 cans (6 ounces) crabmeat, drained
¼ cup chopped pimentos
Crackers or fresh vegetables

In a small bowl with mixer at medium speed, beat cream cheese until smooth and fluffy. Gradually beat mayonnaise, green onions, garlic and Worcestershire until smooth and well blended. Stir in crab and pimentos. Turn mixture into 1-quart casserole.

Bake at 350 degrees for 20 minutes or until very warm, stirring once. Stir before serving. Serve with crackers or vegetables. Yields 3 ½ cups.

Seafood Rarebit

This may be made with any sort of shellfish, fresh, frozen or canned.
4 tablespoons butter
4 tablespoons flour
1½ cups milk
Salt, pepper
1½ cups grated cheddar cheese
2 cans (5 ounces each) shrimp or crab meat or lobster, or a mixture of any two

Melt butter and stir in flour. Cook for a minute or two before adding the milk slowly, stirring constantly until smooth and thickened. Add cheese and stir until melted. Stir in seafood and heat. Serve in four individual casserole dishes, putting them under the broiler for a minute or two before serving. Serves 4.

Lobster Salad

3 cups diced cooked lobster or lobster tails
1 cup diced fresh celery
½ cup French dressing
Mayonnaise
Greens

Toss diced lobster and celery with French dressing. Marinate in the refrigerator 2 or 3 hours. Just before serving, mix with enough mayonnaise to hold and arrange on a bed of greens. Serves 4.

Shrimp Fried Rice

2 tablespoons fat
½ clove garlic, minced
1 bunch spring onions, tops and bottoms, chopped
1 pound shrimp, cooked, peeled and deveined and cut into 1-inch pieces, or 2 cans (5 ounces each) shrimp, rinsed and drained
½ cup tomato ketchup
2 cups cooked rice
1 egg, lightly beaten
Salt and pepper

Saute garlic, onions and shrimp in melted fat. Cook for 2-3 minutes. Add ketchup and mix well. Stir in cooked rice and blend well. When rice is well heated, add the lightly beaten egg and mix well. Remove from heat. The heat of the mixture will cook the egg. Serve warm. Serves 4.

New England Clam Chowder

¼ pound diced salt pork
1 onion, sliced
4 medium-sized raw potatoes, diced
1 quart milk
Salt and pepper
2 dozen raw clams, drained and chopped fine, or 2 cans (7 1/2 ounces each) minced clams

Saute salt pork in a deep saucepan and cook onion in the fat until it turns golden brown. Add potatoes, milk, salt and pepper. Cook until potatoes are tender. Add the clams and juice. If fresh clams are used, they should be steamed open, chopped and the liquid strained through cheesecloth into the soup. Many think this is better if refrigerated for a day before serving, but it may be served immediately. Serve pilot crackers with the chowder.

Tax levy replaces funding

Social services receive partial support

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Manhattan social services may not have to face a tightened expense budget in 1989 due to potential financial support from the city of Manhattan.

The city has been providing partial support for the social services since fiscal year 1987, said Curt Wood, director of finance for Manhattan.

At that time, the city assumed the financial responsibilities formerly provided by the federal government through the Revenue Sharing Fund, a federal fund designed to provide financial support for social services. The fund, Wood explained, was discontinued in 1986 as part of the federal government's budget cuts.

"Unfortunately we lost a lot of money, (but) it wasn't just Manhattan. The federal government discontinued it everywhere," he said.

Collectively, financial losses for social services after the fund was discontinued amounted to $221,883, according to the revenue-sharing fund expenditure budget.

In an effort to save the social services from an almost inevitable death, the city passed a property tax levy to replace part of the lost funds, Wood said. Receipts from the levy are placed in the general fund and then paid to the services according to need.

For 1987, the city provided $150,100 to be divided among the nine agencies excluding the taxi service, according to the Manhattan annual operating budget. Although the taxi service is a social service, it does not receive financial support from the general fund and is not connected with the property tax, Wood said.

In prior years, the amount allocated to each specific social service agency was determined by the City Commission. Wood said the decision was based on an oral presentation made to the commission by the service workers and a written proposal that stated the desired amount of money.

A new procedure has been established for the 1989 budget allocations. On Feb. 2, 1988, a resolution was adopted establishing the Social Service Advisory Board. According to Resolution No. 20288-H, the board's 15 members are appointed by the mayor and will act for the City Commission as an evaluative agent of the social services' needs.

The board will meet annually with each social service that desires funding. According to the resolution, the board will make dollar-amount recommendations to the commission for what its members determine are the actual monetary needs of each social service.

"The advisory board is not intended to be an advocate for the social services," said Richard Hayter, city commissioner.

In the past, the commission has had a multitude of items on its agenda. Time has not been available to learn enough about the services to make adequate funding decisions, Hayter said.

Judy Davis, executive director of the Crisis Center, does not anticipate any major funding cuts for 1989.

"We've never been cut in funding, but (also) we're not applying for as much money as we need," she said.

The Crisis Center has been operating on the same budgeted amount of $40,000 for the past two years. According to the center's budget, the city maintained support identical to that received under the Revenue Sharing Fund.

The Crisis Center has other sources of income available, such as private contributions and allocations from the United Way. However, according to the center's budget, these sources only provided half of the needed income.

"Nothing would please me more than to pass over this (money) and say 'No, thank you,'" Davis said. "Nobody wants to rely on the city for money."

The Crisis Center relies primarily on volunteers to staff the center during its average operation time of 13,000 hours per year.

Approximately 500 unduplicated individual-unit requests are made annually for assistance. Davis defines an "individual unit" as any crisis intervention and other services.

The number of unduplicated individual units for 1987 served within the Riley County area was 424. In 1985, 334 were served.

Spring busiest time for campus tours

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

A group of students from a second-grade class holds hands while walking across campus. Arriving at the Dairy Barn, the children watch as a man milks a cow. Then, the group takes off to Call Hall for ice cream.

Spring is the busiest time of year for special tours, said Marilyn Trotter, director of New Student Programs.

Although the department is responsible for giving campus tours to prospective students, the department's tour guides also give special tours.

"We give tours to anybody and everybody who calls and requests a tour," Trotter said. "Groups range from grade-school age to senior citizens."

The program's success has caused some recent changes in procedures, she said.

Currently, tour guides meet the incoming group and give the person in charge directions to different points on campus. There, the group is met by personnel from the department the group is touring. Previously, the tour guide remained with the group throughout the tour.

"We started doing this at the end of last week, and it's working well," Trotter said. "I'd prefer not to do it, but we don't have enough help to do that (send guides with the groups) any more."

Fourteen students are employed as campus tour guides. They are responsible for setting up special tours and scheduling three tours a day for prospective students.

Special tour groups usually stay on campus for two to three hours, Trotter said.

Sometimes the individual requests a particular special tour, but others ask for suggestions for their group's tour, she said.

One of the most popular tours is of the planetarium in the physics department, she said. However, because of a lack of money to staff it during the tours, there are limits on the number of tours given.

"The physics people have been very cooperative," Trotter said. "One reason (the planetarium is) so popular is that it's for all ages."

Younger children seem to like the Dairy Barn, because they get to see cows being milked, she said.

Other popular tours are the Union, the facilities in Kedzie Hall, including the Collegian and Printing Services, and KSU Stadium. Sometimes, older people want a bus tour of campus because they do not want to walk, Trotter said.

"It's really neat this year, because a lot of (groups) bring sack lunches and make arrangements to have a picnic lunch at the old stadium," Trotter said.

This time of year, most of the tours are grade school children, she said.

"I think our (K-State) students really enjoy and appreciate seeing the children on campus," she said.

Other special tour groups have been conducted for alumni reunions and conferences.

"A lot of out-of-town groups visit K-State," Trotter said. "If you draw a circle around Manhattan, and if a group can get here in two hours, they come."

A group's size can be as large as 75 people, she said.

Although the program has been around for a long time, it underwent a drastic change two years ago, Trotter said. Under the direction of Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, the program was given more emphasis, and the number of special tours increased.

"Tours are one of the best public relations things we can do. If (visitors) are a second-grader and they have a good time here, they could start thinking college would be neat, and K-State would be a fun place to go," Trotter said.

Telefund succeeds

Scholarships to increase

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

University administrators are expecting K-State students to be the big winners as a result of the success of this year's KSU Foundation Telefund drive.

The drive netted pledges totaling more than $500,000. This money will allow each college to offer more scholarships, purchase various educational materials or hold special events.

The College of Agriculture will use its money in three areas: scholarships, special projects and enrichment activities for students. Of the almost $70,000 the college received in pledges, more than 50 percent will go into scholarships.

"More than half of our money goes directly into scholarship support for freshmen and returning student scholarships," said John Riley, assistant director of agriculture-resident instruction and director of institutional agriculture. "A portion goes into special projects that faculty and students can submit."

In the past, the college's projects have included activities that support other kinds of instruction and the purchase of equipment.

"It may involve video equipment or computer projection equipment," Riley said. "It has also been used to provide study areas and reading rooms and to develop videotapes and promotional tapes."

The College of Engineering will use most of the $83,000 it received in pledges for scholarships, but it also has other uses for the funds.

"Better than 50 percent goes to scholarships," said John Dollar, assistant dean of engineering. "All of the money goes to student-related activities, though. Some goes to the K-State engineering magazine, some goes to our engineering ambassadors program, some goes for our tutoring program, and some goes to our open house and supplies for student activities."

The amount of money currently available for scholarships has allowed the College of Engineering to lower the required GPA for continuing education students who receive scholarships, Dollar said.

Previously, students with a GPA of 3.65 or better were the only students who could receive scholarships through the college. During the last two years, however, students who have maintained at least a 3.5 GPA have been eligible to receive scholarships due to money the college has received from the telefund.

The telefund may have the most obvious effect on the College of Education.

"Prior to the telefund, we weren't able to offer a large number of scholarships," said Michael Holen, associate dean of education. "Since the telefund, we've increased the number of our scholarships 10 times. The telefund gives us money that allows us to do things that we would not otherwise be able to accomplish."

Commission studies government privatization

Private sector involvement to increase in activities

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

A commission appointed by President Reagan to study privatization in government recommended in March increasing private sector involvement in all areas of government it examined, citing improved efficiency and quality of service as benefits.

One purpose of the commission was to identify government programs which are not considered the responsibility of the federal government, or programs the commission thought could be done more efficiently by the private sector.

According to the report, techniques to be used to increase private sector involvement in government activities include:

■ The sale of government assets.

■ Contracting out services to private firms. These private businesses then provide goods and services for the specific program on which they bid. Contracting out also includes franchising, when the government awards exclusive rights to deliver a public service, such as utilities.

■ Giving vouchers to eligible people to obtain government services. The government gives purchasing power to eligible people, and the people then spend the vouchers on certain goods or services. One example of the use of vouchers is food stamps.

■ Charging of user fees. The user of a service pays a fee, but the government also subsidizes the service.

"The basic rationale for privatization is there's an implicit feeling the government is inefficient," said Richard Megna, assistant professor of economics. "In private markets there are incentives to do a good job, but the government has no competition."

William Richter, professor of political science, said, "Privatization has been a trend in the 1980s with the Reagan administration. You can regard it as a part of a general movement to review the role of government."

The commission recommended more private business involvement in all of the government activities it examined.

■ Low-income housing. The commission recommended that the government sell all government-owned private housing or have the residents manage it. Vouchers would also be given to eligible low-income households so they could rent housing in the private marketplace.

■ Housing finance. A recommendation by the commission assumes a more neutral position with direct housing finance programs, such as Farmers Home Administration and Veterans Administration loans. It also suggested that the federal government fully privatize the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

■ Federal loan programs. The commission suggested that the federal government sell its loans.

■ Air traffic control. For reasons of safety, public service and efficiency, the commission recommended that the Federal Aviation Administration continue regulating the air space system.

However, the commission suggested that only portions of the system should be privatized. These include reducing the federal government's direct role in the development of airports.

The gradual privatization of the system of air traffic control towers, flight service stations and system maintenance service was also recommended.

■ Educational choice. The use of vouchers could increase "educational choice," according to the commission. People would use the vouchers to choose different schools for their children.

Private schools would be able to participate in the federal voucher programs. However, the report said "the federal government should remain sensitive to retaining the values represented by the public schools."

■ Postal service. Competition should be allowed in all areas of postal service, the commission recommended. It contends that the postal monopoly should be lifted immediately on third-class mail and rural delivery, restrictions on private delivery be loosened and the prohibition on private use of letter boxes repealed.

■ Contracting out government services. The commission recommended contracting out to private businesses as much as possible in government activities. In military commissaries, the report said private businesses should participate in managing and operating the commissaries.

The report suggested that prisons should be privatized. New prisons would be leased or purchased by private businesses. The report said "problems of liability and accountability should not be seen as posing insurmountable obstacles to contracting out." However, it said the prisons may be required to meet American Correctional Association standards.

The report said that in "all areas the commission found potential for improved efficiency, quality of service or both to be derived from increased private sector participation."

Richter said, "A lot of aspects (of privatization) are beneficial, but the risk any private program runs is losing responsibility.

"I think it depends a lot on the special project," he said. "Privatization has a lot of potential for working out, but there's also risk, and (the government) should not latch on it as a panacea that would replace big, bad government with good, private business.

"It's not just something of interest to the people, but something the current administration is pushing," Richter said.

Megna said a major concern is that private business is out to make profits, and they may not be as concerned about meeting other objectives.

"What people would worry about with prisons is that the private sector could be more efficient, but it's the profit motive, and they would worry how well prisoners are being treated," he said.

Megna said some services not only benefit the people who directly consume them, but other people also benefit from it. One example is education.

Campus receives two new sculptures from East Coast

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

People who frequent the south side of McCain Auditorium have probably noticed a change lately in the scenery.

Two recently acquired sculptures by Douglass Abdell, a practicing artist in New York, are now located in the area between Thompson and Nichols halls.

"I think it is particularly fitting that they were located near McCain and Nichols," said Jessica Reichman, curator of collections for the University.

The University was able to acquire the pieces with the help of Phillip Kassebaum, attorney for the Price R. and Flora A. Reed Foundation in Wichita.

Reichman said Kassebaum called her in February of 1987 to ask if the University would be interested in acquiring one of the two sculptures — "Kreqe-Aekyad" — for the campus.

Kassebaum told Reichman the Reed Foundation would pay three-fourths of the cost if K-State would pay the other one-fourth.

"He said he had visited the campus several times and hadn't noticed any major sculptures," Reichman said.

In early June, Kassebaum called again and offered the second piece — "Kqrefe-Aekyad" — as a gift from the Foundation to the University.

"The sculptures were primarily a donation from the Reed Foundation," Reichman said, although the University paid for insurance, shipping and handling from New York for both pieces.

The sculptures are made of welded steel and are in the minimalist tradition, she said.

Minimalism is the theory or practice in art or design of using the fewest and simplest elements to achieve the greatest effect.

After the pieces arrived on campus in mid-August, Reichman worked with Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning, and the Advisory Committee for Campus Planning to decide on a suitable place to put the sculptures.

Stick-up animals may inhibit vision

Motorists could face fines

By Patrice Macan
Collegian Reporter

Besides being stuck on himself, Garfield, the cartoon cat, is stuck on cars.

Garfield is now appearing with dogs, cats and mice on car windows everywhere.

But don't put too many of the little creatures up — police officers might notice and it could result in a $39 fine, said Trooper William Dickson of the Kansas Highway Patrol.

Ticketing a motorist for the stuffed animals would depend on various factors, such as the size of the animals and whether they cover half the window, he said.

Dickson also said that so far, no accidents or tickets have been reported because of the stick-up animals.

Lt. G.R. Grubbs of the Riley County Police Department said the law is not specific as to the number of objects a driver can have in the windows of a vehicle. However, "if (the driver) can see the rear traffic portion through the window, then they are in compliance with the law," he said.

Both Grubbs and Dickson said that officers must use common sense and judgment when issuing a ticket for obstruction of view.

Ann Sells, store manager of Salutations in Manhattan Town Center, said the animals are a popular item and have been selling out.

Every couple of weeks, shipments containing 72 stuffed animals arrive, and 300 to 400 animals have been sold since the store opened, she said.

"Everybody can kind of relate to Garfield's attitude, and it's the trendy thing to do," Sells said.

International student stranded; passport stolen from Kramer

By The Collegian Staff

A K-State student planning to return to his native Taiwan later this month may be delayed two months due to the theft of his backpack Monday. The backpack, which contained a passport and immigration and naturalization documents, was stolen from Kramer Food Center about 5 p.m.

Wu Jung Cheng, graduate student in business administration, was planning to return to Taiwan May 12 to see his wife and son for the first time this year. He said he laid the backpack down while he went to eat dinner. When he returned, it was missing.

"I put it there the whole semester," Cheng said.

Cheng has only one more year before he graduates, but he is only able to spend time with his family during the summer months.

He had already purchased the airplane ticket for next week and expected to be working in Taiwan soon after he arrived. Although the plane reservation can still be canceled, it will cost 25 percent of the ticket fee for late cancellation, he said.

Cheng also lost Social Security information along with his calling card, bank card and notes for his five remaining finals that begin Thursday.

The loss of textbooks and notes were not as important as the other items in the backpack, he said. Those could be replaced easily, but the passport could take months.

Lt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police said the incidence of stolen backpacks increases dramatically at the end of each semester. The most common motive behind stealing backpacks is to sell the textbooks, he said.

"It happens every year and every semester. Although recovery is really not that bad in comparison to other reported stolen items, we do not generally recover the whole thing — usually just the lesser contents," Mellgren said.

Anyone with information about the whereabouts of Cheng's backpack should contact campus police.

Staff/Brad Fanshier

Wu Jung Cheng, graduate student in business administration, may have to wait two months to return to his home in Taiwan after his passport and immigration and naturalization documents were stolen Monday.

Speech disorder frustrating to victims

Stutterers not silent because of shyness

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

When Rafael Charneco started his studies here last semester, he didn't say anything in class.

That isn't uncommon for new students in a university environment, but Charneco was not silent because of shyness.

Charneco is a stutterer, and speaking up in the classroom has an entirely different meaning for someone with this speech impediment.

"When I arrived here in August, my stuttering had increased so that every five words I was stuttering," said Charneco, junior in preveterinary medicine. "I didn't participate in class. If I had a question, I waited until the class was over and then asked the professor."

Charneco is one of 1.5 million people in the United States who have a stuttering problem — roughly 1 percent of the population. Medical experts are still debating the cause of the problem, but researchers are beginning to think stuttering has a genetic or neurological basis, according to the National Stuttering Project, a non-profit organization designed to help children and adults who stutter.

Whatever the cause, stuttering remains a frustrating problem that begins in childhood and can dramatically affect people's lives. The fear, shame and guilt that stutterers experience stems from our culture's reaction to abnormal speech, said Bruce Flanagan, professor of speech pathology and a therapist at the Speech and Hearing Center in Leasure Hall.

Stuttering is not a nervous condition, but is often equated with lying or emotional disorders, Flanagan said.

"People also think you don't know what you are talking about because you are stumbling over your words," Flanagan said, adding that fewer stutterers attend college because they believe the pressure to communicate will be overwhelming.

"Stutterers who avoid college fear they will have to speak out in class in order to graduate," he said. "Even something as simple as an Intro to Speech class would be enough to discourage a stutterer from going to college."

Stuttering is defined by the National Association for Hearing and Speech Action as a condition in which the flow of speech is broken by abnormal stoppages (no sound), repetitions (st-st-stuttering) or prolongations (sssstuttering) of sounds and syllables.

Because people often react negatively, stutterers learn from an early age to incorporate techniques to hide the problem. Some stutterers develop unusual body or facial movements to mask the speech disorder, such as writhing their jaw from side to side to force production of a sound, or suddenly jerking their arm or leg for the same reason.

Stutterers learn to edit their speech in advance by substituting words for problem sounds that may cause a disfluency. For example, if stutterers believe a problem will occur with the word "program," they may replace "program" with "schedule" before they even attempt to say "program."

There is no cure for stuttering, Flanagan said, but speech therapy can help the stutterer learn to control the problem. However, even after successful therapy, disfluencies usually resurface, he said.

Harvey Helms, a 1985 graduate in sociology, said the issue of his stuttering is more important now than it was in college.

Helms works as a salesperson in a hardware store in Kansas City while he looks for employment in social work. The pressure of not working in his field of study has caused his stuttering to worsen, Helms said.

Before therapy in his last semester of college, Helms hid the problem by avoiding class participation.

"I would never say much in class, unless it was one of the smaller ones where I was comfortable with the instructor and the students," he said.

"Stutterers who avoid college fear they will have to speak out in class in order to graduate. Even something as simple as an Intro to Speech class would be enough to discourage a stutterer from going to college."

—Bruce Flanagan, professor of speech pathology

"I didn't tell my instructors I was a stutterer, because I figured it was obvious. When I did talk with the instructors (out of class), they often said things like 'I never noticed' or 'I didn't know.' At the time, that made me feel good."

Even with therapy, the habit of hiding the stuttering is difficult to overcome. Susan Zimmerman began stuttering in the sixth grade, and said she "immediately went underground" when she realized she had a problem. In a seventh-grade history class, Zimmerman found she couldn't read an essay out loud in front of the other students.

"I couldn't read any of it, so I faked reading errors and the teacher looked at me like I had lost my mind," she said. "It was a humiliating experience, but that was just how bad stuttering was for me. I would rather fake being stupid than admit to being a stutterer."

Zimmerman continued to hide the problem until she began therapy at the clinic here in 1969. When she graduated in 1973, she took with her a master's degree in speech pathology and a new-found fluency. Today she is a speech-language pathologist with the Big Lakes Developmental Center and works with pre-school children.

Zimmerman said admitting to yourself and others that stuttering is a part of your life — but not your whole life — helps ease the tension that aggravates the problem. When she was in college, she conducted an experiment by announcing in half of her classes that she was a stutterer. In the other classes, she kept the problem hidden.

"In the classes I didn't say anything (in), it was almost impossible to talk most of the time. I was constantly in fear," she said.

In the classes that knew she was a stutterer, Zimmerman said "the lessening of the tension was enormous. It made a real difference."

Research and support organizations are making a difference in the lives of stutterers. NAHSA publishes state-by-state directories of professional services for stutterers and operates a toll-free hotline (800-638-8255) to further assist people.

Congress has also declared May 9-15 as National Stuttering Awareness Week. The National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke, a federal agency, is supporting research in new techniques for the study of abnormal speech. The University Speech and Hearing Center treats people with speech disorders from the local area as well as from the University.

The therapy offered here helps stutterers deal with the problem with psychotherapy and behavior modification techniques, Flanagan added.

This treatment helps put the stuttering into perspective and also gives stutterers renewed hope in their ability to control disfluencies. Charneco has been in therapy since October of last year, and he said his stuttering is now under control.

"Last semester I felt ashamed and embarrassed because I could hardly speak," he said. "Now, if I have a question in class, I ask it."

Child's speech alerts parents

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

Stuttering is a frustrating disorder because it is sporadic and unpredictable. As stutterer Susan Zimmerman puts it, "You can't even count on your own handicap."

Stutterers have "good days" and "bad days" where their degree of fluency fluctuates. Accepting this seesaw aspect is an important step for adults.

According to the National Stuttering Project, parents should be alert to their children's speech patterns in case an abnormal stutter develops.

Stuttering occurs when the natural flow of speech is disrupted. Occasional stuttering is normal in children between the ages of 3 and 6. Children may repeat words and phrases and use many "ands" while they are formulating a sentence.

However, when this behavior becomes a habit and is accompanied by secondary actions such as facial grimaces, the NSP says that parents should consider professional therapy. A child's speech should not be accompanied by fear and anxiety — in other words, speaking should not be a struggle for a child.

Parents should ask themselves the question, "Is my child struggling against something he or she cannot control?" If the answer is "yes," a qualified speech pathologist who has experience with children should be consulted, according to the NSP.

Children may "grow out" of the difficulty, but the NSP advises parents not to take the chance.

Pitching leads Wildcats to sweep

Staff/Brett Hacker

Jeff Hulse is filling the Wildcats' starting catching position this year, and owns a batting average of .370 in the Big Eight and .313 overall. Hulse also leads the team in home runs and is second in runs batted in.

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

K-State got strong pitching performances from Jim McClellan and Darryl Rowley in a double-header sweep of the Tarkio Owls Tuesday at Frank Meyers Field.

After Iowa State shelled Wildcat pitching last weekend for 48 runs in a four-game series, K-State coach Mike Clark was especially pleased with the hurlers' performances.

"We threw strikes and that was the whole key to today," Clark said. "Those two kids have been throwing the ball well recently and I wanted to give them the opportunity of a couple of starts.

"Jim threw real well and Darryl had one bad inning," he added. "Then (Tarkio) didn't hit the ball hard that inning. We just made the mistakes."

In the first game, a 10-2 win, McClellan (3-1) gave up one run in the first inning then settled down in the second and gave up one more run in the third before shutting the Owls down.

The win came easily for K-State. In the bottom of the first inning, the 'Cats struck for five runs off pitcher Matt Ballou, 6-3, who lasted only the first inning and gave up six runs on three hits and walked four.

Tony Braddock, who tied a K-State single game record with four stolen bases, started off the big inning with a walk and then promptly stole second. Center fielder Kent Gleason then reached first on an error.

David Chadd followed with two-run double to center field. The double gave Chadd the season record for hits with 73. Chadd later extended that to 75 with two hits in the second game. K-State tacked on three more runs that inning and cruised to an eight-run win.

In game two, Rowley flirted with a shutout for four innings and the 'Cats used a seven-run third inning to waltz past Tarkio, 8-3.

But in the fifth inning, Rowley was called for a balk which flustered the senior lefthander and the Owls went on to score three runs in the inning. Clark said Rowley's form might have caused the call.

"They (the umpires) said that he stepped toward the plate," Clark said. "Darryl pitches from the far side of the rubber so his foot isn't going to go directly home. He's got about a 45 degree angle to pitch from, but it's the first time that he's been called (for a balk) all season long.

"It comes down that you have to throw the strikes. I was coming off two days rest. I wasn't to where I should have been, but I had my curve ball and slider and that was enough."

—Darryl Rowley

"Usually when he pitches it's a Big Eight game and Big Eight crew. There would, in that case, be a umpire at first base. But Darryl shouldn't have let it affect him as much as it did."

Rowley admitted that throwing against an NAIA school was easier than previous Big Eight Conference opponents.

"They aren't as strong as some of the teams in the Big Eight," he said. "But they have a good ball club and they are all right.

"It comes down that you have to throw the strikes," he added. "I was coming off two days rest. I wasn't to where I should have been, but I had my curve ball and slider and that was enough. As for the day, we gave ourselves two good outings, one from McClellan and one from me."

The 'Cats, 31-20 overall, are scheduled to host Wichita State at 7 tonight.

"It'll be a tough one," he said. "We'll be starting Jeff Peterson and have Zack (Kimball) coming out of the bullpen. We'll put those two together and see waht we can do."

Clark added that the key to defeating the nationally ranked Shockers may be Kimball as a reliever.

"Zack, if he get's drafted, it will be as a relief pitcher," Clark said. "This will give us a chance to see what he can do in that kind of a role."

The Wildcats are slated to conclude the home portion of their schedule Saturday and Sunday when they host Oral Roberts.

Celtics' mentor resigns

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Boston Celtics' coach K.C. Jones said Tuesday he will resign after the current NBA season and indicated he would be succeeded by assistant coach Jimmy Rodgers.

Jones' surprise announcement came one day before the Celtics meet the New York Knicks in the third game of their playoff series. Boston leads 2-0 and can wrap it up with a victory.

Jones, who led the Celtics to the NBA finals in each of his previous four years as their coach and won two of them, said, "Where do I go from here? Four years, two titles.

"I thought about it for quite a while," he added. "I'm very happy about it. It's not often one gets a chance to say, 'Well, I've done it all and I can't go any further so let's step down.'"

Broadcast reports indicated that Jones would move into the Celtics' front office. No position was mentioned.

Jones, 56, had been a Celtics' assistant coach since 1978. He succeeded Bill Fitch as Boston's head coach for the 1983-84 season. Boston won the NBA title that year in a seven-game final against the Los Angeles Lakers.

Jones said Celtics President Red Auerbach anticipated the decision.

"It seemed like Red was way ahead of me. He says, 'You done it all, huh Case? You feel like getting out?' ... I said, 'Yeah,'" Jones said.

"I talked with the players and told them what I had in mind and they were totally shocked."

Track teams 'come close' to coach's expectations

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

After battling weather and injuries, K-State coach John Capriotti said the track teams have had a good — but not great — outdoor season.

"They've come close to them," said Capriotti of his expectations of the teams this year. "We've had some good events and meets when the weather permitted. UCLA was a great meet and (the) Kansas and Drake (Relays) were good ones too.

"I think that we've been a little bit down with the injuries that we've had this year," he added. "Especially with the sprint crew. All in all, though. it has been a pretty good year. I think we're headed in the right direction going into the Big Eight meet."

Capriotti said the track teams still have the chance to qualify more people for national competition at the Big Eight Conference's outdoor meet.

"We've got six national qualifiers in seven events and I expect to get three more," he said. "That would be 10 events for the national meet. That would put us in a good postion at the national meet."

Probably the biggest surprise this year for the K-State teams has been the performance of the throwers on the men's and women's teams. Pat Allen, Dan O'Mara and Doug Brown lead the way for the men, and Kelly Abernathy and Angie Miller for the women.

"Pat Allen and Kelly Abernathy are quality people," Capriotti said. "I think Doug Brown can still hit a qualifying mark at the conference meet. They all have done a good job for us this year."

One of the strengths of the team this year, as in the past, will be the distance runners.

"If everybody is healthy, we have good shot at moving up in the conference standings at the meet," Capriotti said.

One runner who could possibly of move the men's team up in the standings is senior, Ron Stahl.

"He hasn't qualified (for nationals) yet," Capriotti said, "but he always saves his best for last. This is a big meet for him and it's his last year. He should be able to qualify there."

Another added plus to the track teams has been the emergence of the freshmen on both the men's and women's teams.

"I think that we've been a little bit down with the injuries that we've had this year ..."

—John Capriotti

"The freshman have done a really good job this season," Capriotti said. "Todd Eggers has been injured the past few years out of high school but he's getting better. Steve Christensen has done a good job for us and Angie Miller has done a good job for us in the discus.

"Chuckie Allen has helped a lot in the sprints," he added. "They are a good group, but they just need a little bit more seasoning.

But does this crop of freshmen guarantee a bright future for the K-State track program?

"That's hard to say," Capriotti said. "There are a lot of other good freshmen in the Big Eight. Right now I'd say that we are equal to the other freshmen in the Big Eight."

Right now what concerns Capriotti is the performance of both K-State teams at the Big Eight Meet, May 13-15, at Ames, Iowa.

"I'd say that both teams will finish in the top half of their divisions," he said. "It's so close with the men this year with the first four or five teams. We could finish fourth or fifth. With the women I'm sure we can finish in third."

Once again Nebraska appears to be headed for titles in the men's and women's divisions. Capriotti said the K-State women's team will have tough task dethroning the Cornhuskers.

"Nebraska won the Big Eight indoor meet really easily," he said. "I think they'll do the same at the outdoor meet. I don't know if we have the depth to keep up with them. They have a lot of good people and they have all the depth in the world."

Throwers aiming for Big 8 titles

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

Most collegiate track programs look toward one area of their program to come through with the big points in the clutch. This year, that area for the K-State men's team has been its throwers.

This year's track team sports some of the top talents in the Big Eight Conference, and some of these talents are even ranked among the best in the nation. The throwers consist of those individuals who participate in the javelin, discus and shot put events. For K-State, the javelin is an extremely strong area this year.

"The javelin will be the highest scoring event on the team at the conference meet," assistant track coach Ray Hansen said. "We are looking for 20 points right off the bat."

K-State's top javelin thrower is a tossup between two athletes. The top thrower this season has been sophomore Pat Allen, followed closely by junior Doug Brown. Allen posted a personal record and school record at the Kansas Relays with a toss of 228-feet, 6 inches. That mark also qualified him for the NCAA Championships in June.

Brown has recorded a season-best mark of 219 feet 10 inches, needing just under six feet to reach the national qualifying standard of 225 feet. Brown and Allen have competed against each other in five meets, with Allen leading the personal duel with three victories.

"I've never been with a group that works as hard or pushes you like they do here," Allen said. "I just want to be getting better and better. I got my (personal record at KU) and I'm just hoping to peak at the right time."

Another thrower who is making an impact on the Big Eight and is being heard on the national level is junior Dan O'Mara. O'Mara, whose specialties are the shot put and discus, qualified for the national meet a year ago in the discus and is looking to make an encore performance this season.

O'Mara finished second in the discus at the Big Eight Outdoor Championships last season, and currently ranks eighth in the nation according to Track Wire magazine. His personal best in that event is 191-7. If he wants to be eligible for the Olympic Trials, he will have to pull off a perfect throw.

"My ultimate goal for this year is to get to the Olympic Trials," O'Mara said. "To get there I'd have to throw 10 feet over my (personal record)."

Training for the throwers begins in the fall and works right up to and through the indoor and outdoor seasons. At this point in the season, the javelin throwers are concentrating on leg strength and technique, while the shot putters are working on quickness and speed through the throwing ring. The throwers' off-season training consists of lots of time in the weight room.

For Brown, the hard work has resulted in him losing 23 pounds and getting his weight down to 202. Because of this, Hansen forsees no problem in Brown getting his national qualifying mark.

Staff/Gary Lytle

Pat Allen, Dan O'Mara and Doug Brown are three of the throwers on the men's track team who have consistently been high point scorers for the team this season.

Interns ask students about Van Zile

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate interns found an answer to the popular question of what to do with Van Zile Hall when they asked the people who have the greatest possibility of using it — the students.

According to a survey conducted by Senate interns, students living in on-campus housing want to have Van Zile renovated as a residence hall, said Ira Bolden, sophomore in electrical engineering and Senate intern.

The survey was done so the people determining the future of Van Zile would be able to know how the students feel, he said. Bolden thought of the project and proposed that the interns take it on as a group project.

"Van Zile is a student issue that students need to be more aware of," Bolden said. "The people who are deciding what should done to Van Zile should have the students' perspective, and now we have it for them."

The survey was completed by 339 residence hall students, excluding those living in Jardine Terrace Apartments and Edwards Hall. They were asked what they would like Van Zile renovated as, what kind of design to use, the acceptable funding methods and how they would like the charges reduced, he said. Among the results:

- About 47 percent of the students said they would like Van Zile renovated as a residence hall.
- About 60 percent said they would like Van Zile to have two-room suites with a bathroom in each room.
- Nearly 65 percent would accept a 20-year bond which would require a $6 to $12 increase per month in housing fees for all residence halls.
- About 45 percent of the residents said they would like, if possible, to have the charges reduced by alumni donations instead of pulling funds out of the K-State housing department reserves.

"I thought the students would want to take money from the reserves; this shows that the students were really thinking when they were taking the survey," Bolden said.

Shuttle astronaut to give lecture

By The Collegian Staff

One of the people responsible for taking the study of biology into space will visit campus Friday and Saturday.

Astronaut Mary Cleave, who flew aboard the space shuttle in 1985, will discuss her work as a biologist and engineer in space during her lecture, "Space Shuttle Operations." It will be at 4 p.m. Friday in Ackert 221.

Cleave's work is unique because she has degrees in both biology and engineering, said Ken Buyle, KSU Bioserve Space Technologies program special assistant. This allows her to give an added insight into the problems related to working in those two areas in space.

"We want to develop some kind of working relationship between engineers and biologists," Buyle said.

The Bioserve Center, which is sponsoring Cleave's visit, also deals with the study of biology in space.

The center, which is funded by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, is helping NASA and biologists like Cleave develop new products and procedures to gain more information about life sciences in the weightless atmosphere of space, Buyle said.

Although K-State will gain a lot from Cleave's visit, Buyle said the department hopes to give her something in return.

Funding

The center's 24-hour crisis intervention services include crisis counseling, shelter and subsistence, emergency transportation and support groups for battered women and their children.

A similarly oriented social service, the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, Inc. has seen a decline in monetary allocation in the past year.

Of the emergency shelter's $55,150 operating budget for 1988, only $10,250, or 18.5 percent, came from the city of Manhattan. According to the shelter's budget, the amount provided in 1986 by the Revenue Sharing Fund was $8,500 of the budgeted $50,758, or 16.7 percent. For 1989, the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, Inc. is requesting $12,000 from the city's general fund.

In addition to the tax money, Kathy Rankin, director of the shelter, said the majority of the shelter's income is from the community. It is collected from fund-raisers, individual contributions, church work and the United Way.

The shelter employs two full-time personnel and five part-time workers. The rest of the staff are volunteers drawn from the K-State and the community, Rankin said.

Occupants of the shelter range from singles to couples and families. According to an emergency shelter facts sheet, a total of 560 individuals were housed in 1987, while the number for 1985 was 470.

Even if people are evicted from their homes, they still have a chance of obtaining food. The Flint Hills Breadbasket's mission, according to a summary information sheet, is to "minimize hunger at the local level, and to reduce the amount of waste of surplus, salvageable food that exists in the community and surrounding area."

The Breadbasket provides food for low income families, the elderly, the physically disabled or mentally ill and single parents with who exist below or at the poverty line, said Atina Hanna, director of the Breadbasket.

Operating on a 1988 budget of $41,150, the breadbasket has received $2,500 each year in 1987 and 1988 from the city of Manhattan. According the Breadbasket's budget, allocations from the United Way of $10,229 and $19,166 from private contributions constitute the bulk of the annual income. The breadbasket's 1989 request will again be $2,500.

Although the city money is not the main financial support for the service, Hanna said, it is a very substantial portion of the budget. In light of the federal budget cuts that occurred in 1986 eliminating the Revenue Sharing Fund, Hanna is concerned about the future of those who normally would receive assistance from a social service agency.

"It's time to look at what's going to happen to the poor of Manhattan 20 years down the road," she said.

The University for Man Home Program, another Manhattan based social service funded partially from the property tax levy, also exists to help the needy.

The home program provides home repair services to the elderly and low income people, said Richard Freisen, director of the UFM Home Program.

Until the city of Manhattan began allocating funds for the home program this year, the majority of annual income came from a Community Development Block Grant, a federal program designed to promote and fund the repairs on homes in low income neighborhoods. Elimination of the $21,170 grant in 1987 by the federal government necessitated requesting funding from the city, he said.

In addition to the $12,360 allocated for 1988 by the city, the home program received a grant of $8,822 from the Association for Community Based Education, totaling $21,182 for the year, according to the UFM budget.

The request for 1989 funding being made by UFM Home Program is $23,916.

According to the Monthly Statistics for UFM Home Program 1986-1987, the number of jobs performed during the 1986 calendar year was 228, while there were 318 for 1987.

Freisen defines a job as any service performed for a homeowner, such as plumbing, electrical work, painting or replacing a washer in a sink.

Tuition increase approved unanimously by regents

By Judy Lundstrom
Staff Writer

For the seventh consecutive year, tuition increases have been implemented at all Kansas regents institutions.

Board of Regents members unanimously approved the increases at their May 19 meeting in Topeka. At K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University, the increases will be 5 percent for resident undergraduates, 9 percent for resident graduate students, 12 percent for non-resident undergraduates, and 13 percent for non-resident graduate students. The increases go into effect for the fall 1989 semester.

Translated into dollar figures, the semester fees will be $550 for resident undergraduates, $670 for resident graduate students, $1,765 for non-resident undergraduates and $1,885 for non-resident graduate students.

In addition to tuition fees, each institution charges special fees to students, such as recreation, revenue bonds and student services. At K-State for the spring 1988 semester, those fees totaled $130.65, making the total tuition cost for the spring 1988 semester $665.65.

A Special Committee on Tuition recommended to regents that similar increases be instituted for the 1990 fiscal year. The committee also recommended the initiation of a mandatory restricted-use fee to finance an Educational Opportunity Fund. The fee would be $6 per semester for full-time students.

Regents also approved salary increases ranging from 7.9 percent to 9.3 percent for the six university presidents. The salaries will be: Gene Budig, KU, $115,000; Jon Wefald, K-State, $106,000; Warren Armstrong, WSU, $97,000; Donald Wilson, Pittsburg State, $82,000; Robert Glennen, Emporia State, $80,000; and Edward Hammond, Fort Hays State, $75,500. Regents executive director Stanley Koplik received a 15.1 percent raise to $84,000.

Under the Margin of Excellence proposal, a plan designed in part to increase faculty salaries at the regents institutions to match those at peer universities by 1992, faculty members are expected to receive average salary increases of 7 percent.

Regents also discussed funding of the three-year Margin of Excellence proposal. Legislators recently approved funding of 83 percent of the proposal for the first year of the program, which is to begin this fall.

The funding will provide "seed money" for several K-State programs and help increase salaries to help retain faculty, according to Provost James Coffman.

"Already the impact of the Margin of Excellence is being seen in increased faculty morale," Coffman said May 26. "Through salary increases we are going to be able to stem — but not turn — the tide of our top faculty leaving the University."

Coffman said before the Margin of Excellence was proposed, the University was virtually defenseless when faculty members were offered higher salaries to teach elsewhere.

School status, additional funding aid journalism program's future

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

The journalism and mass communications program has a new name. On May 19, the Board of Regents approved a change in status from a department to a school, said Carol Oukrop, director of what is now the School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

The name change is one part of a two-fold process aimed at regaining the program's accreditation, which was lost during the spring of 1987, Oukrop said. Establishing a $2 million endowment fund is the second half of the process.

Currently the KSU Foundation is working closely with a development committee from the school on a five-year program to locate donors for the fund, said Gary Hellebust, director of corporate relations for the Foundation.

"The Foundation is going hand in glove with the committee to work for re-accreditation," Hellebust said. "The Foundation, with its expertise in revenue raising, is the catalyst between the committee and the potential donors."

A major gift is being negotiated, Oukrop said, but the donor's name and gift amount will not be released until the fall.

"The donor wishes to be very low-key at this time. (However), it is very positive that we were able to locate a major donor so early in the process," Hellebust said.

A portion of the fund money has been received, Oukrop said. It is earmarked for changes necessary for re-accreditation.

The two areas outlined for immediate improvement involved the purchase and renovation of equipment. A computer lab will be established and the radio/television equipment must be updated, she said.

Other areas will also benefit from the fund as more donors are found. Emphasis will be placed on conducting more professional service activities such as the annual Journalism Day and the International News Symposium held February 26-27, 1988, Oukrop said.

Money will also be available for the first time to conduct more aggressive recruiting of new professors and attending meetings and conferences.

"How can you promote yourself when you don't even have any money to handle your classes?" Oukrop said. "I paid for my classes' hand-outs from my own pocket."

According to budget reports, the then-department operated with a general expense of $22,000 for 1986-87, the same year accreditation was lost. During that same year, the department budget suffered a 15 percent cut.

During the 1987-88 year the expense account was raised 50 percent, or $33,000. The scheduled 1988-89 budget for the school is $40,000, Oukrop said.

Government AIDS booklet causes stir

By Judy Lundstrom
Staff Writer

Understanding AIDS.

The words stand out in bold, blue print on an eight-page AIDS education booklet that is causing a stir across the country.

From May 5 to June 30, the federal government is sending the pamphlet to every household in America, marking the first time in history that the government has attempted to contact every resident directly by mail regarding a public health issue.

The booklet was prepared by the surgeon general and the Centers for Disease Control, a government agency responsible for the prevention and control of diseases in the United States. Expected to reach about 107 households, the booklet frankly explains the disease and how it can and cannot be transmitted.

Phone calls increase

And Americans are reading it.

"Our phone calls have definitely picked up," said Bruce Ward, director of the National AIDS Hotline in New York. "We're getting a lot of positive calls."

The hotline, operated by the American Social Health Association and funded by the Centers for Disease Control, handles about 70,000 calls each month.

"I'll be interested to see how much that number increases because of the pamphlet," Ward said.

He said most of the calls to the hotline have been favorable, and some have been for clarification of certain points in the pamphlet.

"When you write something for 114 million people ... it's difficult to reach everyone in the same way," he said.

Ward termed the pamphlet "an invaluable service to Americans."

"Some may think they've heard it all before, and some may think it's insulting to their intelligence," he said. "But we had to come up with something to reach as many as possible. I think this has done it."

One reaction Ward said he was hearing from hotline operators was that callers' questions were becoming more complex than before.

"So they're using the pamphlet as an outline and calling us for further information on the outline," he said.

Another New York hotline official had mixed reactions to the pamphlet.

"We're getting about a 12 percent increase in calls regarding the pamphlet," said Kenneth Goldsmith, coordinator of the AIDS hotline in New York. "We've had a fair cross-section of questions."

Manned by volunteers at St. Clare's Hospital and Health Center, the AIDS hotline is the third-largest in New York, Goldsmith said.

Disturbing points

He said while he thought the pamphlet was "very well done," some parts were disturbing to him.

One, he said, was that on page 5, the pamphlet talks about an AIDS test.

"There isn't a test for AIDS — only for AIDS antibodies," he said.

Another item Goldsmith said he didn't care for was that the pamphlet was too difficult for some readers to understand.

"It's geared too high," he said. "It's supposed to be for a fourth-grade level."

A third complaint, he said, is the section on "risky behavior."

"I don't think it was laid out very well," he said.

Goldsmith was referring to the fact that several items constituting "risky behavior" were listed, but that the paragraph explaining that "the following behaviors are risky when performed with an infected person" is located at the bottom of the page and may not be seen by some readers.

Overall, however, Goldsmith said the pamphlet was "terrific."

"I don't find it alarmist at all," he said. "It shows the government is taking a part in education.

"And, it shows that not just homosexuals can get AIDS."

Kansans respond

Kansans seem to be responding well to the pamphlet.

"The response has been favorable," said Dr. William Wade, of the Kansas AIDS Network. The hotline has been receiving about 20 calls a day since the pamphlet came out, he said.

"A lot of people have had their memories jarred whose behavior several years ago may have put them at a risk," said Wade, who was part of a 400-member evaluating team for the pamphlet.

Also, he said, parents have called to ask for advice on how to talk to their children about AIDS.

So far, Wade said, only two callers have objected to the pamphlet for "addressing specific sexual activities without addressing moral codes."

Wade said while he thought the pamphlet was a good idea, he did have some complaints.

"I think it's a good first step, but it's oversimplified," he said.

He also criticized the federal government for being too slow in disseminating the information.

Bomb threat forces jet to land

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A TWA jet bound for Honolulu made an unscheduled five-hour landing at Kansas City International Airport Sunday after a note was found on the plane saying a bomb was on board, an FBI spokesman said.

"No bomb was found, not even anything resembling one," said FBI spokesman Max Geiman. "And, there were certainly no arrests or detentions or anything even bordering on that."

TWA Flight 1 left KCI at 7:43 p.m., about six hours after a handwritten note saying a bomb was on the plane was found in one of the plane's lavatories, Geiman said. He said the FBI would continue to investigate the threat.

The plane, carrying 419 passengers, was en route from St. Louis to Honolulu when the note was found, said Bob Raynesford, spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration.

"I don't know who found the note," he said. "But, it was obviously what we call a bomb threat."

Raynesford said the FAA air traffic control facility in Kansas City received a call at 1:58 p.m. from the Boeing 747, reporting that it was 30 miles north of Salina, Kan., and that the pilot wanted to divert the plane to KCI.

Boy dies while waiting for liver

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Albert Brown, the 1-year-old Kansas City, Kan., boy who waited five weeks for a liver transplant, died Sunday night at the University of Nebraska Medical Center in Omaha, a hospital spokesman said.

Albert had been at the hospital since May 21 as officials and doctors searched for a suitable liver.

Tom O'Connor, a spokesman for the hospital, said Albert, son of Walter Brown and Patricia Rush, died at 9:35 p.m.

He said an autopsy would be performed to determine the exact cause of death, but that it was likely he died of "a combination of problems, all tied to his liver," including renal failure and heart and lung problems.

Five weeks ago, doctors at the University of Kansas Medical Center said Albert had only a couple of weeks to live if he did not get a new liver.

That was when his parents made a public appeal for $105,000 for a liver transplant operation because such transplants were not covered by Kansas Medicaid.

On May 20, it was reported that $120,000 had been raised for the operation. By May 25, the figure rose to $200,000.

Kansas Gov. Mike Hayden later announced that the state's Medicaid program would pay for the transplant because of a change in administrative rules.

Another Kansas boy, 6-year-old Zachery Jones of Ogden, is in need of a liver transplant. He has three to six months to live without the transplant.

Bull to roam china shop

PALMERTSON NORTH, New Zealand — Shop owner Grant Burnett plans to let a bull loose in his china shop this month — literally.

Spurred by constant bull-in-a-china-shop jokes cracked by customers, Burnett said he will release a giant Hereford bull in his shop on June 16 as a stunt.

If the bull goes berserk, Burnett risks losing up to $60,000 worth of china.

Burnett said the bull would not be drugged. It will be led into the store by its owner, local farmer Bill Bly.

An insurance company has agreed to cover the cost of broken china for an undisclosed premium, Burnett said.

Kitty Dukakis recovering well

BOSTON — Kitty Dukakis, wife of Democratic presidential front-runner Michael Dukakis, is continuing her recovery from spinal surgery last week, her doctors said Sunday.

Kitty Dukakis, 51, is "doing splendidly on all fronts," said Dr. Nicholas T. Zervas, chief of neurology at the hospital. "She's in splendid spirits."

Kitty Dukakis had surgery Friday to remove two herniated discs in her neck that were pressing dangerously on her spinal cord.

Dukakis visited his wife at Massachusetts General Hospital on Sunday, and the two strolled in the hospital corridor, hospital spokesman Martin Bander said.

After the visit, Dukakis returned to campaigning. He had stops in New Jersey and then was flying to California. The two states hold the final races of the Democratic primary season on Tuesday.

The Massachusetts governor told reporters Sunday that his wife was experiencing some pain in her hip, where doctors removed bone for grafting, and was walking with the support of a walker.

Doctors have said Kitty Dukakis probably would be hospitalized for up to two weeks.

Jackson's half-brother arrested

GREENVILLE, S.C. — Jesse Jackson's half-brother, Noah Robinson, has been charged with hiring someone to attack a witness to the execution-style slaying of Robinson's former employee, police said Sunday.

Robinson, 45, was arrested late Saturday night and charged with being an accessory to a felony, Greenville Police Detective Keith Morton said Sunday.

"We think he was responsible for the solicitation of the act and took part in the arranging," said Morton.

The original bond of $100,000 was raised to $500,000 Sunday when charges of obstruction of justice, intimidating a witness and criminal conspiracy were added against Robinson, Greenville Police Capt. W.L. Johnson said.

Robinson is suspected of hiring the person who in December 1987 slashed and stabbed a woman witness to the murder of a man who had worked for Robinson, Morton said.

Robinson, a small businessman in Greenville who also has worked in Chicago, has the same father as Jackson, a Democratic candidate for president.

Jackson, campaigning in California Sunday said: "I don't know anything about it."

Wolves may return to park

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK — An environmental leader and a Western politician have taken up the cause of the wolf, calling for its return to the wilds of the nation's first national park.

They added their voices Saturday to that of the head of the National Park Service, who said that the howl of the wolf is "the call, the music, of the West."

Lined up in opposition are the majority of cattlemen and sheepmen in the West backed by Wyoming's two U.S. senators and one representative.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Greater Yellowstone Coalition, Rep. Wayne Owens, D-Utah, and M. Rupert Cutler, president of the Defenders of Wildlife, urged national support for restoration of the wolf to Yellowstone National Park.

Vet med professor dies at 45

Thomas Avery Jr., professor of veterinary medicine, died at his home May 17. Avery, 45, was chosen as the University's honorary parent during the 1987 Parents' Day activities. He served as food animal surgeon at the College of Veterinary Medicine and received his bachelors, masters, PhD and veterinary degress from K-State.

Former professor dies at 90

Anna Tessie Agan, former professor of family economics for nearly 40 years, died May 11 in Houston. She was 90 years old. A pioneer in the field of housing and design, she received her bachelor's degree in home economics from the University of Nebraska in 1927. After earning her master's degree from K-State in 1930, she joined the faculty and taught until her retirement in 1968. She was honored by K-State in 1986 with an honorary doctorate.

Adviser of the year named

The University Activities Board named Charles Bissey, professor of architectural engineering and construction science, as the 1988 adviser of the year for his work with student activities. He advises the student chapter of the National Society for Architectural Engineers (NSAE) and the architectural engineering honor society Phi Alpha Epsilon. With his help, the organizations were established at K-State in 1974 and 1981 respectively.

College receives $20,000 grant

The College of Architecture and Design has received a $20,000 grant of computer assisted design software by the American Institute of Architecture Students. It is the institute's highest grant award of 10 DataCAD program packages.

Rain may come too late for '88 crops

Water usage for dry May sets record, official says

By Deron Johnson
Staff Writer

Although recent rains have eased the situation, the stingy amount of moisture that has fallen on the Midwest this spring has produced precious little except ailing crops and concerned officials.

And some say that any rain now may be too late.

"As far as really pumping up (crop) yields, I'm not hearing that (future rains) will be any help," said Ric Dunkle, director of the U.S. Grain Marketing Research Laboratory in Manhattan. The lab is part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Moreover, said Dunkle: "I've been told some farmers have already plowed their crops under."

The cause of the dry conditions is a high pressure system situated to the west that has prevented the flow of low-level moisture from the Gulf of Mexico, said Rich McNulty, deputy meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Topeka. As a result, the formation of thunderstorms — and, therefore, rainfall — has been greatly restricted.

Although the amount of moisture for Manhattan and northeast Kansas during April and May was about 75 percent of normal, McNulty said May was exceptionally dry. Manhattan recorded 2.5 inches of rainfall last month compared with 4.5 inches normally.

Keeping lawns green

That lack of rainfall translated into record-setting water demand in Manhattan, said Alan R. Shineman, superintendent of the Manhattan Water Treatment Plant. Last month, the plant pumped 234 million gallons of water, compared with 162 million gallons in May 1987.

"It was the largest usage we'd ever had in May," Shineman said, adding the peak day was May 19 when 11.5 million gallons were pumped. At six million gallons a day currently, the usage is back to normal thanks to recent rains, Shineman said.

Although the usage was excessive, city officials were never considering telling residents to conserve since the plant can pump up to 15 million gallons per day.

"We weren't to the stage where we'd ask people to conserve," he said.

Since the city receives its water from 16 wells located east of Manhattan along the Big Blue River, it's not as vulnerable to water shortages as cities that receive their water from lakes or rivers. However, the water table is affected by surface water shortages, Shineman said.

"Our underground water table goes down as we pump more and as the river goes down," he said. "If Topeka goes down (because of a lower Big Blue), we can be cut back."

Shineman said increased usage is largely attributable to increased outside watering.

"Usage," he said, "always depends on rainfall."

That's something Tom Lee knows well. Lee, K-State's superintendent of grounds, said workers have been busy trying to maintain campus lawns and plants.

"We've been spending about twice as much time as we usually do (watering)," Lee said. "We'll have places, despite all we can do, where the grass will go dormant."

That's partially because irrigation watering isn't as beneficial as rain, Lee said.

"It's going to be real difficult (to maintain the grounds), because all the watering you do isn't the same as natural precipitation," he said.

'Some real problems'

Although Lee's problems are real, most concerns are focusing on the crops and how much they will suffer.

Steven Graham, administrator with the Kansas Wheat Commission, said the northwest corner of the state and the southern portion roughly south of Hutchinson have received ample rainfall.

"In between, you have some real problems," he said.

One of the primary moisture-related worries is a disease called Wheat Streak Mosaic Virus. The virus is transmitted by a mite whose populations are higher than normal because of rainfall shortage.

The rust-like virus causes deficient wheat root systems, therefore further restricting the amount of moisture the plant receives. As a result, crops are suffering.

"You're getting to a point now where once a plant starts to die, (rain) won't help," said the USDA's Dunkle.

However, recent rains have improved the picture slightly in western Kansas, said Eldon Thiessen, deputy state statistician with Kansas Ag Statistics in Topeka.

"The condition of the wheat crop improved a little from the rain in the western section," Thiessen said. However, he added, "some of the areas won't respond to rain."

The western third of the state is in the worst shape, he said. However, for the week ending May 29, statistics reveal that the state overall is dry. Thirty-five percent of the state's topsoil is short on moisture, and 44 percent of the subsoil is too dry, Thiessen said.

His office is scheduled to release a revised bushel projection estimate Thursday, but Thiessen said state law prevented him from speculating what it would predict. However, Graham said yields — at least for wheat — will be down significantly.

Earlier in the spring, Graham said, predictions called for a wheat harvest of between 330 million and 357 million bushels in the state. However, the running estimate currently is 300 million or fewer.

A 'loony-tunes' period

Such predictions are fueling speculation on grain commodities and forcing prices higher. And, according to a K-State agricultural economist, weather-related speculation at this point is inappropriate.

"I would call this the 'loony-tunes' period of a drought rally," said William Tierney, Extension agricultural economist specializing in grain marketing. He calls it "loony-tunes" because prices are hinging on currently unknown factors and recent upswings in commodities are based on factors that may never materialize.

"First, we don't even know how bad the drought really is," he said. In fact, the National Weather Service's McNulty said the agency has never set any criteria for determining if a drought condition exists because so many different variables exist.

In addition, Tierney said damage to spring crops is limited at this point.

"It's extremely premature for people to say prices should be up because of a moisture shortage," he said.

Furthermore, he said crop carryovers will amply suffice if yields are down. For example, he said 53 percent of the nation's annual usage of corn is currently stockpiled, and even if 10 percent to 15 percent of this year's corn crop is lost, it won't make a big difference.

The primary factor in determining the U.S. grain supply isn't the weather, but rather how much grain the United States exports, Tierney said.

"What is important is 'What are our export prospects?'" he said. "And they're not very good."

As an example, Tierney cited the larger wheat crop expected in the Soviet Union this year. As a result, the U.S. export of wheat could fall by 200 million to 400 million bushels, he said.

He said it's typical for markets to overreact to any potential bad news — including poor yields related to weather.

"This is kind of a Chicken Little thing," he said. "The sky is falling. The sky is falling.

"Sell sky."

Tierney said he expects the market to correct itself eventually.

The state's 30-day forecast calls for near normal temperatures and near normal or slightly above precipitation, McNulty said.

AIDS brochure dispels myths about disease

"Understanding AIDS," a brochure prepared by the surgeon general and the Centers for Disease Contol, is being mailed to all of the households in America.

Simply written, it provides readers with basic facts about the causes of acquired immune deficiency syndrome. It pulls no punches and explains to Americans the types of sexual behavior associated with the spread of AIDS as well as the risks involved in using intravenous drugs.

It explains that individuals, regardless of gender or sexual preference, are at risk of contracting the disease if they engage in the types of "risky behavior" described in the brochure, such as engaging in sex without a condom with a person whose sexual history you do not know or sharing needles and syringes while using intravenous drugs.

More importantly, it dispels the myths that still circulate about the methods through which the disease is spread. AIDS, it explains, cannot be transmitted through mosquito bites, using the same plate as a person with AIDS or a kiss.

It encourages parents to discuss the disease, and sex, with their children even though it might make the parents uncomfortable.

The brochure encourages readers to become volunteers to help people with AIDS.

It goes a long way in providing Americans with the only defense against the disease available to them today: information.

Some could argue that it is too late to help the 2 million Americans who may have already been exposed to the AIDS virus. But, in the absence of a cure or vaccine, the knowledge the brochure provides is the best thing there is.

Pay increases ignore problems in salaries

The Board of Regents recently approved salary increases ranging from 7.9 percent to 9.3 percent for the presidents at the six regents universities.

President Jon Wefald was one approved to receive a 9.3 percent increase, raising his salary to $106,000. In addition, Stanley Koplik, regents executive director, was granted a 15.1 percent increase, making his salary $84,000.

At the same time, regents discussed the three-year Margin of Excellence plan designed to increase the average faculty salaries to the level of salaries at peer institutions. Under the proposal, faculty members are expected to receive average salary increases of 7 percent. To date, 83 percent of the funding for the first year's program has been approved.

The presidents' salary increases are probably merited. Wefald deserves credit for achieving at least one of the major goals he set out to accomplish — increasing enrollment at K-State.

Yet relative to the 7 percent average salary increases for faculty at the institutions, someone seems to have their priorities confused.

According to Provost James Coffman, the faculty salary increases will serve only to "stem — but not turn — the tide" of the emigration of faculty from K-State. Coffman noted realistically that although faculty salaries are heading in the right direction, they still have a long way to go.

In such a context, the large salary increases for the administrators hardly seem fair. Though administrators deserve an increase in salary, increases ranging from 7.9 to 15.1 percent mean a lot more money for a person making $80,000 to $100,000 than a 7 percent increase means to one who makes only $25,000, if even that. Someone should, if not reconsider the percentages, at least move to correct the disparity.

No obscenities

Editor,

I feel compelled to respond to the article in the April 29 Collegian and the degeneration of the Collegian in publishing an obscene word.

To begin with, I strongly agree with the K-State Union management's decision to ban the referenced poster from a Union bulletin board. I'm glad that someone at this University had the moral backbone and decency to stand up to this foul-mouthed female and draw the line at the use of this obscene word.

Moreover, it seems odd to me that a college student, a graduate student in speech no less, has to stoop down into the cesspool vocabulary in order to express herself. Maybe my long held belief was in error, but I thought that people who elevated themselves to the level of a college graduate should be able to adequately express themselves without having to resort to the use of four-letter words and profanity to convey their message. It is a sad commentary, in my opinion, when University students or faculty members condone or encourage that kind of language as proper for public expression.

Bad year remembered

Assassinations of 1968 recalled

Editor's Note: Today marks the 20th anniversary of the death of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, who died June 6, 1968. He had been shot in the head on June 5.

Commentary

ERWIN SEBA
Guest Columnist

In 1968, I was seven years old. It was an important year in my life.

1968 is the first year I remember. I remember other events that occurred before that year but I can't tell you, from memory, in what year they happened.

It's different with 1968. From memory, I can tell what happened in April and June of that year.

In early April, dark gray clouds filled the sky and the streets were wet. Me and some other kids, who were older, were outside playing. We weren't supposed to. There was a curfew and no one was supposed to be on the streets after 6 p.m. because of the riots.

The Negroes in Kansas City were rioting. A man, a Negro and a doctor, Dr. Martin Luther King, had been killed and the Negroes were rioting. It was like they had been hurt. I saw pictures of them crying. And they were mad because they had been hurt.

My dad said we lived four miles from downtown Kansas City, where the riots were. That's why we were in the curfew.

The other kids thought it was neat. I didn't. The riots might come here, so I didn't stay out long.

From TV I learned that Dr. King was a good man who wanted his people to have civil rights. White people had civil rights, but Negroes didn't. Dr. King wanted them to have them. He marched to Selma so they could vote. He never hurt anybody in his work; he was non-violent.

He'd been in Memphis, which was in the South, to help some people get civil rights, when he was standing on a hotel balcony and somebody shot him with a rifle.

On TV they said the FBI was looking for a white man. His name was James Earl Ray. He was a white man from the South who didn't like Negroes and didn't want them to have civil rights. James Earl Ray didn't like Dr. King because Dr. King wanted Negroes to have civil rights. So he shot Dr. King and killed him. He was a bad man.

They said he had assassinated him. Assassinated meant somebody good had been shot, like Abraham Lincoln and President Kennedy.

The riots went away.

June was like April, rainy, but not as cold and dark, and the clouds were white with gray bottoms, not all gray.

It just broke. One day it wasn't that way, the next day it was. Sen. Robert F. Kennedy had been shot. He was in the hospital. He might not live. He'd been shot in the head. Most people die when they are shot in the head.

From the way the men talked on TV, I knew Robert Kennedy was a good man. He was trying to be president, like his brother had been. He wanted Negroes to have civil rights and wanted poor people to not be poor. He wanted to help people. People liked him. He had won in California.

Like his brother, he had been shot in the head. His brother had been assassinated by a man with a rifle. President Kennedy had been riding in a car when he was shot. His wife had been with him when he was shot.

Ethel Kennedy had been with Bobby when he was shot. They said Bobby might live, could even be president, but he might have problems, like sudden pain or he might stop talking all of a sudden.

Then they said he was dead. He had been assassinated. The man who shot Bobby didn't like him because he supported Israel. His name was Sirhan Sirhan. He was a crazy, bad man. Who else would shoot a good man?

Now all the Kennedy brothers were dead except one. President Kennedy and Bobby had been assassinated, Joe Jr. had died in the war. The Kennedys were good people, doing good things, who were killed by bad people, who didn't like them.

The president came on TV. He was a good old man, who was losing his hair and wore glasses. He talked in a slow voice with a drawl. He was from Texas in the South. He talked about how the Kennedys had suffered. He said that America had suffered because Martin Luther King and Bobby Kennedy had been assassinated in two month's time.

They played that song a lot at the funeral — the song that said my eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord and that Bobby's truth is marching on.

In 1968, I was seven years old. It was all very sad.

Family doesn't like junk

Commentary

AUDRA DIETZ
Collegian Columnist

I ran screaming from my last final feeling like a Roto-Rooter had drilled through my brain. The school year was over and it was time to go home for some relaxation. The months of waiting to move my belongings back to the farm were over. At last — clean air, plenty of space and (best of all) my own room.

There was to be no more worrying about staying in my own space, tripping over someone else's smelly Reeboks or getting my underwear mixed up in another's laundry. Communal living was taking its toll on my sanity.

After the $50 speeding ticket in Salina, I was on the verge of a nervous breakdown. I was threatened with another $10 violation for not havihg a "Wide Load" flag on my tailgate. Like the highway patrolman can expect me to rent a Mayflower. That officer should have had one of those signs strapped to his belt. I had a feeling some of the court costs were paying for his lunch.

Relieved at the sight of the homestead, I pulled into the driveway, unprepared for what I was about to face. In reality, that Roto-Rooter had been through my old room, eliminating any space for me or my junk. Relaxation would remain a fantasy.

Mother stood at the back door with a pitch fork and a megaphone.

"All right! Don't even think about unloading that into my clean house. Back it straight into the barn," she shouted.

A kerosene lantern and a pup tent were sitting next to the hay bales.

"My brothers must be practicing for Boy Scouts," I thought to myself. But somehow I knew that tent was for me. My brothers aren't in Boy Scouts.

I ran into the house hugging and kissing every member of my family and the dog. I gave my mother some purple carnations and both my brothers K-State T-shirts.

"Nice try, Audra. But it won't work. You're not moving that into this house," she said.

Thinking that I at least didn't have to share the tent with anyone, I settled in for the night. Ha. I had new roommates: Rhode Island Reds. They used my open suitcase for a nesting box and left quite a mess by morning. I don't think Spray-N-Wash works on fowl droppings.

I was allowed to sleep in my room the next night. I have blue carpet in my room. I guess it has always been there, I was just never able to see it.

My dresser drawers were now filled with Fruit of the Loom briefs and Toughskins. Coloring books, Magic Rocks and an ant farm replaced my Barbie Doll collection. I crawled into bed on GI Joe sheets feeling ill.

Around 2 a.m., I decided to get a glass of milk. Crossing my room, I tripped over "Thun-dor," crashed into "Castle Gray-Skull," and knocked over some lamp I'd never seen — or felt — before. So much for relaxation.

"Audra? ... Is that you?" Mother yelled from her room.

"No!" I answered. Why doesn't K-State offer a course in toy navigation or sibling psychology?

Draperies now hung in my closet, not my formals. File boxes, sewing kits, tools, old dishes, camping equipment and toys lined the shelves.

Then I saw what every college student fears, the dreaded sign of having been moved out for good: Christmas decorations. My closet was being used for that most degrading of storage duties. I knew I didn't have to decide whether to stay home for the summer. It was decided for me.

Holiday decor in a college student's old room is the ultimate blow. If your family really wants you to move out, then out comes the mistletoe.

Colored lights hung on my hooks. Holly and the eight tiny reindeer sat on my shelves. The ceramic nativity set replaced my rock collection, and that damned plastic tree was under my bed.

I was allowed use of laundry facilities and the latrine until Memorial Day, in exchange for my labor, of course.

Maybe I should seek revenge. I could put empty beer cans in the china cupboard. How about stripping the pantry and replacing all the food with pizza boxes and Ramen Noodles? I could even take all the cheese packets out of the macaroni.

I really felt put out when I was told I couldn't sleep in my waterbed because my brother had a test in the morning and needed a good night's sleep. I hardly think a 10th grade English exam compares to the horror of a college final.

Maybe they were just afraid to tell me it was time to go. Or are they just bigger slobs than I am? I doubt it. I'm going "home" for the Fourth of July. So stay tuned for another edition of "All My Belongings," the continuing saga of a displaced college student in hopeless search for a home and place to store her junk.

Two students die during finals week

By The Collegian Staff

A one-car accident and an apparent suicide took the lives of two students during finals week before the semester break.

Killed were Juliann Anderson, 18, of Junction City, freshman in business administration, and Scott Eric Smiley, 24, of Wichita, senior in electrical engineering.

Anderson died May 6 from injuries suffered when she failed to negotiate a curve on Humboldt Creek Road about 11 miles south of Interstate 70 in southeastern Geary County, police said. The car, a 1975 Toyota Corolla, veered back onto the road, then flipped several times, according to Geary County police.

Police said Anderson was not wearing a seat belt and was thrown from the vehicle. Her 23-month-old son, who was secured in the front seat of the car, was treated at Geary County Hospital and released, police said.

Funeral services were May 10 in Junction City.

Smiley's body was found inside his car May 7 by Riley County Police near Pillsbury Crossing Wildlife Area about 10 miles southeast of Manhattan off Highway 177. A hose ran from the exhaust pipe of the car into the vehicle, police said.

The car's engine had been left running for several hours, police said.

According to Dr. Robert Cathey, Riley County coroner, Smiley apparently died of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Funeral services were May 10 in Wichita.

Soviets take part in freedom march

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — About 80 Soviets shouted "Freedom, freedom!" and carried banners through downtown Moscow on Sunday in an unprecedented march to demand the release of political prisoners.

About 50 police officers in light blue tunics courteously stopped the protesters from advancing to Red Square but allowed them to gather across from the Moscow Soviet, the white-columned headquarters of city government.

The afternoon march along Gorky Street, a major thoroughfare that leads to the Kremlin, was the first in the Soviet capital in memory. Participants credited Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign of "glasnost," or openness on selected topics.

"This protest shows how our political freedoms are widening. Today we are making history," declared Yuri S. Skubko, a member of the Democratic Union, a fledgling opposition group.

Sweating in the sun, the demonstrators gathered near a statue of Yuri Dolgoruky, the Russian prince who founded Moscow, and shouted in unison: "Freedom, freedom for political prisoners!"

The protest sparked reactions ranging from anger to bewilderment from Soviets who enjoyed temperatures in the 80s and strolled down Gorky Street.

Money troubles subject of booklet

By The Collegian Staff

Attending classes and studying are not all that college students have to worry about. Managing money is sometimes the biggest problem many students may have to face.

Several people at K-State have recognized how significant careful money management is to students and have done something about it.

Joyce Cantrell, instructor in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies, compiled the booklet "Scholars and Dollars: Economic Survival Strategies for Students." Tracy Campbell, senior in family economics and politics during the spring semester, helped Cantrell with the project. The purpose of the booklet is to help students manage their money effectively while at college.

The booklet includes information on where a student's money is spent during the year, where to obtain financial aid, which questions to ask when establishing a checking account, and how to obtain and use credit, as well as helpful "dollar stretcher" hints.

According to Cantrell, the idea for the booklet originated because of the realization of the "general interest" of the subject to everyone.

"I teach a personal and family finance class where the students are required to develop a budget and track the spending," she said.

According to Cantrell, she and Campbell worked on the booklet during December and January. It was first made available this spring during Open House, where more than 1,000 copies were distributed. The booklet will also be made available to students today during summer registration.

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE AT LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

1. Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.
2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.
3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.)
4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)
5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.
6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.
7. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.
8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Arts in the Park largest ever

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

Many college students write off Manhattan summers as being flat and dry, not unlike the Kansas landscape. Although this geographic region is lacking in the area of oceans and mountains, this Manhattan summer promises to be filled with a multitude of entertainment and art, compliments of the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department and Arts in the Park 1988.

This summer a walk in City Park might be transformed into an evening of music, movies or theater. Arts in the Park coordinator Don Cukjati promises the 1988 season will be packed with fun for all ages and tastes.

"This season will be the biggest and the best Arts in the Park has ever put together," Cukjati said. "We made a conscious effort to provide the city with a wider variety of entertainment than ever before."

Glancing down the summer schedule, it appears as though the 1988 season does have something for everyone, including performances by many local talents.

Every Tuesday evening City Park will host Manhattan's own municipal band for a twilight concert. Wednesdays are geared toward the community's younger citizens. Midweek evenings are set aside for performances by the Manhattan Puppet Theatre, followed by a full length feature film. All movies start at dusk.

Thursday, Friday, and Saturday are big nights for the summer arts series. The park stage will play host to local and nationally-known musical artists.

"Our big show this year has to be Bill Haley's Comets (July 22), but we will have great music in the park every weekend of the summer," Cukjati said.

The 1988 season officially opened June 3, with a rock'n'roll show by Buddy Holly's Crickets. On June 4 the park stage featured The Tommy Lee Band, playing songs from the "big band" era.

Last weekend's shows are representative of the diversity in the Arts in the Park's summer lineup. Other summer highlights include The Dallas Brass, June 9; The Clique, July 2; Mark Selby and the Sluggers, July 8; and the Dixie Jazz Patrol, July 21. All performances will begin at 8 p.m. and will be moved into the City Auditorium in the event of bad weather.

Cukjati said he is most excited about the local artists who will be performing for the community this summer. Along with the Tuesday night Municipal Band concerts, many other local bands will contribute to the summer program.

"The best part about the summer schedule has to be all of the local talent we have scheduled to play," he said. "Bands like Mainstreet, The Smokey Hill River Band, and, of course, the Jazz Orchestra, have their roots in North Central Kansas."

Another showcase for homegrown talent is the annual Children's Theatre production. This year the theatre will be performing "Narnia" July 15, 16 and 17. "Narnia" is a musical based on the classic C.S. Lewis novel "The Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe."

"This year's Children's Theatre Production should be great," Cukjati said. "Right now about 130 kids from the community are involved in the show. Fortunately we were able to get Dianne Howard from the (Manhattan) middle school drama department to direct the production."

On June 25th, Arts in the Park will be teaming up with Hanson Music Company to present the second annual Flinthills Bluegrass Day. The day's activities will start at 10 a.m. and run into the late evening. Flinthills Bluegrass Day will feature a square dance

Every concert, movie and show is free of charge compliments of the Parks and Recreation Department.

'Willow' looks like another Lucas hit

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

"Willow," now showing at Westloop 6.

Summertime is movie time. There is something about this season that makes everyone movie crazy. At least once or twice a week we find ourselves sitting in front of the big screen, beside someone we hold dear to our heart, sharing a small cola full of ice which carried a $12.50 price tag.

Movie Review

A movie released in the summer is almost sure to be a box office hit even if it is a truly awful film. This summer movie season is sure to have it's share of dogs, but there is at least one good show currently playing in Manhattan: the long awaited and critically acclaimed fantasy/adventure movie "Willow."

It is no big suprise that "Willow" is a great film. This movie is the product of George Lucas' creativity, Ron Howard's solid direction, and a fairy tale story that we might have heard before, but will love to hear again and again.

Every fairy tale needs a hero, and the hero of this story is truly special. Willow is the name of a young man who happens upon a child floating down a stream in a reed basket. Of course, a hero can't just let a baby float by, so Willow and his family take the child in.

As might be suspected, this is no ordinary baby. This is the child spoken of in the prophecy, ordained to end the reign of evil Queen Bavmorda, played by Jean Marsh.

Willow is dubbed as caretaker of the child and told by the village wizard to carry the baby back to the land of the "big people." At this point in the story, one of Willow's special characteristics becomes very important. He is very small, only about 3 feet in height. Despite Willow's small frame, actor Warrick Davis fills the screen with energy, action and adventure.

Although this may be the first time we have seen Davis' "face" on the screen, "Star Wars" trivia buffs might remember Warrick from "Return of the Jedi," where he played the part of Wicket the Ewok.

To finish the summary of the story, Willow heads out on his journey and has great adventures. He encounters fairies, brownies, trolls, sorcerers and eventually the evil queen.

Even though the movie is named after Willow, there are plenty of other interesting characters who make this fairy tale so enjoyable. Val Kilmer plays the part of Madmartigan, a Han Solo-type who accompanies Willow on his journey. Together Madmartigan and Willow make a team with the perfect combination of strength and spirit.

A Sorceress named Razel, played by Patrica Hayes, also lends Willow and company a magical helping hand.

One of the keys to "Willow"'s appeal is the fantastic scenery and filming. Willow was shot in England, Wales, and New Zealand, lands which lend their beautiful landscape as appropriate settings for a fairy tale.

The only distraction from the adventure on the screen was an occasional feeling of deja vu. At times the story and characters in "Willow" seemed to parallel Lucas's work in the "Star Wars" trilogy. Fortunately for Lucas, "Willow" is able to create a mystic feeling over an audience almost as powerful as the "Star Wars" films'.

"Willow" is a movie that all ages can enjoy. There is some violence that might scare very young children, but this movie was truly made with the whole family in mind.

It would be a sin to give away the ending to this wonderful story, so I won't. But you have to promise me that one of these hot, balmy evenings you will let movie madness take you to the theater to see this wonderful film.

Hanks convincing as youth in 'Big'

By Tom Perrin
Summer Life/City Editor

"Big," now showing at the Westloop 6 theaters.

Walking around the carnival with his parents, 12-year-old Josh Baskin spies the pretty, blond-haired, 14-year-old girl of his dreams standing alone in line to ride the roller coaster.

So Josh does what any gutsy, redblooded, 12-year-old kid would do in this situation. He ditches mom and dad and cuts into line to make his move. Josh strikes up a quick conversation and everything seems to be going fine until the girl's boyfriend (who she mentions has a car) shows up.

Movie Review

Josh ends up leaving the ride with a major league dent in his ego after a park attendant declares him too small to get on board. Next thing you know, Josh is standing in front of a "Zoltar" machine, inserting a quarter and wishing he was "big."

The machine spits out a card saying Josh's wish is granted. And sure enough, the next morning, Josh (now played by Tom Hanks) hops out of his bunk bed to find himself all grown up and without a clue of how to handle the situation.

Such is the initial story line of "Big," an imaginative comedy in which Hanks plays a young boy placed inside the body of a 30-year-old.

Ridiculous as this whole thing might sound (and it is, sort of) "Big"

Harrison second at NCAA

By Tom Perrin
Summer Life/City Editor

K-State Olympic hopeful Kenny Harrison took second place in the long jump, but due to an injury, he pulled out of his specialty, the triple jump, in the NCAA Track and Field Championships this weekend.

Harrison was the highest finisher among a K-State contingent to the meet in Eugene, Ore., that also included Pat Allen and Jeff Reynolds for the men's team and women Kelly Abernathy, Felicia Curry and Kim Kilpatrick.

With a leap of 26-7¼ on only his second jump Friday, Harrison finished behind Eric Metcalf of Texas, the event winner at 27-2. Harrison sustained a minor hamstring pull on the second jump and elected to leave the competition at that point. All of the other competitors took the maximum of six jumps.

"I was really happy with that. He hasn't really been concentrating on the long jump," K-State coach John Capriotti said. "To go to an NCAA meet and finish second in the long jump after not really working on it is really impressive."

Capriotti said Harrison might have been able to compete in Saturday's triple jump, but that both agreed that with the Olympic trials coming up July 15-23 it wasn't worth the risk.

"We got up Saturday morning and Kenny felt pretty good, but we just didn't feel it was worth taking a chance," Capriotti said. "I feel very comfortable he would have won (the triple jump) if he had competed, but I also feel making the Olympic team is very important."

Harrison finishes his career as a 10-time all-American combining his NCAA indoor and outdoor meet finishes in the long jump and triple jump. Harrison was 1986 indoor long jump champion and won the outdoor triple jump in 1986 as well.

The top eight American finishers in the NCAA meet are considered all-Americans.

Reynolds, a senior, finished sixth in the 400 meters with a time of 46.06 to earn all-American status.

"Jeff kind of got a bad break drawing the outside lane," Capriotti said. "He was on the outside and couldn't see anybody."

Reynolds has been very close to making the qualifying time for the Olympic Trials and Capriotti said he expects Reynolds to make the mark at the Track Athletics Congress national meet June 17-19 at Tampa, Fla.

Sophomore Allen finished 16th in the javelin with a throw of 218 feet in his first NCAA meet.

Special to the Collegian/Andy Nelson

Kenny Harrison flies through the air in the long jump in Friday's NCAA Track and Field Championships in Eugene, Oregon. His mark of 26 feet, 7¼ inches was good enough for second place in the event.

Curry, a senior, was the top K-State women's finisher, taking fourth place in the triple jump at 42-8¼.

"It was a big breakthrough for Felicia. She was only rated eighth or ninth going in," Capriotti said. "She got a good jump early in the competition and it held up. I thought she would realistically finish seventh or eighth."

Junior Kilpatrick narrowly missed qualifying for the final in the 100 hurdles with her 10th-place time of 13.76. The top eight runners make the final. Discus thrower Kelly Abernathy, a junior, qualified for the final in her event, finishing 12th at 151-4.

Brett ends skid with 2 homers

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — George Brett found the perfect remedy Sunday for a 2-for-23 slump — two home runs with a borrowed bat.

"I started using (Kevin) Seitzer's bat today," said Brett, who also had a single as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Seattle Mariners 7-3.

"It was his batting practice bat," Brett added with a grin. "He wouldn't let me use his game bat."

After a hot start, Brett had cooled considerably and was hitless in hs previous 10 appearances.

"I know I was swinging at some bad balls all of a sudden. I think I corrected the problem today," he said. "I just tried to relax as much as possible. I was just trying to relax, see the ball and react to it."

The victory gave the Royals a four-game sweep of the Mariners despite Harold Reynolds' team-record hitting spree. The second baseman, batting ninth, was 3-for-3 and set a club record with eight consecutive hits. He broke Bruce Bochte's and Phil Bradley's record with a bloop single in the eighth.

"I got some good pitches to hit," Reynolds said. "About two weeks ago I had six in a row, so I knew I was going to be close."

Mark Gubicza, 7-5, allowed eight hits, struck out six and walked three in seven innings. Gene Garber finished up.

It was the second time this year and the 12th time in his career Brett homered twice in a game. His first homer scored Kurt Stillwell, who opened the game with a double. Then with two out in the third, Brett hit a pitch from Edwin Nunez, 1-3, about 440 feet into straightaway center for his 10th home run of the year.

Seattle got an unearned run in the second after right fielder Danny Tartabull dropped Mickey Brantley's fly ball for a two-base error. Brantley scored on groundouts by Scott Bradley and Jim Presley. Reynolds scored on a single by Alvin Davis in the fifth.

Seitzer doubled in the fourth, moved up on Pat Tabler's grounder and scored on Jim Eisenreich's sacrifice fly to make it 4-1.

In the sixth, Tabler and Eisenreich hit consecutive doubles for the Royals' fifth run, then Frank White tripled home Eisenreich and Jamie Quirk hit a sacrifice fly.

Rey Quinones had an RBI single in the eighth.

The win raised Kansas City's record to 27-28 and pulled the Royals to within 11 games of the first-place Oakland Athletics. Kansas City opens a three-game series with the A's tonight at Royals Stadium.

Wilander claims French Open title

By The Associated Press

PARIS — A barrage of near-perfect serves and pinpoint passing shots carried Mats Wilander to a 7-5, 6-2, 6-1 victory over Henri Leconte Sunday for his third men's championship at the French Open.

In becoming the first man since Bjorn Borg in 1980 to win the opening two legs of tennis' Grand Slam, Wilander relied on a steady baseline game and kept the Open's first French finalist in five years from attaining the serve-and-volley rhythm he had used in earlier rounds to get the fans behind him.

"He was really like a bulldozer," said Leconte, who blew a 5-4 lead on his serve in the first set and was booed by part of the crowd as he claimed the runner-up trophy.

Wilander's performance raised again the question of whether Wilander, ranked third, or top-ranked Ivan Lendl is the best player in the world.

Wilander hit on 97 percent of his first serves and didn't miss a single first serve in the third set. Whenever Leconte tried to come to the net, Wilander would find a way to blunt the attack, usually with a knifelike backhand cross-court shot at which the Frenchman could only blink.

"This was one of the most important matches in which I didn't make any unforced errors, and my backhand started working," said Wilander, a winner here in 1982 and '85, and a finalist two other times.

Shockers down Arizona State

OMAHA, Neb. — Mark Standiford knocked in three runs and Greg Brummett pitched a six-hitter to lead No. 4 Wichita State to a 7-4 win over No. 1 Arizona State in their winner's bracket game at the College World Series Sunday night.

The Sun Devils, 57-12, meet No. 5 Florida, a 6-5 winner Sunday over No. 8 California, in an elimination game Tuesday. Wichita State, 56-14-1, will meet the winner of that game Wednesday evening. A Shocker win Wednesday puts them in Saturday's nationally televised championship game.

Bietau named to committee

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau has been named to the Intercollegiate Tennis Central Regional Committee, committee chair Ann Valentine announced last week.

Valentine, who is tennis coach at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, said Bietau's appointment will be for a minimum of two years.

The committee is responsible for making recommendations to the national committee for participants in the annual NCAA Tennis Championships. Bietau will be part of a group that submits singles players, doubles teams and entire teams for consideration by the national committee.

Bietau, who has been coach at K-State for four years, was one of four coaches being considered for the appointment.

Crew team to begin practice

K-State crew will be having its first practice of the summer season at 6 tonight at the KSU Boathouse located on the east side of Tuttle Creek Reservoir. Anyone interested is invited to attend.

Varsity men's and women's teams as well as beginning men's and women's teams are being formed, according to crew coach Don Rose. An adult recreational team open to members of the college and the community is being formed for the first time.

Rose said the crew would enter either two or three regattas later in the summer. Assisting Rose for the summer will be Kurt Becker (adult recreational), William Buck (beginning women), Troy Kolb (beginning men) and Brent York (varsity men's and women's).

K-Staters earn national attention

Commentary

DAVID SVOBODA
Managing Editor

Time to wrap some things up and kick some things off now that yet another summer is upon us.

Since we left you, K-State baseball stars David Chadd, Jeff Hulse and Zach Kimbell have gained a degree of national prominence.

Chadd, K-State's power-hitting designated hitter during the spring 1988 campaign, was named second-team All-American in recognition of his efforts in leading the Wildcats to one of their most successful campaigns ever.

Chadd also is now a proud papa. His wife Janet gave birth to the couple's first child, a son, Drew, in Wichita last Thursday. He learned of his selection as one of the nation's best over the weekend. Now Chadd has only to wait and be nervous about the forthcoming announcement as to whether he was selected in the Major League Baseball draft held early last week.

Hulse and Kimbell are no longer waiting for their word. Both were selected by the Kansas City Royals. For Hulse, who was named second-team All-Big Eight at catcher, and Kimbell, who was one of the few bright spots on the Wildcat pitching staff, the news was welcome.

Speaking of welcome news, though it may be rather late in coming, five Wildcat football performers will also be in pro camps in July as free agents after having signed contracts late in the spring semester.

The signings have a definite National Football Conference Eastern Division flavor. All five players who signed (including Tony Jordan, who was drafted by the Phoenix Cardinals), were taken by NFC East teams.

Besides Jordan at running back, tight end Kent Dean signed with the Dallas Cowboys, wide receiver John Williams signed with the New York Giants, and defensive standouts Grady Newton and Tim MacDonald signed with the defending Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins.

If my NFL knowledge hasn't escaped me, that means only the Philadelphia Eagles didn't sign a K-Stater. Oh well, the Eagles made Oklahoma tight end Keith Jackson their first round pick in the draft. To say the division has a definite Big Eight feel to it now would be an understatement.

Steve Henson was the star of yet another Big Eight all-star team that toured Europe recently. The Wildcat point guard made his second overseas trip in as many years, and gunned in 27 points in one of his more outstanding performances.

Speaking of outstanding efforts, how about the one put together by Mitch Richmond at the Olympic Trials in Colorado Springs, Colo., last month. Richmond joined Kansas' Danny Manning and Navy/San Antonio Spurs standout David Robinson in a group of players that will take part in the final cutdown camp at Georgetown later in the summer.

Now that a few of the odds and ends are out of the way, a quick preview of things to come is in order.

Construction at the new Fred Bramlage Coliseum is progressing nicely, and it looks like the athletic department staff should be moving from Ahearn Field House to Bramlage in mid-July.

Just who will be leading that staff is yet another question. The search committee currently involved in finding a new athletic director will see a very busy month of June, as the application deadline comes and goes and the actual process of hiring a new director begins in earnest.

The early betting line here: Steve Miller, former K-State assistant AD and track coach, 3-2; Craig Hellwig, another former K-State assistant AD, 5-1.

Detroit not intimidated by Lakers

By The Associated Press

PONTIAC, Mich. — Don't expect the boys from Motown to be intimidated by the flash of Tinseltown when the Detroit Pistons take on the Los Angeles Lakers for the NBA championship.

The Pistons have a healthy respect for the Lakers, who are defending champs. But after finally conquering the Boston Celtics in the Eastern Conference finals, Detroit feels ready to take on the world.

The Pistons beat the Celtics in six games. The Lakers won the Western Division title in seven games over the Dallas Mavericks.

"Hey, it's down to the two best teams in the world," Detroit point guard Isiah Thomas said Sunday. "It's no accident and it's no fluke. We're very confident."

The best-of-seven championship series begins with games Tuesday and Thursday nights in Los Angeles, then moves to the Silverdome on Sunday.

It is the first time since moving to Detroit 31 years ago that the Pistons have advanced to the finals. The Lakers will be trying for their fifth championship in the 1980s, their sixth since moving to Los Angeles in 1960 and their 11th since the franchise was founded in Minneapolis in 1946.

"I wasn't rooting for either Dallas or Los Angeles," Thomas said. "But deep down, if you're going to win a championship, the two teams you want to beat are the Celtics and the Lakers. They've been the dominant teams of the '80s.

"We've beaten the Celtics. Now we'll try to beat the Lakers."

To do that, the Pistons will probably have to change tactics. They beat the Celtics with a punishing defense that has held opponents under 100 points in 10 of their past 12 games.

Co-op conducting 'business as usual'

Summer enrollment down by 11

By Deron Johnson
Staff Writer

Despite a recent rate increase and the lack of an assistant director, it's business as usual at the KSU Childcare Cooperative, director Nancy Bolsen said last week.

In an attempt to stave off future budget deficits, the co-op's previously announced rate increase went into effect Wednesday. Despite the increase, Bolsen said enrollment this summer is comparable to last summer, when about 115 children were in the co-op. There are 104 enrolled for this summer.

However, there were not enough infants to continue the infant program this summer, Bolsen said, adding that she expects enough by fall to resume the program.

Although the co-op is currently on sound financial footing following several years of budget deficits, Bolsen said the center's long-term future is tied directly to enrollment.

"The more children we have enrolled, the more able we are going to be to meet our budget," Bolsen said.

Officials with the co-op and administration have said it is a top priority that the co-op runs in the black, and Bolsen said that if the goal of increasing teachers' salaries is to be realized, it will take a steady enrollment.

Although Bolsen said an increase in teachers' salaries is "in the forefront of our thoughts," she said she couldn't guess when that increase may come. Only when there is surplus money will raises be possible, she said.

"When we get extra money, there are two places that money will go: to teachers' salaries and increased childships," Bolsen said, adding, "The raising of salaries will come as soon as possible." Childships are given to children of those students who have demonstrated financial need.

In late April, Student Senate voted to allocate $32,000 to the co-op for childships. The allocation came despite a rejection by Senate in early March to establish a student fee to support the co-op. The $32,000 for childships came from the interest on the Student Governing Association endowment account.

The bill passed by Senate "strongly urged" that SGA petition to use money from the Educational Opportunity Fund for the childships next year. The EOF is a fund proposed to the Kansas Board of Regents by Associated Students of Kansas and the Student Advisory Committee.

Bolsen said co-op officials would approach SGA next fall to get EOF funding.

Following the decision to increase its fees, Bolsen said the childship money was necessary because students who previously received funds from Social and Rehabilitative Services would no longer be able to rely on SRS money. Previously, the co-op had two fee schedules — one for those who were eligible for SRS support and one for those who weren't.

Bolsen said she believes the $32,000 will be enough to cover those students who previously received SRS benefits. Students who have children currently enrolled at the co-op will receive first priority, Bolsen said.

The deadline for the childship applications was Friday, and Bolsen said the co-op had received 37 applications as of Friday morning.

In addition to the added paperwork of processing the childship applications, co-op officials have been unusually busy because Wednesday was the last day on the job for Esther Gray, formerly the assistant director. Gray announced her resignation in early April because of the "unacceptable state of affairs" at the co-op related to the financial crisis.

Gray's replacement won't be announced until at least August, Bolsen said, because there's not enough enrollment during the summer to justify hiring someone now.

For students interested in placing their children in the co-op this summer, Bolsen said the center still has some openings.

Holton renovation project begins; offices relocated across campus

By Becky Lucas
Editor

If you think the office you're looking for is located in Holton Hall, think again.

As of May 31, all offices located in Holton Hall were relocated to other parts of campus as the Holton renovation becomes a reality.

On Oct. 9, 1987, Student Senate approved an additional $290,000 that administration officials had requested for the renovation. This money was added to the original 1983 commitment of $780,000, bringing the total renovation cost to $1.069 million.

The cost of moving the offices located in Holton to temporary offices, and back to Holton after the renovation is complete, was budgeted at $16,000, said W. Lawrence Garvin, University architect.

The $16,000 was part of the total renovation budget, Garvin said.

Once the building was empty, the renovation plans were under way.

During the month of June, Physical Facilities will take all usable fixtures and air conditioners from the building. Physical Facilities was also contracted for $7,000 to remove asbestos from the building, Garvin said.

According to Garvin, a residential elevator located in Holton must also be removed during June and will be relocated in Leasure Hall at an estimated cost of $10,000. The money for this is not part of the project cost, Garvin said. The money for the elevator move is from a state fund source.

On July 1, the building contractor, Rapp and Gaines of Salina, will begin renovation. According to the contract, the Holton renovation should be complete by March 31, 1989.

"I cannot overstate how smoothly the move went," said Mike Lynch, assistant vice president of institutional advancement.

The move has caused some offices to double up occupants, but Lynch said the people in the Union could not have been nicer to his group.

"Whenever you move into somebody's house, it's always disruptive," Lynch said of the move to new offices.

One of the problems encountered by the offices forced to make the move was that people were crowded into little spaces and, in order to save money, they basically moved themselves, Garvin said.

There is some concern about moving the offices back to Holton during the academic year when renovation is complete, Garvin said. The move so near the end of the semester could prove too disruptive, he added.

The renovation cost budgeted at $1.069 million allows for a construction budget of $890,000. Because the bid was $808,400, four alternates are to be included in the construction, Garvin said. The alternates include window replacements, $50,200; internal signage, $4,500; wood bases, $11,000; and window blinds, $4,600. This leaves approximately a $12,000 construction contigency, he said.

During the renovation, the following offices' addresses and phone numbers are: Academic Assistance Center, Union 108, 532-6492; Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, Anderson Hall 1, 532-6432; Counseling Center, Holtz Hall 1, 532-6927; Dean of Student Life Office, Anderson Hall 1, 532-6432; Educational Supportive Services, Derby 134, 532-5642; FENIX Program, Leasure Hall 3A, 532-6434; Greek Affairs, Union 106, 532-5546; Holton Hall Business Office, Anderson Hall 111D, 532-6491; Minority and Cultural Affairs, Derby 134, 532-6436; Religious Activities, 1021 Denison Ave., 539-4451; Services for Students with Physical Limitations, Lafene, 532-6441; Special Services, Derby 134, 532-6436; Upward Bound, Derby 134, 532-6497, and Women's Resource Center, Leasure Hall 3B, 532-6444.

U-LearN is closed for the summer.

Mail should not be addressed to the new address. Instead, all mail should still be addressed to the specific person and department at Holton Hall. It will then be re-routed.

Meese seen as major liability to GOP Senate candidates

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republican Senate candidates, increasingly concerned about political fallout from Edwin Meese's legal problems, are beginning to call on the attorney general to leave President Reagan's Cabinet.

At least four GOP candidates have urged Meese to resign and others have hinted they would like to see him go.

Leading Republicans such as Vice President George Bush and White House Chief of Staff Howard Baker Jr. have conceded Meese's troubles could severely damage GOP prospects this election year. But the attorney general has insisted he has done nothing wrong and will remain in office until he can "set the record straight."

Independent Counsel James McKay is expected to issue his report this month on Meese's conduct. Sources familiar with the probe said the report would not recommend an indictment but would raise questions about Meese's ethical conduct.

In recent interviews Meese has refused to say when he might leave office, but has ruled out a departure before his name is cleared "because people would say there was something wrong."

Meese's strongest defender in the administration is Reagan, who has said that "only a complete change of (Meese's) character" would prompt him to ask his old friend to resign.

However, that view is not shared by many Republicans involved in tough election campaigns.

Bush said he met early last month with Meese, and the attorney general assured him he would do nothing to jeopardize the vice president's presidential campaign.

In a recent interview, Bush also said that Meese has "been made aware by the polls and by a lot of public comment that there is the danger that this matter, if it stays exactly the way it is, could not only adversely affect me, but others as well."

During a recent television interview, Baker acknowledged Bush's discomfort.

"It's a difficult situation," he said on the NBC show, "Meet the Press." "It's an unfortunate situation. It's one that obviously troubles the vice president. But in the final analysis, the only person who can make a judgment on this is the president of the United States, and the president has expressed his continued confidence in the attorney general."

Pete Dawkins, battling to oust Democratic Sen. Frank Lautenberg of New Jersey, told a college commencement audience recently: "I believe Ed Meese should step down as our nation's leading law enforcement officer."

Mayor George Voinovich of Cleveland, the Republican challenger trying to unseat Democratic Sen. Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio, recently declared that "for the good of the country, the president, the Justice Department and the Republican Party, Mr. Meese should resign."

"If Mr. Meese ever had any use to the administration, it has long since passed ... he ought to go," said Slade Gorton, the former Republican senator, trying to capture the seat being vacated by Sen. Dan Evans, R-Wash.

A fourth GOP Senate candidate, Bill Anderson, who is running against Democratic Sen. Jim Sasser of Tennessee, recently wrote Meese to say, "I urge you to step aside and resign as attorney general to enhance the credibility of that office as well as the credibility of the presidency."

Seventh Main Street festival attracts children of all ages

By June Lyle
Staff Writer

The peacefulness of a sunny summer day in Manhattan was enlivened Saturday during the seventh-annual Manhattan Main Street Fun Festival.

According to Project Coordinator Kim Brecheisen, the event was created by the downtown merchants "as a way of saying thanks to the people of Manhattan."

The festivities began with a parade in the morning that traveled from City Park down Poyntz Avenue. Boy Scouts, local celebrities such as Miss Manhattan/K-State, various dance groups, local politicians and a marching band were all part of the parade, which Brecheisen described as "much larger than in years past."

"We had to wait in the park for about half an hour and then walk down Poyntz real slow," said 14 year-old Mike Jones, of Boy Scout Troop 284. "It was kind of boring, but mostly fun."

Fellow Scout Scott Wilson, 10, agreed.

"It was a lot more fun than I thought it would be," Wilson said.

A new addition to the parade was the KMKF Radio Band for children sixth grade and under.

"The kids had to register, and then they got a T-shirt which they wore to march in the parade carrying radios tuned to 101.7 FM," explained Allen Renz, owner of Judy's Children's Wear, co-sponsor of the radio band. "We had about 60 kids turn out, so we were pleased."

Following the parade, a wide variety of activities were available along the 300 and 400 blocks of Poyntz.

"There were activities for all ages," said Brecheisen.

Entertainment areas at the Courthouse and Town Center Plazas featured the performances of mimes, magicians, jump-ropers, puppets, blue grass musicians, singers, dancers and a juggler. The performances continued until the end of the Fun Festival activities at 4 p.m.

The Festival also involved several special events, such as a pie-eating contest, a hot wheel race, a chalk-drawing contest and a hot dog eating contest.

The sidewalks of Poyntz were lined with booths and activities throughout the day. Fourty-three clubs and organizations were present, some having more than one booth, according to Brecheisen.

"The money goes back to the individual clubs," she said. "It's not a moneymaker for the downtown merchants."

"The Main Street Project has helped us.It got a lot of people in here who'd never seen the place before."

—Miguel Robles owner of Roundtree Boutique

"We've had a lot of people through today," said Mary Hickman, who worked at a booth sponsored by Crafty Seniors Plus. "We're trying to make some money for when our craft store opens, and we've really had a good day."

The Fun Festival had many booths and activities especially geared toward children, who could enjoy a ferris wheel or moonwalk ride, a petting zoo, and wandering jugglers and musicians.

Some children were hard at work instead. Heather and Tami Alloway, ages 8 and 4, spent the day roaming up and down the street wearing signs instructing "Follow Me" to the Riley County 4-H Clowns' face painting booth.

"It's kind of hard to get through all these people," said Heather. "We've been here almost all day, but we're not tired yet — we're having fun."

Approximately 10,000 people attend the Fun Festival each year, according to Brecheisen. While the event was not designed to benefit the downtown merchants, this large influx of people appeared to boost the day's business.

"The Main Street Project has helped us," said Miguel Robles, owner of the Roundtree Boutique. "It got a lot of people in here who'd never seen the place before."

The public, as well as the downtown merchants, expressed satisfaction with Saturday's Fun Festival activities.

"It really picked up from past years," said Manhattanite Amy Pedersen. "There were a lot more people here, and a lot more things to do."

Shultz speaks in Israel

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Secretary of State George Shultz on Sunday called Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip "a dead-end street" and urged Israel to accept a U.S. plan for peace in the region.

Shultz urged Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir to accept his proposal for negotiations with the Arabs and assurances that Israel would withdraw from at least part of the occupied territories.

King Hussein of Jordan, in talks Saturday in Amman with Shultz, insisted on the Israeli commitment as a condition for accepting the U.S. proposal for peace talks.

But an adviser to Shamir said the prime minister wanted to negotiate with Jordan "without precondition."

Tax bill reconsidered

By The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — California voters, who sparked a nationwide taxpayer revolt with Proposition 13 a decade ago, are being asked in a series of ballot measures whether they are having some second thoughts.

Although gloomy predictions of fiscal disaster remain largely unrealized since the measure cut property taxes by $7 billion, or an average of 57 percent, Proposition 13 has had its visible effects.

The public increasingly pays for services that once were free, including parks and recreation programs. Public grounds look scruffier than they did 10 years ago because of cutbacks in maintenance.

State bailouts and creative funding schemes are credited with keeping most local governments afloat since the measure was approved June 6, 1978, but many agree that schools and rural counties have suffered under the cuts.

So on Tuesday, voters in 26 of the state's 57 counties will decide whether to raise sales and other taxes in their areas to pay for highways, schools, libraries, jails and other services that were threatened or eliminated by Proposition 13.

At the same time, two rival statewide measures — Proposition 71 and Proposition 72 — will ask voters whether to ease a constitutional spending limit and provide more money for schools or highways.

The spending limit, in the form of an initiative written by tax-cut pioneer Paul Gann, was approved in a special election nine months after Proposition 13. It requires that spending be strictly tied to increases in population and the nationwide cost of living.

The two new measures would alter that limit. Proposition 71, whose main supporter is state schools Superintendent Bill Honig, would permit additional funding for schools. Proposition 72, written by Gann himself, would allow new money for highway construction.

Republican Gov. George Deukmejian, grappling with a $1.1 billion budget deficit, opposes both measures.

Other issues on Tuesday's ballot include a proposal to empower the state to quarantine AIDS victims and local measures that could close the Rancho Seco nuclear power plant and divide San Bernardino County into two counties.

California also is holding a U.S. Senate primary, along with New Mexico, Montana and New Jersey. Montana, in addition, is having primaries in both parties for governor.

Proposition 13 — whose war cry was quickly picked up by voters in Massachusetts and other states — decreed that property tax assessments be rolled back immediately to 1975-76 levels. It limited annual property taxes to 1 percent of the market value and stipulated that assessed values, and thus taxes, could be increased by only 2 percent annually until a property is sold. Then the new owner's property tax bill starts at 1 percent of the purchase price.

The measure also made it extremely difficult for local school districts to raise property taxes.

'Phantom' sweeps Tonys; 'M. Butterfly' voted top play

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — "The Phantom of the Opera" swooped down on the 1988 Tony Awards Sunday, carrying off seven Tonys including the best musical award, while "M. Butterfly," David Henry Hwang's exotic love story, was chosen best play.

Besides its best musical prize, "Phantom" captured musical prizes for best actor, Michael Crawford; director, Harold Prince, featured actress, Judy Kaye and swept all three technical awards: Maria Bjornson for sets and costumes and Andrew Bridge for lighting.

"There are so many ups and downs in this business. Well, the time I have had here in New York," said an emotional Crawford. "I know by the law of averages I must be due to be knocked down by a truck."

While "Phantom" captured the big musical prize, it failed to win awards for score and book which went to Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine, the composer and author of "Into the Woods," a fairy tale musical.

"I'm so glad that Stephen won, so I don't have to share this with him," said Lapine in accepting the book of a musical award.

"M. Butterfly," the true story of a love affair between a French diplomat and a transvestite singer in the Beijing Opera, picked up two other awards beside best play.

"I'm like improbable plots, but I'm not sure I would make that one up," cracked Hwang. The plays also won prizes for director John Dexter and B.D. Wong, an actor who plays the exotic singer.

Ron Silver was named best actor for his portrayal of a cut-rate Hollywood mogul in David Mamet's "Speed-the-Plow," while Joan Allen won the best actress nod for her portrait of a bereaved dancer in Lanford Wilson's "Burn This."

Joanna Gleason of "Into the Woods" was the enthusiastic winner of the best actress in a musical award, edging out Patti LuPone of "Anything Goes" in a close contest.

Bill McCutcheon, a comic gangster on the lam in "Anything Goes," received the featured actor in a musical award.

"Thank God for letting me live this long to be here," said McCutcheon in one of the evening's shortest speeches. The 1934 Cole Porter musical was also named best revival and also received the choreography award which went to Michael Smuin.

L. Scott Caldwell received the featured actress in a play prize for her portrayal of the boarding house owner's wife in "Joe Turner's Come and Gone" by August Wilson.

The season, which ended May 29, was one of Broadway's best in a long time despite a drop in the total number of plays and musicals produced. Ticket sales climbed to more than $253 million, a new record, and attendance jumped from nearly 7 million the previous season to 8.1 million, a hike of almost 17 percent and the best since the early 1980s.

Much of the increase can be attributed to a quartet of big British musicals. They include the recent "The Phantom of the Opera" and a trio of long-running hits — "Les Miserables," "Me and My Girl" and "Cats."

The Tony nominees were chosen by a 12-member panel of theater professionals. The contenders were announced May 9, and then ballots were sent to 730 journalists and members of the theatrical profession.

Little change in local prices expected from court decision

By The Collegian Staff

A U.S. Supreme Court ruling concerning international trade on the "gray market" is expected to benefit U.S. customers, but will not have much affect on local prices.

The ruling, handed down Tuesday, allows discounters and bargain-hunters to buy goods less expensively directly from overseas manufacturers rather than buying from U.S. owners of trademarks.

Discounting famous-name products produces $5 billion to $10 billion a year, according to the Kansas City Times.

"This helps the consumer a little," explained Ray Coleman, head of the International Trade Institute and Council. "It can provide them with lower-cost goods."

Local prices, however, will not vary as a result of gray market trading, Coleman said.

"I don't foresee much change in things in Manhattan," he said. "Under the current situation, not a lot of consumer goods are being sold here."

Malcolm Ballinger, president and chief executive officer of the Midwest-based World Radio chain, said use of the gray market "doesn't get too far inland. It's not a common practice in this part of the world."

"We're offered gray market goods occasionally," Ballinger said, "but we choose not to use it, even though some goods can be bought more cheaply that way."

Ballinger said World Radio's area competitors do not use the gray market, either.

"In the Midwest, the gray market is almost a non-issue," he said.

A negative reaction to the ruling is predicted by some analysts, who fear that manufacturers may cut sales to businesses that use the gray market.

Coleman disagrees.

"Under any circumstances, those people will buy as cheap as they can and sell as high as they can," he said. "As far as any great reaction, that's just dreaming."

ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT
"Still the greatest of all war movies. The lives of the young German soldiers during World War I are sympathetically and humanely portrayed... The film still retains its power, and war has never looked more horrible. Teachers should point out that participating in the film convinced Lew Ayres to become a confirmed pacifist."

Rescuers ignore miners' signal

By The Associated Press

BORKEN, West Germany — Officials said Sunday that rescuers made radio contact with some miners hours after a disastrous mine explosion but ordered them to stop sending signals so they could try to find other victims.

The statement from the mine owner confirmed reports from one of six miners found alive Saturday in an air pocket 500 feet underground. It fueled allegations that searchers bungled their work after Wednesday's powerful blast.

One newspaper declared the incident "a scandal."

The bodies of eight more miners were found Sunday, bringing the total of confirmed dead to 45. Six men are still missing, but officials said there was little hope they would be found alive.

At a news conference Sunday, officials said trapped miners established radio contact with rescue workers a few hours after the explosion. They didn't specify how many hours.

"We now know that there definitely was contact with miners after the explosion," said Hermann Kraemer, board president of Preussen Elektra, the company that owns the coal mine in this town of 15,000, 70 miles northeast of Frankfurt.

In an interview with the ZDF television network, one of the survivors, Ahmet Batkan, said the radio connection occurred hours after the blast.

Batkan said that when contact was made, the men were told to "avoid using the radio" so that other communications would not be disturbed.

"After awhile, we tried again but radio contact had been broken off for good," Batkan said.

Kraemer said a radio operator told the men to stop transmitting because he wanted to try to make contact with other possible survivors.

On the day of the explosion, officials said rescuers made radio contact with a group of missing miners but they later said the connection had been with another rescue team.

Kraemer said that after the contact with the miners was lost, radio operators tried unsuccessfully for 10 hours to re-establish communication with them.

"The failure to regain contact led us to wonder whether there had been an actual contact with the miners or with a search team," Kraemer said.

"It is a scandal, that already on Wednesday radio contact had been made with those who were finally rescued ... but that this (contact) wasn't taken seriously," the Saarbreucker Zeitung newspaper said in an editorial.

"The truth came to light only because those affected (the six miners) were found alive," the newspaper said.

The editorial, which is to appear in the newspaper's Monday editions, was telexed to other news organizations in advance.

Explosion kills 68, injures 230

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Three boxcars packed with 120 tons of explosives blew up near a train station, killing 68 people, injuring 230 others and throwing cars into the air like feathers, the official media reported Sunday.

The blast Saturday in Arzamas, 240 miles east of Moscow, carved a crater 80 feet deep and 175 feet wide and destroyed or damaged more than 400 buildings, Tass and the government newspaper Izvestia said.

The reports, some of the most detailed Soviet accounts ever filed so soon after an accident, said some of the injuries were serious. They said the cause of the explosion was not known.

"Hospital personnel are doing their best to save the life of every person," the Tass news agency reported. "Despite the wide scope of the tragedy, the situation in the city remains calm."

More than 80 doctors were flown to Arzamas, an industrial center of more than 90,000 people. Nearby residents rushed to offer blood and food for the survivors, the media said.

The reports indicated that more deaths could result from the accident, the most deadly on Soviet railways this year. They said eight children were among the dead.

The area was evacuated, but the local population was quickly reassured that tests showed an "absence of hazardous components" in the atmosphere, Tass said.

The three boxcars carried industrial explosives intended for geologists, mineworkers and builders, Tass said. The diesel locomotive pulling the cars flipped over in the blast, Izvestia said.

Cars and trucks halted near the track, waiting for the train to pass, "were scattered about as though they were (goose) down," Izvestia said.

The explosion set off small fires, derailed other freight cars and damaged the track, the newspaper said. The fires were extinguished within a half hour, it said.

Transport and municipal services also were damaged. Tass said 600 families were left homeless but would get new apartments and compensation for damages.

It was the most serious train accident reported since August 1987, when Soviet media said scores of people were killed after a freight train collided with a passenger train in southern Russia.

It didn't say how many people died.

Accidents were never reported in such detail before Mikhail S. Gorbachev came to power in March 1985, but media stories of incidents have become more common and specific, especially since the Chernobyl nuclear accident in April 1986.

Tass and Izvestia said a special government commission launched an investigation into Saturday's accident.

Jackson campaign eyes vice presidency

By The Associated Press

Jesse Jackson's campaign chairman said Sunday the No. 2 spot on the Democratic ticket should be his to turn down if front-runner Michael Dukakis ends up with the party's presidential nomination.

But Jackson, when asked about the remarks by campaign chairman Willie Brown, said: "That's his point of view."

Later, campaigning in California, Jackson told an audience at a church, "In Atlanta, the Democratic Party must make a commitment to empowerment — in the platform, in the party, on the ticket."

He did not elaborate on his reference to the ticket.

When asked about Brown's remarks, Dukakis' press secretary Mark Gearan noted that Jackson himself has said the nominee should have the choice of selecting a running mate.

"Dukakis isn't thinking about the vice presidency until the 7th of June," Gearan said. "In terms of Rev. Jackson, he isn't ruling anyone in or anyone out."

Brown, the California House speaker, said on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley" that Jackson has earned the right to be considered as a running mate for Dukakis — and that, he said, means the offer must actually be extended.

"I think consideration means literally extending the opportunity to go on the ticket, and then it will be up to Mr. Jackson to determine whether or not he wishes to accept it," Brown said.

Meanwhile, Dukakis was conciliatory in his reaction to reports that Jackson would continue campaigning after the round of primaries.

"He's a very strong person who's done an extraordinary job of winning votes and winning support," Dukakis said.

"Now we have a tool and there is evidence we can reduce the exodus," he said. "We have a long way to go in salaries, but we are heading in the right direction."

He said it would take two to five years for the University to see the total impact of the Margin of Excellence, but that initial results could be seen within a year.

Because the proposal was funded at 83 percent, some prioritizing had to be done, said Assistant Provost Don Hoyt. But, he said, to improve educational quality at the University, the requests of $200,000 for Farrell Library and $150,000 for the computing center were fully funded.

In a memorandum sent to regents before the meeting, Koplik said that the fiscal year 1990 phase of the Margin proposal may be more difficult budgetarily than 1989 has been. Two reasons he gave for the difficulties were diminished balances in special revenue funds which comprise the general use budget and the overall condition of the state general fund.

The 1989 Margin budget is partially financed by $4.2 million from university tuition revenues and $11.7 million from the University of Kansas Medical Center Hospital Revenue Fund. Koplik said expenditures for 1990 must be financed from other sources, specifically the state general fund.

Figures show that to stay even with this year's expenditures, the 1990 funding will require about $5 million from the general fund. For example, a $40 million request for new funding would require about $45 million from the state general fund.

"The board should be mindful of the special revenue fund availability during consideration of fiscal year 1990 requests," Koplik said. "The board has a responsibility to articulate the needs of our institutions. Nevertheless, financial realities obviously impact the success of that request."

been around since 1971," he said. "It's an excellent first attempt, but a little bit late. England did this two years ago."

Wade said on the average, Kansans seem to be well informed about AIDS.

Last year, more than 1,100 Kansans were surveyed by the Kansas AIDS Network, he said. Results showed that those surveyed had a moderate knowledge of AIDS, rating from 6 to 8 on a scale of 1 to 10.

Volunteers at a Topeka hotline reported moderate activity.

"We're getting a reasonable number of calls," said a volunteer for the Kansas AIDS Hotline, provided by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment in response to the pamphlet. "We've been at it four days (as of Friday) and answered well over 100 calls."

The volunteer, who asked not be be identified, said many of the calls were from people asking questions about their past sexual experiences.

"A lot of people have at one point in their lives done something to put them at risk," he said. "We provide as much information as possible and also refer them to counseling and testing sites."

Favorable calls

He said volunteers had received a "very limited number" of calls complaining about the morality of the pamphlet.

"Most calls have been favorable," he said.

The hotline is tentatively scheduled to operate until July 1, he said.

At K-State, Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center, said she was pleased with the pamphlet.

"I felt it was done very professionally — the information was very readable," Burke said.

She said she doubted many people would complain about the booklet.

"I fell very positive about it," she said. "It wasn't done distastefully at all."

American Red Cross officials agreed.

"I think it's excellent," said Lynda Hershey Frey, executive director for the Red Cross in Riley County. "The surgeon general works closely with the Red Cross, so we're quite convinced he knows what he's talking about."

Frey said the Red Cross routinely receives calls from people who have been wrongly told that a person can get AIDS from donating blood.

"We just had a bloodmobile here, so the timing was great," she said.

Like other officials, Frey said she had not heard of any negative comments about the pamphlet.

"I didn't see anything offensive at all," she said. "It shows the government is concerned."

Big

is as entertaining a movie as you're likely to find this summer. The big reason for this, not surprisingly, is Hanks, whose work here is up to par with his standout performances in "Splash" and "Nothing in Common."

In an unbelievable story, Hanks pulls off a very believable portrayal of a 12-year-old. He walks, talks, thinks and acts just like a kid would if placed in the same situation.

After waking up "big," Josh tries to tell his mother what has happened to him, but she won't believe him, so Josh has no choice but to seek out his best friend Billy (played by John Heard). Once he convinces Billy of his identity, the two hop a bus for New York City, where most of the story takes place.

Unable to find the "Zoltar" machine that would give him his identity back, Josh finds a job with a toy company. He uses his 12-year-old mind to quickly reach the top of the corporate ladder and even finds a new love with a character played by Elizabeth Perkins.

Hanks' scenes with Perkins are among the highlights of the film. His youthful enthusiasm and naievity coupled with her feelings of stress and vulnerability make for an interesting and many times hilarious combination.

"Big" marked the directing debut of Penny Marshall, who played Laverne on the smash hit television comedy "Laverne and Shirley." The movie was co-written by Anne Spielberg, sister of Steven Spielberg.

The one slightly bothersome thing about "Big" is its predictability. Almost anyone will be able to figure out how this story is going to progress and how it's going to end. None of this seems to matter that much, though, as you sit through this entertaining romp, smiling all the way.

If you want to start out the summer movie season on a good note — laughing, take the time to see "Big."

County workers wrongfully dump diesel at landfill

By Judy Lundstrom
Staff Writer

Cleanup processes are to begin this week after it was discovered some diesel fuel was dumped against regulations at the Riley County Landfill.

The source of the fuel was the Riley County shop.

A container of fuel was taken to the landfill Monday afternoon by Riley County shop employees and unloaded from a trailer onto some concrete slabs on the ground, said landfill employee Charlene Sweet.

"They told me it was diesel," Sweet said. "I told them we couldn't take it, but they said there was a load brought in here recently, so they went ahead and dumped it."

The landfill is about three miles south of Manhattan along the Kansas River.

Sweet said the workers had no permit for the material and that no entry was made of the incident in the landfill log book. She said she has never known the landfill to accept diesel fuel before, but that a load could have been brought in recently on her day off or when she was home sick.

County Engineer Dan Harden said early Wednesday that he was not informed about the incident. Once he verified it, however, he said cleanup would begin immediately.

"We're in the process of cleaning our mess up," he said. "It was something we needed to know about. You can't just walk away and leave it."

He said county shop officials told him that only 20 gallons of diesel fuel and 12 gallons of liquid asphalt were dumped at the landfill. The diesel was used to clean out a county pothole-patching machine, and should not have been disposed of at the landfill, he said.

"They shouldn't be doing that," he said.

Now, he said, the soil on which the fuel was dumped will be treated as contaminated soil and will need to be aired out through an evaporation process.

"We're going to take the contaminated soil and put it on the road (going into the landfill) and let people drive over it to air it out," he said.

Harden said he believed the incident was caused by a misunderstanding.

"KDHE allows us to dispose of solid asphalt at the landfill," he said. "The workers probably thought if they could take the hard asphalt out, they could take the liquid stuff out there, too."

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment is the agency that regulates landfill operations in the state. A KDHE official was disturbed when he heard about the incident.

Campus becomes wild kingdom

Mother fox and three cubs move in

"The Little Foxes."
Starring: Mother J. Fox.
Featuring: Her three cubs.
Running time: Early morning and evenings.
Distributed by: Some Twentieth-century Foxes.
Now playing at selected sites across campus.

No, it's not exactly a cinema classic. But some new visitors to campus are providing a little live-action drama every day. Free of charge. And oh so entertaining.

For campus pedestrians — or even some alert motorists — the initial sighting of the four red foxes usually prompts a double take and a quick pause. They've been spotted across campus in a drain pipe near Fairchild Hall and even on a railing outside Umberger Hall, said Mary Williamson, dispatcher with K-State Police.

Although nobody is certain why the foxes ventured so far onto campus, Williamson said they've been seen for several weeks.

"It's been over a month (since the first sighting)," she said, adding she thinks the foxes came on campus for food — particularly for the plentiful squirrel and rabbit supply.

Prior to being sighted near the central portion of campus, they were seen on the outskirts near Dykstra and Call halls, Williamson said.

The foxes have prompted a number of calls to campus police, as well as a number of stories about their sightings. For instance, one woman called police to report the sighting of a coyote near the President's house.

Williamson asked the woman what color the "coyote" was. The woman replied red. Williamson assured the woman that what she'd seen was a fox.

"And one morning, one of the guys said she'd jumped up into their pick-up looking for food," Williamson said with a laugh.

However, while the sightings have piqued children's curiosity and prompted others to try to pet the animals, at least one person has reported being bitten by one of the foxes.

A K-State student, who asked not to be identified because he didn't want to "cause trouble" for the foxes, said he was riding his bicycle across campus Tuesday evening near Fairchild Hall when one of the foxes came out of the shadows and lunged for his left heel.

"All of a sudden, one came and bit me," he said. "It didn't hurt that bad — just a little blood."

Despite the potential seriousness of a wild animal bite, the student said he didn't plan to see a doctor.

"I'm not too worried about it," he said.

However, a bite from a fox is something that shouldn't be taken lightly, said Dr. Robert Taussig, an associate professor of surgery and medicine whose specialty is working with non-domestic animal species.

"The biggest danger, of course, is rabies," he said. "No one should touch a fox."

Taussig, who called the foxes presence on campus "very strange," said rabies often spreads rapidly through the fox population.

"The three main species that concern us in the wild are foxes, raccoons and skunks, with skunks being No. 1," he said.

Despite his concern over rabies, Taussig said foxes aren't usually aggressive.

However, he warned, "Foxes with rabies often act tame."

Williamson said officials with Iran-Contra figures face separate trials

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The judge in the Iran-Contra case ordered four separate trials Wednesday to allow Oliver North and three co-defendants to use each others' immunized congressional testimony to defend against the charges.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell gave independent counsel Lawrence Walsh until Friday to decide whether to proceed first with a trial of North on 16 charges or to try former national security adviser John M. Poindexter on seven counts.

The judge said arms dealers Richard V. Secord and Albert Hakim could be tried individually after North and Poindexter go to trial separately on charges they conspired to defraud the government by illegally diverting U.S.-Iran arms-sale profits to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Under the law, Walsh cannot make use of the congressional testimony that North, a fired National Security Council aide and a retired Marine lieutenant colonel, Poindexter and Hakim gave under limited grants of immunity from prosecution.

But Gesell said "any defendant should have considerable leeway to use indirectly ... and possibly directly immunized testimony while defending the charges against him."

"Each of the three defendants who gave immunized testimony revealed information which one or more of the defendants considers helpful to his own defense, if not exonerating some aspect" of the case, Gesell said.

"Each defendant has contemplated using immunized testimony of other witnesses," Gesell said, noting statements by Hakim and Secord that the congressional testimony of North and Poindexter would help exonerate them.

Separate trials are needed because trying the defendants jointly would compromise each defendant's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and their Sixth Amendment right to challenge the testimony through cross-examination, the judge said.

Senate solidly passes catastrophic health bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate gave final and overwhelming congressional approval Wednesday to a catastrophic health insurance bill that provides additional financial protection for 29 million elderly Americans on Medicare.

The vote sending the measure to the White House for President Reagan's likely signature was 86-11.

The House adopted the same conference committee compromise by a 328-72 vote last week.

"This gives additional peace of mind to millions of Americans," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, the Finance Committee chairman who guided the measure to final approval.

Although there has been no formal word from the White House, Health and Human Services Secretary Otis Bowen has said he will ask the president to sign the measure.

The major portion of the bill, the first significant expansion of Medicare since the program was born 23 years ago, takes effect next Jan. 1.

However, some parts — such as the first-ever general prescription drug benefit under Medicare — are to be phased in over four years.

In addition to the historic nature of the benefit expansion, the bill has particular significance in the way it is financed.

The potential beneficaries are expected to pay all of the additional costs. On top of a flat monthly premium to be assessed on every Medicare beneficiary — $4 a month to start — the estimated 40 percent of the elderly with enough income to be liable for federal income taxes will be charged a supplemental premium based on their ability to pay.

In general, an individual would have to have an annual income of more than $10,000 before being subject to the additional premium, which amounts to a tax surcharge.

Although expanded considerably as it worked its way through Congress, the final bill is based on a proposal put forth more than a year ago by Reagan at the urging of Bowen.

It provides full hospital coverage after a once-a-year deductible estimated at $564 in 1989 and indexed to hospital inflation. Medicare now pays full charges for no more than 59 days a year, and the recipient is subject to a deductible for each hospitalization.

The cap on costs for physicians is $1,370 a year. After a $75 deductible, Medicare now pays 80 percent of approved doctor bills and that part of the program remains intact. Starting in 1989, however, the $75 deductible and the 20 percent share paid by beneficiaries counts toward the $1,370 cap. After that is reached, Medicare pays 100 percent of approved doctor bills.

However, the beneficiary will remain liable for any portion of doctor bills that exceed the fees approved by Medicare.

In a new benefit, Medicare will pay half of outpatient prescription drug costs in 1991 after a $600 deductible is met. The government share rises to 60 percent in 1992 and 80 percent in 1993. However, the deductible is expected to rise each year to keep pace with rising drug costs.

The so-called supplemental premium starts at $22.50 a year for each $150 of income tax owed in 1989, climbing to an additional $42 a year on each $150 of tax liability by 1993.

6 feared dead in plane crash

GREENVILLE, Miss. — A military transport plane with six Air National Guardsmen aboard crashed and burned Wednesday near the Greenville airport, and all six were feared dead, authorities said.

Witnesses to the crash said they saw no survivors, but almost eight hours after the accident military officials would confirm only four deaths and refused to account for the other occupants of the plane.

The aircraft, a four-engine turboprop C-130 used to transport men and equipment, crashed about a mile north of the airport about 2:40 p.m. Harvey Tackett, Washington County Sheriff, reported three deaths.

"I went down there but you couldn't get close to it," said Reggie Kellems, whose family owns the field where the plane crashed. "No one could have come out that thing — and didn't."

The aircraft was assigned to the 189th Tactical Airlift Group of the Arkansas Air National Guard and was on a training mission, said Maj. Jim Bates, public affairs officer at Little Rock, Ark., Air Force Base.

"They had been with us for some time doing touch-and-go training landings," said Richard Brewer, air traffic manager at the northeast Mississippi airport. "The plane was in the pattern and the first we knew something was wrong was when it impacted."

AIDS virus may be decades old

NEW YORK — The AIDS virus may have appeared as recently as about 40 years ago and probably no longer than 100 years ago, a study suggests.

The virus, HIV-1, apparently evolved in that period from an ancestor it shared with a West African AIDS virus called HIV-2, researchers concluded.

But the study cannot determine whether humans caught an ancestor of the AIDS virus from monkeys, or vice versa, said Temple Smith, director of the Molecular Biology Computer Research Resource at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute of Harvard Medical School.

The work follows a study published last week that suggested an ancestral AIDS virus infected the primitive ancestors of humans and monkeys more than 20 million years ago. Smith said he doubts that conclusion.

The new work, which used a different method of analysis from last week's study, appears in today's issue of the British journal Nature. Smith wrote it with colleagues at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta and the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico.

Trial over recruit's death ends

PENSACOLA, Fla. — A Navy recruit described as being literally scared to death when allegedly forced back into a rescue training pool died by accident because "the system broke down," defense lawyers argued Wednesday.

A prosecutor, however, contended that forcing Airman Recruit Lee Mirecki into the pool when he tried to quit the rescue course at Pensacola Naval Air Station couldn't be blamed on the system, but was a crime committed by people.

"The use of force to make people do things is not allowed by the Uniform Code" of Military Justice, said Lt. Cmdr. Larry D. Wynne.

50 years enough for official

FRONTENAC — D.J. "Pappa Joe" Saia, who has the longest tenure as a county commissioner in Kansas, said Wednesday he is calling it quits after a half-century.

"Heck, I've got a nice record, and if I felt better I might take a shot at another term. But I felt 50 years is plenty," Saia said in a telephone interview.

Saia, who is slightly hard of hearing, said an ailing leg was making it hard to get around, and that he would not file for re-election.

The 84-year-old diehard Democrat first took office as the Crawford County Commissioner in January 1938, on a campaign centered on his support for President Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal policies.

He will have served 50 years when his term expires next January.

"I didn't think I'd be in office all that time, but the constituents thought I'd done a good job, so they kept me in office the 50 years," he said.

Saia worked for John F. Kennedy's 1960 campaign in Kansas and on Sen. Edward Kennedy's 1976 campaign for the Democratic nomination.

Woman jailed for kids' truancy

ALLEGAN, Mich. — A woman has been sentenced to three weekends in jail for letting her children miss too much school.

District Judge Harry Beach also fined Mary Sue Allen $35 and ordered her to pay $65 in court costs after she pleaded guilty Tuesday to educational neglect.

Allen, 30, of Comstock, Mich., was charged after her elementary-age children missed more than 40 days of classes during the 1987-88 school year at Plainwell Public Schools. The children's grandparents told police they had been ill frequently, but officers said doctors couldn't confirm that.

Excited pet cat kills woman, 80

CHELMSFORD, England — A pet cat killed an 80-year-old woman when it jumped to greet her after being missing for a month, police said Wednesday.

Ann Edmunds, a widow, was in the garden of her home on Tuesday when the cat returned home and leaped on her, severing a vein in her leg, said Acting Inspector John Woodgate.

Neighbors rushed to help as blood poured from the wound, but Edmunds lapsed into unconsciousness and died.

Neighbors were caring for the cat on Wednesday.

Chelmsford is 30 miles northeast of London.

Farm never gets off ground

VALPARAISO, Ind. — Porter-Starke Services Inc. and the Valparaiso YMCA wanted to put 160 acres of farmland to good use, so they came up with the idea of a turkey farm, an idea that appears to be, well, a turkey.

Only two families have signed up for the program, and at least 20 were needed by Wednesday's deadline.

For $18, a family gets a 1-day-old turkey chick. For the next five months, each family takes turns feeding all the chicks.

After five months, the 16- to 35-pound turkeys are sent to a commercial processor, where they are dressed and returned to each family in time for Thanksgiving dinner.

Police Roundup

■ On Monday, K-State Police reported a two-vehicle collision west of Kedzie Hall. Damage was estimated at $500.

■ Campus police reported Tuesday that a wallet and its contents were reported lost off campus. Loss was estimated at $11.

■ A stray blond male dog was transported to the Veterinary Medicine Center Tuesday, campus police reported.

■ Campus police reported Tuesday that a possum with an injured leg was transported from near Fairchild Hall to the Veterinary Medicine Center.

■ The off-campus loss of a wallet and its contents was reported to campus police Wednesday. Loss was estimated at $45.

Campus Briefly

Summer enrollment decreases

Preliminary summer enrollment figures at K-State are down slightly from last year.

Currently, 4,161 undergraduate, graduate and Veterinary Medicine students are enrolled. In 1987, enrollment was 4,266, which was up by 40 students from 1986.

Undergraduate enrollment this summer stands at 2,595, down by less than one-tenth of one percent from last year's 2,621.

Professor receives grant

Dallas Johnson, professor of statistics, received a $7,500 grant from the Alcoa Foundation of Pittsburgh, Pa. The foundation's Science Support Grants Program will support him in continuing a second year of research on using statistics to improve quality control in manufacturing processes. He studies multiple regression techniques, a way of looking at many factors at the same time and determining the important or causative ones.

Upward Bound director named

Upward Bound, a federally funded, college preparatory program for ninth through 12th graders, has a new director. Reginland McGowan succeeds Charlotte Olsen, who has been appointed academic services coordinator with K-State's education supportive services Academic Service Center.

Chem/Biochem Building may be complete by Aug. 1

By Lori Siegrist
Campus Editor

After almost 50 years of study and research in a building now powerless to meet modern standards, chemistry and biochemistry teachers and students will soon be able to make the short move into their new facility.

How soon that move will come is still in question, though.

Vince Cool, associate director of facilities planning, said, "We're shooting for early to mid-July (to move in)."

But Joseph Paukstelis, professor of chemistry, said, "I have serious doubts about whether we'll be able to move in before the semester. If we can start to move before Aug. 1, we can move in and be ready for school. If not, we're going to teach in current classrooms (in Willard Hall and King Hall)."

But line schedules for the fall semester list classes as being in the new Chem/Biochem Building, as it has temporarily been named.

"When initial estimates were made in December, we felt we were pretty safe," Paukstelis said. "We thought the building would be completed in April, but four months have stretched to eight."

Minor problems have hindered construction, such as tile not being installed properly, he said.

Delbert Mueller, assistant professor of biochemistry, said plans for the building are intricate, with one of the biggest improvements being the air-handling system.

"Pathetic, noxious fumes have to be routed out," Mueller said, adding that this is a problem in the labs now in Willard.

Cool said the fume hoods in Willard, which was built in 1939, were not fume hoods in the modern sense.

"The difference between the hood systems is the difference between night and day," he said. "No air is recirculated in the new building."

Hoods in the new building have four variable volume fans to supply air and four variable speed fans to exhaust fumes through the hoods, he said.

Paukstelis said 186 fume hoods have been installed in the new building.

Another problem with Willard is the lack of power.

"There is not enough electricity available here," Paukstelis said.

A passageway connects each floor in King to a floor in the new building, except the fourth floor in the Chem/Biochem Building, where biochemistry research will take place.

Inorganic and organic chemistry will be the focus of students and teachers working on the third floor, Mueller said.

The second floor will be student-oriented, with teaching labs, most of which are now in Willard Hall, he said. Much of the equipment for physical chemistry needs a firm, vibration-free foundation, he said, so the first floor will house these items. Electrical and machine shops that are now in King will be moved there.

All chemistry and biochemistry departmental offices will remain in Willard, but there are no definite plans concerning what to do with the newly acquired space in Willard.

"There's a lot of suspicion about what to do with Willard, but no firm decision has been made," Mueller said. "About half of the building will be vacated."

The completion of the building is only 45 percent a two-phase plan for a chemistry and biochemistry facility. The second phase, which has been approved by the Board of Regents but awaits funding, will allow for the total move of chemistry and biochemistry departments out of Willard Hall.

Staff/Chris Assaf

Stan Claypole, of Shelley Electric of Wichita, wires the electrical system of a fume hood in a lab room of the new Chem/Biochem Building. Officials are hoping to begin the moving-in process in July.

'School' status gives journalism new image

Since that fateful day in the spring of 1987 when the then "Department" of Journalism and Mass Communications lost its accreditation, the program has struggled to regain its status among journalism programs nationwide.

But one part of the struggle to overcome the loss of status was being waged right here in Kansas. With the William Allen White School of Journalism right next door at the University of Kansas, the K-State journalism department took a firm slap in the face with the loss of accreditation.

Instead of rolling over and playing dead like the dog many expected the department to become, K-State's journalism program worked to achieve better funding and the latest good news to be received by its members — K-State's journalism program is now the School of Journalism and Mass Communications, and the name change is more than just semantics.

The decision by the Board of Regents on May 19 to approve the department's request for a change in status from a department to a school will likely enable the journalism program to gain additional funding and the additional respect it lost following the loss of accreditation.

Now the School of Journalism and Mass Communications, with the largest number of students of any program within the College of Arts and Sciences, is one progressive step closer to its goals of regaining accreditation and providing the best education possible to its students.

It took a year, but the future is finally beginning to look bright again for K-State's newest school.

New beer symbolizes record of treaty abuse

Nothing typifies this country's first century better than its treatment of the American Indians. Of all the treaties and agreements we made, we seldom honored them.

According to James Michener, there have been only three great cases of attempted genocide — the destruction of a race of human beings — in recorded history. It happened to an obscure tribe in Brazil, to the Jews of Nazi Germany and to the American Indians in the United States.

With that dubious record behind us, one would think Americans would be sorry for the way we treated the American Indians. Apparently, some are not.

A group of hunters, lead by Dean Crist of Minocqua, Wis., is trying to sell a brand of beer to raise money to fight Indian treaty rights.

Yes, you read it correctly, to fight Indian treaties.

This group claims that although the federal government defines Indian tribes as dependent foreign nations, these tribes should not have the right to use their land for their own purposes — like any normal landowner could.

This group would like to force the Indians to stop hunting on their reservations at times other than during specific hunting seasons. They would also like to stop the tribes from using certain hunting methods.

As if this nation hasn't done enough to destroy the native American way of life, here is one more thing we are trying to take from them.

The bright spot in this atrocity is that the group cannot find a brewery to make their Treaty Beer, and thus have raised little money to fund their selfish fight.

It is hoped no one will brew it; and even if someone does, no one should buy it. It would be a shame to allow history to continue as it has.

Puritan ideology outdated; drugs should be made legal

Commentary

JEFF SCHRAG
Collegian Columnist

Drugs should be legal in the United States.

Recently, the debate over whether this should be our next great social issue has been a popular theme in the media.

The credit for raising the nation's consciousness on drug use and abuse belongs to the Reagan Administration.

While their "Just Say No" campaign has failed to bring drug use down, and has actually increased the influx of drugs to this country, they have succeeded in making many people curious about the phenomenon.

And rightly so. The best way to make something more interesting and more desirable is to make it forbidden.

Forbidding things is a very American thing to do.

This is a Puritan nation. No matter how liberal and sinful many Americans think this nation has become, Puritanism still prevails and still rules many of our policies.

Just like their colonial counterparts, many contemporary state legislatures forbid certain sexual acts, even between married individuals. Most Americans are not aware that these laws exist, let alone what particular acts are illegal.

Yet legislators persist in keeping these outdated and unenforceable laws because of the outward statement they make. The logic is that if we say we are against something, then that is enough. It doesn't matter what we do, as long as we say we don't do it.

That philosophy is totally Puritan.

In his history of colonial America, Page Smith describes one Puritan church that found a couple guilty of pre-marital sex if a baby was born to them less than seven months after their wedding.

In these cases, the couple would be required to apologize to the congregation. These instances were so common that a standardized apology was painted on the back wall of the church to speed up the process.

All that mattered to the church was the apology, not the act.

Even with its obvious flaws, this type of Puritan philosophy, revived during the hypocritical Victorian age, still continues.

As a nation, we are approaching the problem of drug abuse in a backward manner. Instead of using the bulk of our nation's resources to understand substance addiction better, or to improve treatment of it, we are fighting a battle to keep drugs out of our citizens' hands. It is a battle we cannot win.

Consider the case of loving parents who want to keep their children from touching hot objects. One method would be to continually watch the children and keep them away from anything hot. These parents will soon learn how difficult it is to give up everything else in order to watch the children.

The parents would be much wiser to teach the children why they shouldn't touch the hot object. Then, even when the parents weren't around, the children would be protected.

Mistakes will happen, since they are part of the learning process. But just as the parents cannot always be with the children, the government cannot rid this country of drugs.

I claim we should not try.

It is at this point when some may find this argument flawed. They would say that it is the same as saying, "We cannot stop murders, so why not make murder legal and stop wasting the time and energy?"

Saying that, both arguments follow the same logic — having no faith in mankind. Certainly people should be protected from one another, but what is so sensible, or necessary, about protecting an individual from himself?

The critics of this argument would probably claim that they do not need protection. It is only the bad people, those who are second-class Americans, who need the protection.

But if normal Americans won't use drugs, then would anything really change in this country if drugs were made legal? Normal people would go on as they always have, and the "bad people" would continue to be "bad" — just as they always have.

This country certainly had no problem functioning during the 1800s and early 1900s when drugs were legal. But maybe everyone who lived at that time was a good person.

To other critics, the legalization of drugs just doesn't sound right. Sure drugs are legal in most countries in the world. Sure they have been legal during most of our country's existence. But it just doesn't sound very clean to make those nasty things legal.

To them I say that considering that we as a nation can overlook the health problems related to tobacco and alcohol, why should legal drugs be that different?

Many people are fond of referring to this country as the great experiment in democracy — one that has obviously succeeded. Experimentation should be a sacred term to us.

We have experimented with many things over the years, including prohibition, abortion, space travel and nuclear energy. Some have failed, while others have succeeded.

Why are we so afraid to experiment with the legalization of drugs? To me, it seems cowardly, and totally opposite to the heritage of advancement that this nation so proudly claims.

Efforts valued

Editor,

The KSU Childcare Cooperative board, parents, staff and children thank you for your persistence in documenting the need and funding for child care and subsidy support from the University and Student Governing Association.

Your commitment to reporting the child care needs and issues on this campus places you on the forefront of progressive thinking about local, state and national issues related to children.

We appreciate your support!

Band overlooked

Editor,

I have a severe bone to pick with the staff of the Royal Purple. Upon leafing through this year's annual, I was shocked and outraged to discover that, through what I hope was a colossal oversight, a group of more than 200 dedicated students was almost totally absent from its pages.

In a book that devoted 10 pages to a winless football team, I felt it was a great injustice that the most visible, vocal and dedicated support group of the athletic program was represented by only three candid photos and absolutely no commentary.

Of course, I am speaking of the Pride of Wildcat Land, the KSU Marching Band. What other group, other than the cheerleaders, spends a minimum of six hours per week rehearsing, plus Saturdays on game weeks, all for the vast return of one credit hour and a free ticket to home football games? This, in addition to all of the other things the band is "asked" to do.

Any time there is a pep rally or alumni gathering within the state, a pep band is expected to be sent. The band is even used for crowd control, such as guarding goalposts after football games. If you noticed us standing along the sidelines immediately following the KU vs. K-State game this year, it was so we could "keep students from storming the field."

While all of these activities generally net the band very little in return, we are required to do them for fear of having our already meager funding reduced. The band is severely understaffed and underfunded, and cuts in money would hurt badly. Our director, Stanley Finck, does with only one graduate assistant what most Big Eight bands use three faculty and three or four graduate assistants to accomplish. He does it for less money as well.

Also, while members of other bands receive stipends of up to $500 per semester, K-State band members receive no money for their efforts in weather conditions ranging from snow to 100-degrees-plus heat.

All of this is not to ask for money and glorious praise to be thrown our way. Most of us are in band because we love music and because we love to get rowdy and bleed purple for our football team. However, it would be nice at the end of the year to look through the annual and see that at least someone appreciates our dedication.

Apathy apparent

Editor,

I am appalled to see the pitifully inadequate funding by the recent Student Senate vote of Students in Solidarity with the Citizens of Central America, not to mention being appalled at the level of debate reported. The discussion and vote demonstrate that while K-State may show signs of improving in its educational atmosphere, there are those who fight to hold it back, repeating the same tired, anti-educational cliches.

I believe most students readily concur that a major educational problem here is apathy and lack of information. This is what holds us back, despite our lecture series, programs, issue-oriented courses and more free and critical press than one encounters in one's local newspapers, and all the other real antidotes K-State offers to apathy.

If this University is to maintain an atmosphere that encourages internationally prominent speakers, presidents of Central American countries, spokesmen for popular rebellions, critics of government policy, the grounding of such energy should be among all the students and their representatives.

We should acknowledge that this is a strong suit of our University. It is no accident that individual students in such "political" organizations have been major recipients of internationally prestigious fellowships and awards, raising the intellectual tenor of the University as a whole.

I would occasionally appreciate hearing debates that acknowledge the highest purpose of the University as education, a responsibility not merely of the administration and faculty. If we can provide, at student expense, portable stereos to use while jogging, we should be able to support student activities that most contribute to the highest function of the University in ways that only students can contribute.

Voice test evaluates truthfulness

By Erwin Seba
Staff Writer

As states pass legislation banning or restricting the use of polygraphs to evaluate job applicants' truthfulness, lie detectors are being replaced by voice stress analyzers.

Voice stress analysis assumes lying is a stressful activity, and can be revealed by stress in the voice, which can in turn be monitored on a voice stress analyzer.

The effectiveness of voice stress analysis to determine truthfulness is questionable, as is the practice of evaluating voice stress over the phone, said Ronald G. Downey, professor of psychology.

"When (security firms) take what is a questionable technique to begin with, and then use it in a method which is more questionable, we have serious questions," Downey said.

Interviews to record voice stress are usually conducted in person using a high quality tape recorder. The tape will then be played for the voice stress analyzer. The analyzer uses filtering and frequency techniques to display the sound waves produced by the voice on a strip of paper.

But, Downey said, many security firms that perform voice stress analysis evaluate the tape recordings over the phone.

The interviews are conducted in person by a trained interviewer, then the tape of the interview is played over the phone to a psychological stress evaluator, the formal name of voice stress analyzer, at the main office of the security firm. The results are studied by a trained rater in the office.

Downey conducted a study with Ronald F. Waln on the uses of telephone recordings in voice stress analysis. Their study revealed that the effectiveness of the test was undermined when the evaluation was made from a tape played over the phone.

"Generally, there was less of a tendency to say a person was lying," Downey said.

While voice stress analysis has been favorably compared with polygraph evaluation, most tests have been performed in criminal situations, where it is known that a crime has been committed. Often the evaluator is testing the person known to have committed the crime.

Such situations are very different from employment testing where an applicant's truthfulness is being evaluated.

Both voice analysis and polygraph tests also use a technique called "bogus pipeline." In the bogus pipeline, a person is connected to a machine and is told the machine will tell the interviewer whether the person is lying. If a person is convinced the machine will catch them lying, he or she will provide truthful answers.

In polygraph testing, the person being tested is told during a preinterview session by the interviewer that the machine will determine if the person is lying. The polygraph interview is then conducted. After the interview, the interviewer again holds a meeting with the person and states the machine can determine if the person is lying, so it would be better if he or she told the truth now.

Downey said polygraph, voice stress analysis and drug testing are most often used to weed out applicants for a job by providing employers with an acceptable reason to eliminate an applicant.

"The value of such testing is run on a morality issue and not on an effectiveness issue," Downey said.

Mere nuisance or threat? Ticks both, officials warn

By Judy Lundstrom
Staff Writer

Summer — a perfect season for outdoor barbecues, campouts and family vacations.

And a perfect season for ticks.

Ticks are blood-sucking parasites that generally inhabit brushy and grassy outdoor sites. Closely related to the spider family, ticks move slowly and their bodies are soft and leathery.

And, though they appear quite harmless, ticks may transmit diseases and their bites should not be taken lightly, said Donald Mock, Extension specialist in livestock entomology.

Peak months

The peak months for tick abundance are May and the first half of June, Mock said, but ticks can be found any time from April to September. While not all species carry diseases and the number of attachments resulting in infection is low, Mock said people should be on the lookout.

"People should bear in mind that most ticks in Kansas aren't carrying a disease," he said. "People should be alert, but not panic just because a tick got on them. But then again, it's highly possible for a person to get one tick mowing the lawn and get a disease."

While ticks are generally found in semi-wooded brush and grassy areas, they can be found in open prairies, on lawns and in weed patches as well, Mock said.

Ticks can bite anywhere on the body, but most often bite the back of the head, shoulders, navel and ear canals. If a tick is found wandering on the body, there is probably no danger of disease transmission, Mock said. The likelihood of transmission is also slim if an individual has reason to believe the tick hasn't been attached for more than two hours, he said.

One way to tell that the tick hasn't been attached long is if it comes off fairly easily, he said.

To remove an attached tick, a person should grasp the tick with tweezers as close as possible to the point of attachment and pull slowly and steadily, said Dr. Robert Tout, director of student health at Lafene Student Health Center. If fingers are used, they should be protected with facial tissue. Because tick secretions can be infective, hands should be washed after removal, and the wound should be washed with soap and water.

Rocky Mountain spotted fever

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is the most notorious of diseases transmitted by ticks. While not contagious, the disease is potentially fatal if not treated.

The disease is named Rocky Mountain spotted fever because that is the area where it was first detected, Tout said. Now, however, the majority of cases occur in areas of the country other than the Rockies.

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is generally transmitted through the bites of infected ticks, which acquire the bacteria Rickettsia rickettsii by sucking blood from an infected small mammal or from an infected parent. Although the disease can occur at any age, children below age 15 are most often infected, mainly because of a greater exposure to dog ticks.

The incubation period of the disease is from three to 12 days, Tout said. The first symptoms are a high fever, severe headache, chills and general body pains. Tout said the fever commonly reaches 105 to 106 degrees. After about four days, a rash develops on the hands and feet and spreads to the neck of the victim.

"It can be mistaken as the flu in the first stages, but the rash clues you in that it's not," Tout said.

The rash is a result of inflammation of arteries and internal organs, which causes clotting of blood in the arteries. In severe untreated cases, the victim experiences uncontrolled bleeding, which leads to shock, kidney failure and death in the second week.

The mortality rate today from Rocky Mountain spotted fever is fairly low, Tout said, especially if antibiotics are started immediately. When therapy is begun before the second week, 95 percent of the victims recover, medical reports say.

Last year, 28 cases of Rocky Mountain spotted fever were reported in Kansas, according to Kansas Department of Health and Environment statistics. Through May 30 of this year, only two cases have been reported, said Bob Moody, public information director at KDHE.

"But we're just getting into the season, so it doesn't necessarily mean there will be fewer cases," Moody said.

A vaccination procedure does exist against Rocky Mountain spotted fever, Tout said. The vaccination is administered in the spring or summer and is repeated annually.

"We haven't had anyone come in for it yet, but if someone does come

Senate sustains trade bill veto

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate handed President Reagan a victory on the trade issue Wednesday, narrowly sustaining his veto and refusing to enact a 1,000-page trade bill into law over his objections.

On the 61-37 vote, 10 Republicans abandoned the White House and supported the override, while just two Democrats voted to sustain Reagan's second veto of a major trade bill in three years.

"This controversy with the president is not about trade, it is not even about economics. It is about politics," Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., declared just before the Senate acted.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, a cosponsor, said, however, "They'll be rejoicing in Japan, they'll be popping champagne corks in Germany" as a result of the action.

The override move fell five votes short of the two-thirds majority needed to override Reagan's veto.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., voted against the measure in a parliamentary move that would allow him to bring the bill back again. He said he hoped constituents would pressure their senators to revive the measure before Congress adjourns for the fall election campaign.

Senate action was accompanied by renewed calls for a more moderate version of the bill, minus provisions opposed by Reagan, that could be signed into law before congressional adjournment.

There also were pointed reminders from both Republican and Democratic lawmakers that Reagan's supporters on the issue could come under political attack for opposing the bill, with its provision to require notice to employees of plant closings and large-scale layoffs.

"We may lose the battle, but we've won the war on this issue," Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., said.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., conceded there were no assurances that a revised bill could win approval this year. He did say it "can be done if the leaders in the Senate and the leaders in the House will agree with the administration and then agree to no more amendments."

Karen McConnell, assistant, polishes a bracelet in Terrell-Pujol's basement workshop. Although gold is no longer the core of the world's monetary system, it still holds great value in the research laboratory and in both the wholesale and retail jewelry markets.

GOLD

A Touch of Midas

Story by Karen Allen Photos by Brad Camp

King Midas turned everything he touched into it, James Bond saved the world from a pathological worshiper of it and Americans journeyed by the thousands to California in 1849 to pan for it.

This heavy yellow metal, which has captivated mankind since its discovery, is symbolized by an Au on the periodic chart of elements, but is more commonly known as gold.

Most scholars agree there is no doubt about the precious metal's captivating ability, and that includes Kenneth Klabunde, professor of chemistry.

Klabunde has been researching the field of metal atoms nearly 18 years. The challenge of finding out how to use gold to make other gold compounds attracted him to metal research, he said.

Klabunde contributes to the Media Resource Service, which was founded by a firm in New York as a national resource for the media in his field of expertise. Next semester he will be on a partial sabbatical, giving lectures in China, Japan and Denmark.

"Gold's intrigue is inbred in us — people don't even think about it," Klabunde said, adding that man's perception of gold has gone through many changes since the Mesopotamians began using it in the first forms of technology about 4,000 years ago.

Man was first attracted to gold because it could be melted and shaped but in the end it was always the same substance, he said. Eventually, gold began to be viewed as the "perfect substance," taking on an almost religious connotation.

"Some actually believed that it was God's wish that eventually everything would turn to gold," he said.

The metal continues to have ties with modern-day religion as evidenced by the following story.

Recently, Klabunde was contacted by a reporter from Duluth, Minn., who was pursuing a story about the possibility of silver rosaries turning to gold by the power of prayer.

Women in California and Minnesota have reported related incidents of the bizarre happenings, Klabunde said. However, there is no way for this to happen chemically, he said. The rosaries are probably made from silver compounds, causing them to tarnish over time, he said.

In 1000 A.D., alchemists became so obsessed with gold they tried to fashion the metal from other substances and hence gave the science of chemistry its birth. In some countries, the advancement of chemistry was delayed by those who tried to use gold for medicinal purposes and found an adverse effect. Chinese scientists fed gold in a purple-colored solution to their emperors, who died after drinking the mercury-contaminated substance, Klabunde said.

Gold eventually became associated with the wealthy as more countries based their monetary system on it. The idea of gold as the standard for all monetary transactions was in use until 1971, when the international convertibility of the dollar for gold was abolished.

Although gold is no longer the core of the world's monetary system, it still holds great value in the research laboratory and in both the wholesale and retail jewelry markets.

Klabunde said that although gold is one of the least reactive elements, scientists can study it in the form of a single atom to discover new possibilites for the metal.

One ounce of gold costs about $450, according to Laurel Zimmerman, manager of Danenberg's Holiday Jewelers.

"There is something electric about gold — it has an air of preciousness," Zimmerman said, adding that customers choose 14-carat gold 10 times to one over gold-filled jewelry.

Barbara Terrell-Pujol, Manhattan, spends her days making gold and silver jewelry, which she sells wholesale to art galleries across the country and to Saks Fifth Avenue, a national department store chain. She recently completed a limited edition line called "Pleats and Satin," which will be on display this summer at galleries in Carmel and Palo Alto, Calif.

She said she has enjoyed working with art galleries because they offer "total freedom and I never get bored."

Terrell-Pujol first became interested in the art of goldsmithing when she was a student in the art department at K-State and she said she's been hooked ever since.

Like so many others before her, she also acknowledged her love of gold.

"It's so forgiving if you make a mistake ... all you have to do is hammer it out and start again," Terrell-Pujol said.

The softness of the metal makes it a very workable, malleable element, she said.

"If you had one ounce of gold, it would stretch from New York to Philadelphia — that's how malleable it is."

Hunt for new athletic director may end sooner than expected

By Tom Perrin
Summer Life/City Editor

The wait to fill the vacant K-State athletic director position may not be as long as was originally thought.

Thirty to 40 applications for the job have already been received, and the time frame to hire a new director has been reduced.

According to Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement and chairman of the 13-member search committee, said K-State may have a new athletic director when the athletic department offices begin moving to Bramlage Coliseum July 5.

The target date to hire a new person was first set for Aug. 1. Former Athletic Director Larry Travis resigned April 28, citing "burnout."

"Some very qualified applicants have applied so far," Krause said. "Now we're just trying to tease out the best ones and rate their abilities. I'm pleased with the pool of applicants we have received so far."

The deadline for applications is June 12. Three of the leading candidates are believed to be former K-State associate athletic director and track coach Steve Miller, University of Northern Iowa Athletic Director Bob Bowlsby, and University of Texas Assistant Athletic Director Craig Helwig. No applications have been received so far from people currently employed at K-State, according to Krause.

The committee will first narrow the field of candidates to eight to 10 people, then further cut the list to three after interviews. The unranked list of three will then be given to President Jon Wefald to make the final selection.

Wefald said that experience with K-State wasn't a prerequisite, but would be taken into consideration.

"If we have three finalists and they're all relatively equal, that would be a plus, but I don't think we should rule out those without ties," he said.

"I'm not looking at K-State as a stepping stone. I think it has great potential and is ready to make a monumental step forward. I think it would be a great marriage."
—Steve Miller

Miller has made no attempt to hide his interest in the job.

"I'm interested, I made an application, and I love K-State," Miller said. "We'll just have to see what happens."

Miller, K-State track and cross country coach from 1981-86 and associate athletic director in 1986-87, is currently the executive director of the Special Olympics in Pennsylvania.

"I'm not looking at K-State as a stepping stone. I think it has great potential and is ready to make a monumental step forward," Miller said. "I think it would be a great marriage."

Miller has spoken to Krause once since making his application, but he said he has no idea where he stands in the selection process.

"In terms of having any feeling or inkling, I don't," he said. "I wish I knew. If I did, then I could sleep a whole lot easier."

Bowlsby has been at Northern Iowa for the past eight years, the last five as athletic director and the first three as an assistant athletic director in charge of facilities, including the 12,000-seat UNIDome. Both the Northern Iowa football and basketball teams play in the UNIDome, which is also used for concerts and exhibitions.

Northern Iowa is a National Collegiate Athletics Association Division I institution and a member of the Mid-Continent Conference. The UNI athletic program has made improvements in the past few years, particularly in football, where they have been a perennial power in NCAA Division I-AA. Northern Iowa defeated K-State (which is classified Division I-A in football and can grant more scholarships) in both 1985 and 1986 at KSU Stadium.

"I haven't had an opportunity to ask all the right questions yet. What I do know is that they have a lot of outstanding people, some outstanding coaches," Bowlsby said. "Having the new arena makes the situation attractive, too."

Bowlsby likened the situation at K-State to the one he has faced at Northern Iowa. Like K-State, Northern Iowa has had the task of building a competitive athletic program with limited funding.

Bowlsby said he hadn't spoken with any K-State representatives, but that he knew that some of his references had already been called.

Helwig was an assistant athletic director at K-State from 1978-82 before moving on to Texas where he works under former K-State Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds. Helwig was out of his office Wednesday afternoon and could not be reached at his home Wednesday evening.

Since Travis' resignation, Krause has essentially been running the athletic department along with Jim Epps, who is serving as an assistant athletic director. Epps has formerly worked as an special assistant to football Coach Stan Parrish and was also an academic counselor for the football team. Krause said Epps was coordinating the non-revenue sports (track, baseball, volleyball, golf, tennis and cross country) and handling the day-to-day business in the department.

"I wouldn't consider myself the interim athletic director," Krause said. "It's a matter of having people report to me in a team approach."

Other administrative staff members remaining in the main athletic department offices are Craig Renfro, director of the Mike Ahearn Scholar-

Sun Devils nip Wichita State

By The Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Pat Litsach's RBI single capped a two-run ninth-inning rally and Martin Peralta singled in the winning run in the 10th as Arizona State rallied for a 4-3 victory over Wichita State Wednesday night to stay alive in the College World Series.

Arizona State, 59-12, trailed 3-1 entering the ninth inning. But John Rumsey opened the inning with a double and scored on Ricky Candelari's RBI single. Candelari went to second on Mike Burrola's third single of the game and scored on Listach's two-strike hit.

Kevin Higgins and Steve Willis started the 10th inning with walks. Peralta then singled off Jim Newlin, 0-1, scoring Higgins with the go-ahead run.

Wichita State, which beat ASU 7-4 Sunday night, meets the Sun Devils Friday night for a berth in Saturday's championship game. Fullerton State can earn the other berth by defeating defending champion Stanford tonight.

ASU's comeback denied Wichita State starter David Haas his 50th career victory. Haas, who allowed 10 hits and three runs in 8 2-3 innings, is third on the NCAA's all-time list.

The Shockers, 56-15-1, scored all their runs in the first inning off ASU starter Linty Ingram, the winningest pitcher in Division I this season.

Mike Lansing opened the bottom of the first with a single, stole his 51st base of the year, moved to third on a wild pitch and scored on Dan Raley's single for a quick 1-0 lead.

Mark Standiford, who had three hits, singled in P.J. Forbes and Raley scored when Eric Wedge grounded into a double play.

Pistons' Laimbeer may miss Game 2

By The Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Center Bill Laimbeer, who has played in 695 consecutive games for the Detroit Pistons, missed practice with a sprained arch Wednesday and was a questionable starter for Game 2 of the NBA finals.

Magic Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers also missed practice because of illness, but the team was hopeful that he would recover in time for Thursday's game.

Detroit won the opener 105-93 Tuesday night, its fifth victory in the last six road games.

Laimbeer, who has the NBA's longest current streak of 646 consecutive regular-season games, also has 49 straight playoff appearances. He was limping badly on his left foot before practice.

"If we played tonight, I couldn't play," he said. "The team says I'm doubtful, but I say I'm probable."

Laimbeer said James Worthy fell on his foot in the first half Tuesday night, and "it just got worse and worse." Worthy injured his hip when he fell, but he practiced with the Lakers Wednesday.

"I'm not sure we can win without him and his rebounding," Pistons coach Chuck Daly said of Laimbeer.

Laimbeer's injury took some of the joy from the Pistons' workout where talk of the club's defense dominated. Earlier, Adrian Dantley was talking about it, even after the most memorable offensive performance of his 12-year NBA career.

Dantley treated Game 1 as if it were a layup drill, hitting 14 of 16 shots and scoring 34 points.

Dantley, who helped hold Larry Bird to 35.1 percent shooting in the conference finals against Boston, was active again on defense as Detroit held the high-powered Lakers to 39.8 percent shooting.

"I've always played defense, but when people talk about me, they talk about my offense," said Dantley, the NBA's 10th all-time leading scorer. "The last time I played this hard on defense was in the 1976 Olympics. Defense is how we've been winning all our games this year."

The Pistons played a near-perfect first half Tuesday, taking a 57-40 lead while shooting 61 percent from the field and holding the Lakers to 34 percent.

White's 3 RBI lead Royals past A's

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Frank White drove in three runs, including a go-ahead two-run single in the sixth inning, as the Kansas City Royals beat the Oakland Athletics 5-4 Wednesday night to complete a three-game series sweep.

Matt Sinatro, without a major-league hit since 1983, drove in all four Oakland runs with a pair of two-run doubles but could not save the Athletics from their first four-game losing streak of the season.

The red-hot Royals, closing to within 7½ games of the Athletics, have won seven straight and nine in a row at Royals Stadium.

Bret Saberhagen, 8-5, gave up 11 hits in 7⅓ innings and outdueled Dave Stewart, 9-4. Jeff Montgomery, recently called up from Omaha of the American Association, pitched 1⅓ innings for his first major-league save.

Sinatro, activated Wednesday after being called up from Tacoma, ended Oakland's streak of 23 consecutive scoreless innings in the second when he doubled to score Mark McGwire and Walt Weiss.

George Brett walked and Danny Tartabull singled to open the Royals' fourth, moved up on a sacrifice and scored on Bill Buckner's two-run double. Stewart's wild pitch moved Buckner to third and White's RBI double gave the Royals a 3-2 lead.

Tartabull and Kevin Seitzer singled opening the sixth and moved up on Buckner'sacrifice. White then singled to put the Royals ahead 5-4.

State primaries end

Focus turns to running mates

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Michael Dukakis and George Bush are starting to get serious about choosing running mates, with Dukakis facing an increasingly insistent Jesse Jackson who says he has earned an offer of the job.

Dukakis quickly rejected that notion on Wednesday.

"I don't think anyone is due an offer. But there are a great many people that are going to be considered and he'll be one of them," the Massachusetts governor said.

Dukakis locked up the Democratic presidential nomination in Tuesday's final primaries, setting up his fall matchup with Bush, who has had the GOP nomination in hand since late April.

Clinching the nomination freed Dukakis to finally admit he is thinking about a running mate, while Bush has been holding private talks on the matter for several weeks. For both, picking a vice presidential nominee is the next step in building what they hope will be an Electoral College majority in November.

The vice president, trailing in the polls, has made it clear he will be happy to let Dukakis go first, an option granted him by the calendar.

Dukakis must make his choice in time for it to be ratified by the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta in July. The No. 2 spot on the GOP ticket does not have to be filled until almost a month later, when the Republicans gather in New Orleans.

In the past week, Jackson has marched firmly to the front of the line of Democratic politicians asking for consideration for a spot on the ticket. On Wednesday, he went further, contending that his second-place finish in the Democratic race means he deserves to actually be offered the No. 2 spot.

"Consideration does mean an offer; it does not mean just in passing," Jackson said.

Jackson adviser Ann Lewis put it this way: "It is essential that any short list begin with Jackson. And it is essential that the decision be made with him — not just communicated to him after it is made."

There is substantial resistance in the party to Jackson.

"Jesse on the ticket would destroy it," said veteran New York activist and labor lawyer Charles Torche. "There are still a lot of black haters out there."

Dukakis is getting a lot of advice to pick a Southerner to help him in that region or to choose a moderate senator such as John Glenn of Ohio.

"With the proper running mate, the South will be for Dukakis," said Arkansas Democratic Party executive director Kip Blakely. "What he needs is a Southern senator."

In addition to Glenn, other possible vice presidential choices include Sens. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, Bill Bradley of New Jersey, Bob Graham of Florida, Lloyd Bensten of Texas, Sam Nunn of Georgia and Dale Bumpers of Arkansas.

Jackson had a quick retort to those who are pushing Southern senators, laying out his primary record in the region.

"No senator, no congressperson can match those credentials. I heard someone say earlier today we need somebody from the South. Well, I'm from the South, someone who can win in the South; I won Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Louisiana."

While Dukakis wrestles with the Jackson problem, Bush faces a big deficit in the polls, particularly among the nation's women.

And that may suggest that Bush could pick a woman for the Republican ticket — breaking a historic barrier in the party.

Among female candidates most frequently mentioned by Bush advisers are Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas, former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

Repayment of GSLs looming on horizon for spring grads

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

"If I fail to repay my loan as agreed, the total amount borrowed may become due and payable immediately or legal action can be taken against me."

This statement is one of eight included in a summary of rights and responsibilities that must be signed by all Guaranteed Student Loan recipients upon graduation.

At the end of the spring semeter, 979 of 1,826 — 54 percent — of K-State's graduates had to sign their names to the summary, marking an end to the college years of borrowing money and the beginning of what could be years of paying bills.

But not all hope is lost. Graduates receive a six-month grace period to repay their loans, and in some cases, the payments are as small as $50 per month, said Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance.

GSLs are available to students who show a need for them, he said, adding that once they are approved by the Office of Student Financial Assistance, the remaining transactions occur between the student and the lender. K-State is not responsible when a graduate defaults on a loan, which can happen if a student does not meet even the first two or three payments, Viterna said.

"It's up to the guarantee agency to try to collect," he said.

Several institutions in Manhattan loan money to students and act as the guarantee agency.

Kansas State Bank loans out about $4 million to the approximately 2,000 students who make a contract with the bank each year.

People's Heritage of Manhattan, which serves as the central bank for GSLs for all its 19 Kansas branches, services about 1,800 students per year.

According to the Higher Education Assistance Foundation, K-State's student default rate is a little more than 8 percent, Viterna said, adding that the percentage is comparable to the rest of the Big Eight Conference universities.

Although students are legally out on their own upon graduation, the Office of Student Financial Assistance started a program this year to better prepare graduates for dealing with the legalities of repaying a student loan.

Students could attend one of four sessions where, among other things, the summary of rights and responsibilities was explained to them. If students did not attend the session, a packet was mailed to them explaining the road that was ahead of them.

"We try to be very clear up front about what a student loan is," Viterna said. "The majority of the people who default on a loan do so because they either didn't understand (the loan details) or they just don't have the money."

Graduates have a maximum of 10 years of making payments to repay their loan, and that time frame can be lengthened to 20 years for extenuating circumstances, he said.

No matter what their future may hold, however, some K-Staters believe taking out a loan is worth all the trouble.

"My education is worth a lot," said Terri Aumiller, senior in English. "But it never really hits you that you have to pay it back."

Andrea Shelton, graduate in student counseling and personal services, had her loan deferred because she went on to graduate school. But she is not worried about having any trouble with her loan upon graduation next May.

"You have to keep up with your lender company," Shelton said. "They will work with you if you're willing to work with them."

'Colors' controversial, thought provoking

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

Why do we go to the movies? In Manhattan, going to the movies is usually a social event. We go to the movies to be entertained. Infrequently a movie makes it to the local theaters which seems to make a wave in our entertainment routine. Once in a blue moon a film comes to town with the purpose of making us think rather than laugh or scream with excitement.

The other night I went to see "Colors," the controversial film, directed by the somewhat controversial actor/director Dennis Hopper. "Colors" was not entertaining. It was cold, hard, confusing, violent, and above all disturbing.

The film opens with a shot of a van rolling down a dark Los Angeles street. The guys inside are talking and smoking, just killing another evening. The van slows in front of a small house, a shotgun slips out of the window and explodes, knocking one man into the ground, and bringing the quiet neighborhood to life.

This is not the end of the story, or the beginning. This murder represents a day in the life of a city inflicted with the disease of gangs.

As "Colors" progresses we become aware that the kid who was shot was a "Blood," and the kids who shot him were "Crips." Moreover it becomes apparent that the only reason why a boy lost his life was because he was a member of the wrong gang.

In the following scenes we are introduced to the law. Robert Duvall is featured as a steetwise cop who has had to deal with gangs since his first days on the force. Duvall's antithesis and partner is played by Sean Penn. His character is young and green and determined to do whatever it takes to work against the terror of the gangs — even if it means fighting fire with fire.

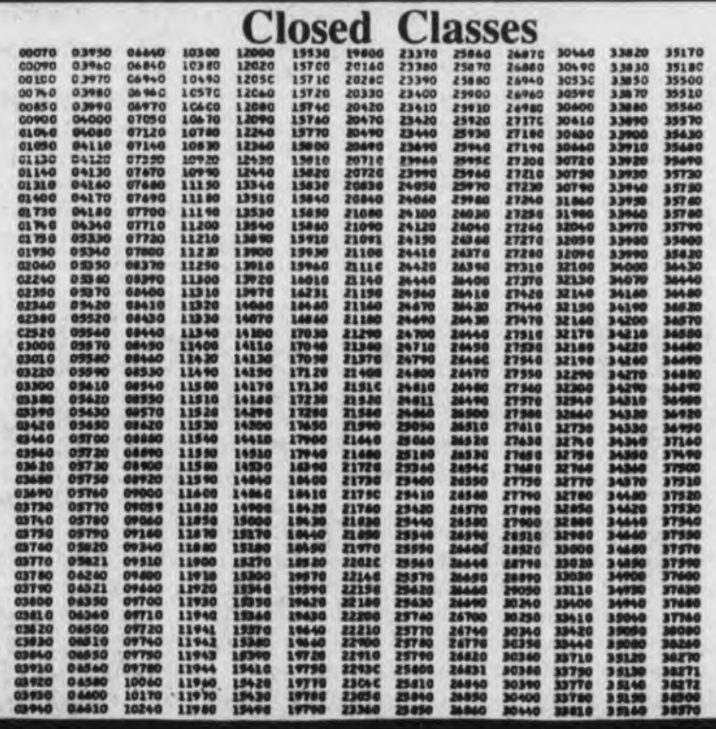
Hopper creates a triad around which the movie flows. For a few minutes the film is presented to the audience through the eyes of the policeman, then the focus shifts to the people of the community, and of course "Colors" also runs with the gangs.

Shifting the focus from group to group leaves the audience not knowing who to identify with. Initially we identify with the law. It is seems obvious that the police are doing everything they can to help the community. Then overzealous Penn sprays paint in a kid's face to teach him a lesson. Thus the audience starts to identify with the persecuted gangs.

In the following sequences of the movie the members of the gangs are presented to the audience as victims. They are victims of poverty, illiteracy and drugs, caused by a failing social system which allows many people to just slip through the cracks.

Eventually we witness another gangland shooting where, once again, people are trying to kill each other because they belong to the wrong gang. The only person who dies in this incident is a small child caught in the cross fire. The emotional intensity of this scene makes us share the pain of a grieving father as he cries out loud, "WHY?" and a cop answers, "I don't know, buddy. I don't know."

Once again the movie shifts it's focus, this time to the people of the community. After bouncing us around from group to group, it becomes apparent that Dennis Hopper is trying to show the audience that there are no "good guys" and "bad guys" in this movie. Everyone is doing what he thinks he needs to do to survive. Along the way laws are broken, lives are ruined, and lives are lost.



In larger cities, "Colors" is under fire. Several organizations, including the Guardian Angels, accuse Dennis Hopper of making a film which glorifies gang life. I disagree. This film glorifies nothing. "Colors" is intended to raise questions.

On a lighter note, Herbie Hancock does an excellent job blending music with the movie's intense visual images.

As disturbing as it may be, "Colors" is a good film. It addresses a timely issue which most Kansans know very little about. However, this movie is about more than gangs. Dennis Hopper is trying to tell us that these gangs are a result of a society with problems, a society of which we are a part.

To borrow the words of Ice-T, "Colors" is a story about "war,...a war that won't stop until all wars stop."

Could you use money from Home next semester?

Whether you're starting out for college or finishing up a graduate degree, there's one tough subject you'll have to face next semester.

Tuition.

The good news is, Home State Bank can help you find the money for college. Because just last year, more than 1,000 students received their low interest loans from us.

So, if you have an intense desire for that college diploma, come to Home State Bank. We have just the loan program for you.

Under the Guaranteed Student Loan program, for example, you don't need collateral, a cosigner, or an established credit rating. First and second-year students can receive up to $2,625 a year. For third and fourth-year students, up to $4,000 a year. You make no payments until six months after graduation or after you become a part-time student.

If you're studying in the health professions, there's a HEAL loan program with a special low rate.

In addition, some students receive Supplemental Loans for Students (SLS), and parents of undergraduates can receive loans for college costs through the Parent Loans program.

To receive your student loan application, call Connie Holmes at 321-3333. Your application will be processed and mailed to the school of your choice within 10 days.

Now, isn't that a good reason to call Home?

Bioserve: biology in outer space

By The Collegian Staff

Biologists and engineers attending the Cell and Developmental Biology Workshop, scheduled for Sunday through Wednesday on campus, will have the opportunity not only to attend lectures but to conduct experiments in the field, said Kenneth Buyle, special assistant for Bioserve Space Technologies.

Since Bioserve is a sponsor of the workshop, one of the purposes of the event is to promote the uses of biological research in outer space, Buyle said.

"We're trying to do it with a new awareness as to what space might be offering," he said.

During the workshop, participants will hear lectures in the morning and will conduct the experiments in groups of two or three in the afternoon. Buyle said the experiments have been designed for the workshop and will use plant and animal cells. Workshop participants will not be experimenting on live animals, he said.

Bioserve Space Technologies is a national center for the commercial development of outer space established on campus in October 1987. It is funded by a five-year grant from NASA and receives additonal funding from private corporations.

Buyle said NASA is interested in research on how to sustain life in outer space for longer periods of time and "anything that will improve the health and comfort of astronauts" as well as in other areas.

Another purpose of Bioserve is educational, Buyle said.

"The discoveries in the next 20 years are going to be the results of the work of the people who are trained here," he said.

Thora Halsted, manager of the space biology program for NASA, will deliver a lecture titled "Future Possibilities of Space Biological Research" at 7 p.m., Monday, in Ackert Hall 120. The lecture is open to the public.

"NASA has certain objectives in the next 20 years. She has a unique perspective on those objectives," Buyle said.

Scorching temps dangerous for pets

By Deron Johnson
Staff Writer

Although Wednesday's 98-degree temperature may have been a nuisance for humans, it could have been fatal to improperly cared-for pets.

When the mercury soars, local officials say they notice a similar increase in calls from people concerned with the safety of animals.

"The check-welfare-of-animal calls dramatically increase anytime the weather gets bad — and appropriately so," said Lt. Scott Campbell of the Riley County Police Department.

Chuck Murphy, administrator/health officer with the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department, said most calls don't deal with extreme neglect.

"A lot of the situations involve puppies or other lively animals that oftentimes turn over their water bowls," Murphy said. "We saw quite a few calls the past few days."

Murphy said the department — which oversees the county's animal wardens — tries to ensure that pets have fresh water and adequate shade.

"Owners of pets should be especially cautious this time of the year when the temperatures get hotter," he said.

Manhattan Ordinance No. 447.3 states that animals must be provided food, water, shade and protection, Murphy said, and any owner who fails to provide those things could be charged with cruelty to animals.

Julia Cleland, volunteer with the Riley County Humane Society, said calls concerning animals in immediate danger are infrequent.

"Occasionally, we get a call (involving) a long period of neglect, but it's not very frequent," she said.

When the Humane Society receives a call, people are dispatched to the home to survey the animal's situation.

If the animal is in danger, the owner is told about the problem and "usually they cooperate," Cleland said. However, if owners don't take steps to improve the animal's safety, the Humane Society can step in and remove the animal from the premises.

"Our officers are empowered to take (an animal) if it's obvious that it's not being treated right," she said.

Hot, dry weather forces wheat harvest to begin earlier than expected in state

By The Associated Press

WELLINGTON — The 1988 Kansas wheat harvest began in earnest Wednesday as hot, dry weather ripened the crop faster than anticipated.

Elevator managers and others had estimated cutting would start early next week.

The first loads came in Tuesday at South Haven in Sumner County near the Oklahoma border, said Cleo Seimers, temporary farm labor representative in the state harvest office in Wellington.

By Wednesday afternoon, temperatures around 100 degrees prompted numerous farmers in south-central border counties to try their fields.

"We're just getting started, really. I told them all the time we'd be in there before next week," said Seimers, who has been helping the state Department of Human Resources match farmers needing help with harvest crews and equipment since 1973.

"We won't be in full swing for several days yet. Some are test cutting and others are being told to keep on because it's all right," she said.

While elevator operators said it was too soon to gauge average yields, they reported moisture content in an acceptable range starting around 11 percent and test weights near the 60-pound per bushel benchmark.

High-moisture wheat, with around a 14 percent moisture content, usually is refused by elevators because it can't be safely stored until it is dried.

"If they can just get a good price for it now we might have some happy farmers for a change," Seimers said.

Wallace McDaniel at the McDaniel-Waples Inc. elevator in Rome said a handful of farmers were successfully cutting in his area.

"We started sooner because of the warm weather and we haven't had much rain here lately," he said.

Melvin Mason of Wellington harvested in his fields 15 miles south of Wellington on Wednesday.

Darrell McCammon at the Cargill Inc. elevator in Wellington said the Mason wheat had a test weight of 61.5 pounds per bushel and a moisture content of 12.7 percent. It had a protein content of 10.98 percent, McCammon said.

Sumner County traditionally is one of the leading counties in wheat production in the state, and one of the first to start cutting.

In Barber County, farther west, Jim Reed manager of the O-K Co-op Grain Co. elevator in Kiowa said wheat was coming in from fields just across the border in Oklahoma and a few in Kansas.

GREAT COMMISSION CHURCH
Statement of Faith:

We believe the Bible to be the inspired, the only infallible, authoritative Word of God.
We believe there is one almighty, perfect and triune God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, eternally coexistent personalities of the same essence.
We believe in the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, in His virgin birth, His sinless life, His substitutionary death, His bodily resurrection, His ascension to the right hand of the Father and His personal return in power and glory.
We believe in the personality of the Holy Spirit, and in His ministry of convicting and regenerating sinful men, and indwelling, sealing and empowering believers.
We believe in the fall of man from the state of innocence in which he was created to one of total depravity in which he is devoid of spiritual life, and incapable, apart from divine power, of pleasing God.
We believe in the justification of the sinner by grace through faith alone.
We believe that the church universal is composed of all true believers and that its members should assemble themselves together in local churches for worship, prayer, fellowship and teaching with a view to being equipped to fulfill the Great Commission.
We believe in the bodily resurrection of the saved to immortality, and in the conscious eternal suffering of the lost.

Graduation canceled

Officials fear violence, suicides

By The Associated Press

FAIRVIEW, Pa. — Officials canceled final exams and graduation for the senior class at Fairview High School, saying they feared a group of students planned to commit suicide or other violence during ceremonies.

"It's more than just pranks," Frank Kroto, Fairview School District solicitor, said Wednesday. "It's more than the typical end of the year dissatisfaction with authority."

Kroto also said several school administrators received personal threats and were being protected by police. He did not give details, but state police said troopers were patrolling near some administrators' homes.

Officials said they have evidence of a suicide pact among friends of a senior who fatally shot himself at home with a .44-caliber Magnum handgun at Christmas in the presence of another student. Officials said another, similar handgun was stolen from the dead student's home and has not been recovered.

Police heard some students were planning to make graduation "a memorable graduation, one that they would never forget," The Erie Daily Times reported Wednesday.

School Board President Barbara Junker, who announced the cancellation at a tense board meeting Tuesday night, said several students she did not identify "threatened to cause serious disruption at this year's graduation."

Junker said officials could not guarantee the safety of students and relatives at baccalaureate ceremonies today and at graduation Sunday for 150 seniors.

> "The problem is if one person on this stage shoots himself or someone else, the board is responsible."
> — Frank Kroto, Fairview School District solicitor

Teachers will issue final grades on the basis of students' school work.

"The problem is if one person on this stage shoots himself or someone else, the board is responsible," Kroto said at the meeting, adding that officials have "evidence there is a possibility this could happen."

Kroto said many parents agreed with the board's action, but one mother, who was not identified by the newspaper, said officials were acting on "a bunch of rumors, none of them based on any evidence."

Senior Neal Loenslein said he's talked to other students, has found no students with weapons and doesn't believe in the existence of a suicide pact.

"Everyone I've talked to doesn't know anything about guns or anything," he said. "It's all coming from the administration."

The board, he said, "built all this out of nothing."

Kroto said he could not explain what might be driving the students to contemplate killing themselves.

One female student told police that four or five students were involved and that they were from affluent families in this Lake Erie suburb of about 7,500 people, according to the newspaper, which did not identify her.

"They're not the leather-jacket types. They have a reputation as partiers. They're known by everybody," the newspaper quoted her as saying.

Although psychologists and psychiatrists have been working with students and teachers since the senior committed suicide, Junker said there was still "a certain segment that the counselors warn could be potentially threatening to either themselves and possibly others."

Local arson rate constant

By The Collegian Staff

Statistics released by the Kansas Committee on Arson Prevention June 2 indicate that reported arsons dropped statewide in 1987, but according to Manhattan Fire Marshall Larry Wesche, the local arson rate has undergone little change.

"Manhattan has really stayed pretty constant," he said. "The dollar value on damage for 1987 was down compared to years of the large fires such as Ramey Lumber, but the actual number of arsons is about the same."

Nineteen Manhattan fires were attributed to arson last year, and five of those were on the K-State campus, according to the Manhattan Fire Department.

Arson caused $25,000 in property damage in Manhattan last year.

Wesche said that arson made up 9.27 percent of the total number of local fires in 1987, compared to a 10 percent rate statewide.

Arsons on the K-State campus do pose a problem, Wesche said.

"The major problem is the fires set for pranks in the trash chutes of the dorms," he said.

"Fortunately, the dorms with trash chutes have sprinkler systems, so little dollar damage is done," he said. "It does smoke up the rooms and cause some excitement, which is probably what the arsonists are after."

K-State Police file charges in about one-third of these instances, Wesche said.

Information about local arson is handled through the Crimestoppers program of the Riley County Police Department. Kansans can also report arson information by calling 1-800-KS-CRIME.

Americans' views, jokes, writing paint 'simple' picture of state

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Kansans have heard many jokes and anecdotes concerning their native state. Now they have the opportunity to read about the state's long-standing negative reputation. "Hayseeds, Moralizers & Methodists: The Twentieth-Century Image of Kansas," documents the images commonly found in jokes and myths about Kansas, said Robert Smith Bader, adjunct professor of history and author of the book.

Bader said his inspiration for the subject came from a combination of his childhood memories and an interest in Kansas.

"I was conditioned to believe that Kansas was the axis mundi, or center, of the world," he said.

As an adult, however, Bader said he came to a rather abrupt realization that Kansas is too often the butt of jokes. A few of the main myths revolve around the flat endless prairies, tornadoes and the plainness of Kansans.

A closer examination of magazine articles, newspaper clippings and lines from movies and television programs revealed the data necessary for a book on the subject. After a 10-year collection period during which he gathered more than 2,000 items, Bader has published his findings.

"This is not information you could just get from the state historical society. I had to build my own files," he said.

A careful analysis of the data reveals a traditional historical connection between Kansas and certain characteristics, such as drabness and Puritanical ideas, that other people recognize and believe represent the state, Bader said.

"When you see the same things reappearing, you know people have some idea that Kansas is simple," he said. "You can't make a mountain out of one piece of evidence, but all the pieces together do add up."

South Africans end longest general strike

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Blacks ended their largest and longest general strike Wednesday, with anti-apartheid activists calling it a victory over restrictions imposed by South Africa's white authorities.

Employers estimated the three-day protest, involving more than 2 million workers and students, cost the economy $250 million.

At least 10 people were killed, 38 wounded or injured and 36 arrested, and many commuter buses and trains were attacked.

Black labor federations, supported by prominent clergymen, organized the protest to express opposition to restrictions put on anti-apartheid groups Feb. 24 and proposed legislation that would limit the rights of unions to strike.

"The stayaway is an indication of the determination of the people to oppose the apartheid government," said the Rev. Frank Chikane, general secretary of the South African Council of Churches. "It means the February restrictions have not suppressed the spirit of resistance."

Security forces maintained a relatively low profile during the protest and government officials made virtually no public statements about it, but employers threatened to reduce work forces and move toward mechanization if political strikes continue.

Black miners virtually ignored the strike and kept the most lucrative industry operating almost normally despite support for the protest by the National Union of Mineworkers leadership. Mining produces 80 percent of South Africa's export earnings.

An editorial in Business Day, the leading financial newspaper, said the reluctance of miners "to play the political games of their leaders may be the first sign of dawning awareness that they, too, have a great deal to lose."

Bobby Godsell, chairman of a committee representing major employer associations, said there still was a chance management and black workers could negotiate an agreement on the labor bill, but declared:

"It didn't require a three-day stayaway to get to where we are. It isn't a sensible way of seeking an alliance with employers. It will leave a legacy of hardened attitudes."

The Congress of South African Trade Unions, the largest black labor federation, asked employers to join an independent inquiry into the effects of the labor bill.

A statement from the congress said it would consider meeting with Manpower Minister Pieter du Plessis to discuss the bill before it is passed.

"Any repressive and punitive action against workers who took part in the protest would jeopardize the negotiations," it said.

Supporters and critics of the protest agreed the level of participation nationwide fell each day, but that more than two-thirds of black workers in Johannesburg and Durban, the country's largest and third-largest cities, skipped work all three days.

A high of about 3 million workers participated Monday, with the figure dropping slightly thereafter, the labor congress maintained, but other estimates said 1.5 million to 2 million workers were involved.

President P.W. Botha declared the emergency June 12, 1986, to combat a black uprising against apartheid, the racial policy that preserves power for South Africa's 5 million whites and denies a voice in national affairs to the 26 million blacks.

It is expected to be renewed this week for a third year. The state of emergency gives police sweeping powers of detention without trial, imposes press restrictions and outlaws several forms of peaceful protest.

Diesel

in a landfill," said Chuck Linn, chief of the solid waste section of the bureau of waste management. "They shouldn't do anything like that. That's ridiculous."

Linn said the landfill is occasionally allowed to accept a load of soil that has been contaminated with fuel, because the soil can be aired out and the fuel will evaporate. But dumping the fuel directly on the ground is different, he said.

"That's just asking for trouble," he said. "They should know better than doing that."

Linn said while current contaminants found in groundwater near the landfill do not include diesel, the possibility exists that diesel dumped on the ground could get into the groundwater.

The landfill has been a subject of controversy since the fall of 1985, when cancer-causing agents were detected in water on Sweet's property adjacent to the landfill. More contamination was discovered in November 1986 on private property southeast of the landfill.

On July 17, 1987, KDHE issued a closure order giving Riley County commissioners until July 1990 to shut down the landfill and institute a new form of waste disposal. The order was issued because water tests indicated "beyond a reasonable doubt that contaminated groundwater from the Riley County Landfill has migrated beyond the boundaries of the landfill and has contaminated groundwater...."

Until the closure date, however, it's business as usual at the landfill, where about 135 tons of trash are taken in each day.

But the fact that the landfill has been ordered to close does not give people free reign to dump whatever they choose out there, Linn said.

"Heavens, no," he said. "That's why they closed it in the first place."

Foxes

Kansas Fish and Game Commission told campus police to leave the animals alone. And that's something that surprised Taussig.

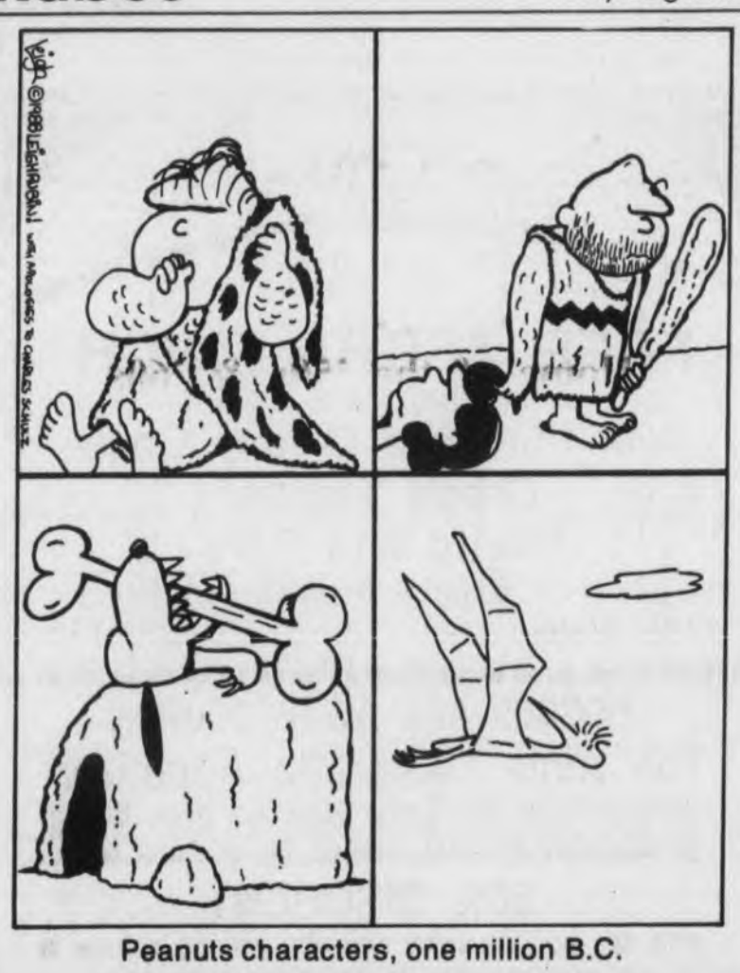
"I would think the Kansas Fish and Game people would take some responsibility (and remove the foxes from campus)," he said. "It's a no-win situation for everybody — including the foxes."

Brad Simpson, program aide with the Kansas Fish and Game Commission, said the foxes were left alone because there was more potential harm in moving them than letting them remain on campus.

"There's no danger to (the foxes) and no danger to humans," he said. "If there was a danger, (we) would sure take care of it."

When informed about the reported bite, Simpson said such behavior by a fox isn't normal behavior. Taussig agreed.

"Under normal circumstances, foxes are very shy and won't attack," Taussig said.



Williamson said the foxes will be removed if problems arise in the future.

"If she (the mother fox) starts posing a problem, I imagine they'll trap her and move her somewhere else," she said.

However, Taussig said he thinks the foxes will soon take their show on the road.

in and request it, we can get it," he said.

Precautions

Mock said tick control is difficult and requires several precautions:

■ Keep grassy and weedy areas mowed to discourage infestation.

■ Avoid unnecessary trips through tall grass, brush or wooded areas, and restrict pets from these areas. If this can't be avoided, move quickly through tick-infested areas and stay in open areas. Do not sit or lie on the ground.

■ Wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants to make it difficult for ticks to come into contact with bare skin.

■ Apply repellents to outer clothing and unprotected areas, such as wrists and hands. The area from the ankles to the knees is also very susceptible to ticks.

The most widely used repellent is called Deet, Mock said. However, in some cases people have been known to become severely ill from allergic reactions to Deet.

"If people have used repellent in the past, it is probably all right, but if using it for the first time, be alert, especially for the first couple of hours," he said.
